TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

NEW YEAR SONG

Father divine, whose mighty hand
  Upholds yon rolling spheres,
Who numb'rest to thine erring child
  The sweetly fleeting years;

Through all the chequered past thou'st been
  My kind preserver near,—
And, spared thy goodness to confess,
  I greet another year.

Oh! darkly do the cloud-mists hide
  The future from my gaze;
But thou who see'st eternal years,
  Knowest all my coming days.

And oh, with gladly thankful heart
  For mercies of the past,
I all my ways to thee commit,
  In calm and happy trust.

But let thy hand mark all my steps,
  Thy blessing still attend,
And all I ask is gained, if soon
  With thee life's journey end.

Practical Christianity.

(Concluded.)

A proper contemplation of God's goodness leads us to inquire into the cause of this manifestation of benevolence.

It is in prosecuting this inquiry that we discover his moral excellencies, which lie at the basis of this infinite love. The language of David is to the point. Thus,—

"When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers: the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands: thou hast put all things under his feet; all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea. "O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth."

It is while we discover the perfections of Jehovah, that the soul is drawn nearer and nearer to God as an object of admiration, approval and delight. We are led to admire him on account of those excellencies that he possesses; as, his power, benevolence, justice, holiness, wisdom, &c.

We approve of the exercise of that infinite power by which God created the world: that ability by which he has, and ever will govern the universe; and that faculty by which he works in nature, leading the mind from nature's workings up to "Nature's God."

Of his benevolence in all his workings of infinite love toward the human family; but more especially in the gift of Jesus Christ, the greatest boon that heaven ever lavished on the human race.

Of this [illegible] ... mitted by men; that, to the distribution of rewards in virtue of his promise, regardless of any merit in the creature. The Christian not only approves of this perfection as seen developed in the past, but while contemplating it in all the workings of God's economy in the future. However dark things may appear to the human mind, he silences the first disposition that may manifest itself in the heart to find fault, or to censure the Almighty, by replying, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

We approve of his holiness. He is said to be "glorious in holiness." Moses spoke of this perfection. Thus, "He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." It is on account of this as one of his natural excellences that God requires us to be holy as he is holy. The influences of the Spirit incline us to be holy.

Of his wisdom, as it appears in all his works, a proper view of which led David to exclaim—"O Lord, how manifold are thy works: in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches! The gospel is called the "manifold wisdom of God."

We delight in God, while we behold the exercise of all these perfections, bearing directly or indirectly on our final salvation. His benevolence prompted him to devise the plan, his wisdom arranged it, his holiness guaranties its integrity, his justice insures an equal distribution of right, and his power is an eternal pledge that the whole shall be faithfully executed. Are not these considerations calculated to excite this holy affection? Should we not delight in the Lord, knowing that he will give us the desire of our hearts?

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" is the second command, and is said to be like to the first. It resembles the first in its antiquity, its durability and nature. Ever since men were created, it has been their duty to love each other, and hence this precept is coeval with the former. Its durability is set forth by the apostle when he declares that "Charity never faileth." Its nature is divine, is god-like. "God is love;" he that "dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." The remark of Christ that the precept to "love one another" was a new command, could not have reference to its origin, but the degree to which it was to be exhibited; hence the qualifying phrase, "As I have loved you." None had ever loved as he did. The love of virtue was a distinguished trait in his character. The more virtue he discovered in a person, the more he loved that person. It was not a question, "Does he belong to our church?" "Is he a "Baptist," "Methodist," "Adventist?" No such selfish principle ever entered his creed. Wherever he saw the Christian character he recognized it. His love was disinterested, constant, universal and undying. Whence the command, "Love one another as I have loved you." Love on the same principle, and for the same reason. This affection is of divine origin; it is "shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost." It can only be manifested by those who have the Spirit. It is not a natural element of the human heart; it does not live in an unrenewed nature: it dwells in that person whose affections have been changed, whose heart has been sanctified. Natural affection can exist between unrenewed hearts, but Christian affection can only be reciprocated by Christians. The first enkindlings of this holy principle should be cultivated, that by this means it may increase to a flame. An improvement of the little is the sure way of obtaining more.

We may conclude from the frequent allusions to this precept in the New Testament, that it is one of the most important. A few instances may be noticed. "These things I command you that ye love one another;" "A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another;" "By love serve one another;" "For ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another;" "Let brotherly love continue;" "Love the brotherhood;" "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God; and every one that loveth, is born of God, and knoweth God."

We learn the character of this love. Thus, "Love one another as I have loved you;" "Let love be WITHOUT dissimulation;" "Be kindly affectioned one to another with BROTHERLY love;" "UNFEIGNED love of the brethren." The results of exhibiting this love are seen. Thus, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another;" "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law;" "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren;" "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us." God's people are represented as "abounding in love," "rooted and grounded in it," "speaking the truth in love;" "forbearing one another in love;" "walking in love," "hearts knit together in love," and as "dwelling" and "abiding in love." This principle is to be seen in every day life; it is to be carried into every department of society. Its importance, as we have remarked, is seen in the frequent allusions to it in the New Testament. This we shall discover more fully as we proceed.

In living out the precepts of the New Testament, we are to distinguish between those which apply to the primitive Church, and those, which by reason of their nature, are applicable to every successive age of this dispensation. Certain commands were given to the disciples, which were never designed to be perpetuated in the Christian Church. There is a difference between the precepts attending the first commission, and those given subsequently. At first, they were told to take neither purse nor scrip; afterward, they were told to take both. In the former instance they were prohibited from going into the way of the Gentiles, in the latter they were sent into all the world. Once, Christ washed his disciple's feet, and commanded them to do likewise; but this precept, by almost universal consent, is believed to refer exclusively to the apostolic age. There are others that may be placed in the same category. But not so with those referred to above, viz: loving God and our neighbor. These commands embrace all others that are binding, and, as such, are necessary to salvation. They may be regarded, as indeed they are represented to be, a summary of the law and the prophets. No person can exemplify these precepts without becoming christianized. They are the life and soul of Christianity. All our pretensions to religion, if destitute of this principle of love are but a vain show. "We may speak with the tongues of men and angels," yet, if we have it not, we are as "sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." We may have the "gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge;" "we may have all faith;" "we may give our goods to feed the poor," "and our bodies to be burned," but without this we are nothing.

Charity is the habit of loving God with all the heart. It is not merely a benevolent idea, but a principle, dwelling in the heart, prompting to acts of mercy and kindness. It manifests itself in humility of soul, contrition of spirit, and in a virtuous attachment to all that is good. It is the basis of Christian character, which is not made up of one act—whether good or bad—but of the acts of every day life. We are not to judge of man's character by one act, but by his general carriage. If it were right to judge of character in this way, Peter might have been denounced as a hypocrite when he denied his master. The best of men have done wrong at times, indeed, it would be strange if they did not, when "to err is human." We are to distinguish between moral and Christian character, the former, referring to a person who lives up to the letter of the law without any change of heart; the latter to one truly converted, who, as a consequence, brings forth the fruit of the Spirit. Some of the characteristics reckoned as the fruit of the Spirit, may be possessed by the natural man; but he can never manifest Christian affection, nor Christian patience. He may act stoically, and to a superficial observer be regarded as a very patient man; but when rightly understood, his patience turns out to be a mechanical bravery, a "constitutional fortitude," a "daring stoutness of spirit;" the mere result of fatalism, philosophy and pride. The patience brought to view in the Scriptures is a divine grace, resulting from the operation of the Spirit and faith on one hand, and obediential submission to the will of God on the other.

This being its true character, it belongs exclusively to practical Christianity. It is one of those rare virtues which distinguish the Christian from the mere sectarian. It is developed, principally, under disagreeable circumstances; yet, not wholly, as it is needed in prosperity as well as in adversity. When fully developed, it becomes a habit of the soul, enters into the temper, and produces that tranquillity of mind which results from conscious rectitude. Its exercise is required in almost every circumstance of life, in all our relations with each other as social beings. Our reputation, opinions, habits, connections, may be assailed, may be misrepresented. How often this is the case. Retaliation strives for the mastery on one hand, while patience is called into requisition on the other. There is no grace needed more than patience. We need it at home and abroad, in all our relations with friend and foe. We hear the voice of inspiration whispering in our ear continually, "In your patience possess your souls;" "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect, entire, wanting nothing." Affliction is calculated to call patience into requisition. Christianity requires that we should be tried. The trial of faith worketh patience, and serves to perfect us in the divine life. That man who is destitute of this grace, if he profess Christianity, is in a pitiful condition. "He that hath no rule over his own spirit, is like a city that is broken down, and without walls," exposed to the [illegible] of man and beast. "He that is slow to anger is of great understanding." Christ manifested patience to a wonderful degree. If ever there was a case that would justify retaliation, it was in his case. He had done everything for the Jews that could be done, and they in return refused to believe in him or his doctrine. They defamed his character, and at last were instrumental in nailing him to the tree; while he in his last expiring agony cries, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!" What an example of patience! This was practical Christianity exhibited in its great Founder. Christ did not simply teach; he practiced, he exemplified every principle of the gospel. He tested the practicability of his own system before he submitted it to the consideration of the world. He reduced every principle to practice before he enjoined them upon others. He did not attempt to drive people to the practice of virtue; he stepped into the van, and meekly invited them to follow. No coercion must be used, the mind must be left free to act; the language of inspiration is, "Choose you this day whom you will serve."

Religion is a rational affair, it is easy to obtain. It manifests itself in love to God and man, to friend and foe. It includes both beneficence and benevolence; this, being the desire, that, the practice of doing good. It manifests itself in endeavoring to promote the interests of all mankind and hence is entirely free from selfishness. It is not a one-eyed affair, looking to the interests of a clique or party, but its universal benevolence is filled with sympathy and love to all mankind. It seeks to diffuse its spirit throughout the world, transforming, by its influence, the mind of man, and bringing everything into subjection to Christ; thus showing its divine origin, its God-like character. It gives the "promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Such is practical Christianity, and such is the Christianity of the Bible.

Meat in Due Season.

What is the kind of food the church needs at this time? We know it has been surfeited with various kinds of dishes for years past, and it is to be feared without enough of the seasoning of grace in the heart. We know that in the human system, without considerable exertion and a proportionate aliment, it soon becomes dyspeptic. And so it is in spiritual things. A christian or a church who is not daily hungering and thirsting after righteousness, must be in a lukewarm or backslidden state and in danger of losing their relish for deep spirituality. It appears to me that what the church most need at the present time is action. A man in a cold winter's day will freeze to death without constant exercise; and a christian without exercise unto godliness, will soon become cold and stupid. And when you ask him how religion prospers in his soul, he has to exclaim, "My leanness, my leanness!" If we want to enjoy much of the fruits of righteousness, let us be active in behalf of others, and we shall not be troubled with barrenness. He that watereth shall be watered also himself. "The liberal soul shall be made fat." "Give, and it shall be given to you, good measure."

The New Year.

"Our life as a dream, our time as a stream
  Glides swiftly away,
And the fugitive moment refuses to stay.
The arrow is flown, the moment is gone,
  The millennial year
Rushes on to our view, and eternity's here."

The hours which witness the passing away of the old year, and the entering upon the new, are peculiarly calculated to awaken the most serious reflection, and call forth heartfelt gratitude for the long-suffering Creator and Preserver of our lives. Through the joys and sorrows, the toils and cares, the trials, dangers and temptations of another year we are come. We look back upon the fruitless resolves and neglected duties, upon the errors and wrongs, and unfaithfulness that has marked the past, and wondering why we have not been cut down as cumberers of the ground, sing with the poet,

"When justice bared the sword,
  To cut the fig-tree down,
The pity of our Lord
  Cries, 'let it still alone;'
The Father, mild, inclines his ear,
  And spares us yet another year."

How many who started with us anew on the journey of life, one year ago, in whose bosoms the life-pulses beat strongly as in our own, with buoyant hearts and bright hopes, have fallen by the way. The festive hall is lighted to-night; the young, the careless, and the gay are there, but the beaming eye and the youthful brow that have gone down to the Death-king's dark domain, are missing from their number. The home-circle gathers around the hearth-stone, but the absent one returns no more. We come to the prayer-room and miss the greeting smile that has passed away, and the voice that was wont to mingle with ours in ascending prayer and praise. Companions of our pilgrimage—they have fallen by our side; the autumn leaves have withered on their graves, and the falling snow-flakes weave a cold white shroud over the hard, bare earth that covers them.

Yet we are living, to-day, to praise the Lord! But oh! who shall unveil the future, and reveal to us the coming year? Will it lay us, too, beside the sleeping dead, or sound the Archangel's trump in our ears? Will it bring us to the "White Throne" and the Judge's right hand, or flit away and leave us with the wicked and slothful to perish?

Sinner! you too are spared. Broken vows, unheeded warnings—slighted invitations are recorded against you; and, even now, may your feet be treading the brink of ruin; another step—and mercy calls no more. Be entreated to improve the present hour in securing your eternal interests, and let this new year witness the recording of your name in the Book of Life.

Brother, Sister! come, let us "all in solemn covenant join ourselves to Christ the Lord." O God, our Father! through Jesus Christ our Saviour, we [illegible] ... implore thy pardon. We yield ourselves—our all into thine hands, and promise, through thine aid, obedience to all thy commands. We beseech thee enable us through the coming months to live more to thy glory than we have ever done, to be more earnest and active, more humble and self-denying, more patient and gentle, growing in grace and knowledge. Let us, O Lord, be thine in life and in death, and be gathered with the faithful into thine everlasting kingdom at the last day. Amen.

Passing Away.

Gathering its shroud about its hoary form, another year steps down into the dark and gloomy abyss of the solemn Past. How joyfully we hailed its coming! The very face of the snowy earth seemed to beam that morning when the year that is now dying was born. How we watched it developing its life and longed for the time when the prime of its existence should come in the loveliness of spring and summer, the flowers, the verdant fields, the green woodlands, the pleasant parks, and many joyous and sweetly musical birds. We longed for these pleasant features of the year, I say. Others longed for them, too. And where, dear reader, are they who longed with you and I for spring, or summer, or autumn? Ask the tomb,—will it not tell thee where many a loved one has gone this year? Ask the grave,—will it not bodingly reply? Ask death,—will it not answer,—"I was hungry, I was greedy, and took them for my prey?" Alas! the December wind-voice sounds very dirge-like, very solemn, very full of gloom, as though it bore the dying sighs of thousands upon its airy wings, and we start lest it throw all those sighs upon our heart and crush it with their darksome heaviness.

Passing away! Youth, beauty, loveliness; blooming in health to-day, to-morrow smitten with disease; rejoicing in life to-day, to-morrow sleeping coldly in death; such is, such has been, such will be the fate of earth's children till the conqueror of death and decay shall take the power so long usurped and reign in righteousness; then "earth shall bloom again;" then throughout an eternal year there shall be no vestige of decay, no signs of disease, no knowledge of mortality; earth's flowers will have an eternal summer-time; earth's loveliness, purified, developed, and fashioned after the Almighty's renovating hand, will ne'er fade again. That home of the good, that inheritance of the righteous, that redeemed earth, that material habitation, will never pass away. Heaven grant that you and I may not be excluded from that glorious Kingdom.

Moses.

"And he said, I beseech thee show me thy glory."

Upon Sinai's top the prophet stands enveloped in a cloud—the curtain of the Holy One. And there full forty days and nights he listened to the teachings of his Lord. There, one by one, he saw the shadows bright of things divine. From veil to veil the vision led through gems and gold a dazzling maze; still, that gorgeous scene which shed forth such unearthly rays, could not appease his craving mind. He faithfully obeys his Instructor, and all is done according to the pattern. He finally enters the magnificent structure which he had fitted up for the reception of his Heavenly Friend, and there he again converses with the closest intimacy, whilst a spark of that first deathless fire bears him up above the aspiration of every other creature, and he vehemently cries, "I beseech thee show me thy glory!" He longed to behold the glorious countenance of Him whose voice had [illegible] chosen him to be their Friend, has not felt at times a yearning desire to behold the transcendent loveliness of his face, and listen to the audible answers of his mouth; that he may no longer be constrained to walk by faith, or be left to doubt his approving smiles. Weary one! art thou discouraged, who hast waited long to gain one look of Him whom thy soul loveth, and hast with eagerness been crying, Come, Come, Lord Jesus? Nerve thyself to wait a little longer; we shall see him bye and bye, and with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and Moses, too, sit down in his Kingdom and forever feast our eyes on those beauties that no mortal eye hath ever seen. "For God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect."

Follow Jesus.

"Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Mark 8 : 34.

How much meaning there is in these few words, which Jesus spake, yet how little they are regarded as meaning just what they say. I am glad that there are a few that do believe that he means just what he says and try to live as he has commanded. There are still a few that do deny themselves and take up their cross and follow Jesus where he may lead; yet, on the contrary, how many, very many follow on in their wicked and sinful ways, professing to be the followers of Jesus. O my friends, do you follow Jesus? do you walk in the path that he walked in? Jesus did the will of his Father. Do you do it? Jesus went about doing good. Are you doing the same? Jesus taught his disciples to be humble. Are you humble? He taught them, what! to "lay up something for a rainy day?" No. He said, "Take no thought of your life what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body what ye shall put on." Matt. 6 : 25. Now are you obeying, or are you trying to "heap treasure together for the last days?" Jas. 5 : 3. O, seek to search your own selves and see if you are following Jesus. See if you follow Jesus when you are clad with "costly array" and sail through the streets and even to the house of God with your silks, satins, jewelry, &c. Do you do this to the glory of God? O ye daughters of Zion, look to yourselves! Jesus commands you to "be clothed with humility." Do you obey? You read that you are not to wear "gold" and "costly array." O then, why do you do it? Will you disobey your Father in heaven for the sake of pleasing some friend on earth? O flee such feelings from the daughters of Zion. Hear what Jesus says; "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." Will you continue to disobey and to do what you are commanded not to do, and to love some friend more than Jesus? O do not disobey longer! Use that "jewelry" and that "costly array" to the glory of God, and follow Jesus, and overcome the things of this world, and you "shall inherit all things." Deny yourself and take up your cross and follow Jesus. Read Isa. 3, and see what the daughters of Zion will do in the last days, and see if you are fulfilling that portion of the word of God. If you are, "Humble yourself under the mighty hand of God that he may exalt you in due time."

Follow Jesus, and he will lead you "in through the gates into the city"—the "New Jerusalem." Look back at the time when you started to follow Jesus and see how you felt then. You could then sing, and feel it too—

"Jesus, I my cross have taken,
All to leave and follow thee;
All things else I have forsaken,
Thou from hence my all shalt be."

Come, make up your mind to follow Jesus, and never again have any of the Devil's signs hanging about you, and when Jesus shall come in the clouds of heaven you will not be ashamed to stand before him; and you will hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Dr. Watts' Dying Testimony.—"It is the plain promises of the Gospel that are my support, and I bless God they are plain promises, that do not require much labor and pains to understand them. For I can do nothing now but look into my Bible for some promise to support me, and live upon that."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 6, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8 : 4.

NUMBER SEVEN.

In our last, we examined the theological definition of sheol and hades, and found it made "strange sense" when applied to the Scriptures; even making out that Jacob was going down to his son Joseph, "to the final and eternal receptacle of all the ungodly and impenitent;" also that Christ was there between his crucifixion and resurrection, and that Job wished to go there. But we found that the Bible declares, that there is no knowledge there, and that the wicked are "silent in the grave," (or sheol.)

As the theological definition of this word makes the Bible teach "monstrous opinions," we will now take another look into the Hebrew lexicon, to get the meaning of sheol, the place where men go at death. Roy defines it to mean "the grave,"—"sepulchre;" and gives as examples, Ps. 86 : 13 and 116 : 3. "For great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell," (sheol)—"The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell (sheol) gat hold upon me." The last definition, given by Roy, makes many dark passages plain. For instance, Ps. 16 : 10 and Acts 2 : 27, where it is said of Christ, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," (sheol) or the grave.

We now assume that sheol, the only word rendered hell in the Old Testament, never refers to the future punishment of the wicked, but always refers to the grave, where the whole man is laid at death. Let us examine some of the strongest passages which are thought to have reference to future punishment. Turn to Ps. 9 : 17. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, (sheol) and all the nations that forget God." We learn from the Bible, that the wicked are to die "the second death," or be buried in sheol, the grave, the second time, and rise no more forever. Says Paul, "The wages of sin is death."

"Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into hell, (sheol—margin, grave,) for wickedness is in their dwellings and among them." Ps. 55 : 15. In Deut. 32 : 22, we read, "A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn into the lowest hell, (sheol) and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." Some have thought "the lowest hell" was where the most wicked people go; but we think the Scriptures warrant no such idea. We know that some are buried deep in the earth, and others near the surface; and a fire which shall "set on fire the foundations of the mountains," must, we think, burn to the lowest hell, or grave.

The grave, or sheol, is sometimes personified, as is also death. In Isa. 14 : 9–11, the Lord addresses Babylon, and says,

"Hell (sheol) from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations. And they shall speak and say unto thee, art thou also become as we? art thou become like unto us? Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, (sheol) and the noise of thy viols; the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee."

In this example the dead are represented as being stirred up to talk to Babylon when she comes down among them to have "the worms cover" her in the grave.

We find another similar example in Ezk. 31 : 15–17, where it is said of Pharaoh, at the time he was overthrown in the Red sea,—

"Thus saith the Lord God, in the day when he went down to the grave, (sheol) I caused a mourning. I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed; and I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him. I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell (sheol) with them that descend into the pit; and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth. They also went down into hell (sheol, the grave,) with him, unto them that be slain with the sword; and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen."

There is one more example where the grave is personified, which is found in Ezek. 32 : 21–27.

"The strong among the mighty shall speak to him (Pharaoh) out of the midst of hell (sheol) with them (the Egyptians) that help him; they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword. Asshur is there, and all her company; his graves are about him, all of them slain, fallen by the sword; whose graves are set in the sides of the pit, and her company is round about her grave, all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused terror in the land of the living. There is Elam and all her multitude round about her grave; all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit. They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude; her graves are round about him; all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword: though their terror was caused in the land of the living, yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit; he is put in the midst of them that be slain. There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude; her graves are round about him, (Pharaoh); all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they caused their terror in the land of the living. And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell (sheol) with their weapons of war; and they have laid their swords under their heads; but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living."

Let us review this scripture a few moments. It will be observed that this host were all warriors "slain by the sword," who caused much "terror in the land of the living." The plain inference is, they are now dead in hell, (or sheol.) This inference amounts to positive evidence, when we take the sense of the 27th verse. They "are gone down to hell (sheol) with their weapons of war; and they have laid their swords under their heads; but their iniquities shall be upon their bones." Do men's souls take their weapons of war down to the theological hell of torment, and lay their swords under the heads of their souls? The idea is absurd! What, then, does this scripture mean? Why simply, that when those warriors were buried in hell, (sheol) they buried them with their armor on, and laid their swords under their heads, which is a common practice among many. What is their condition in hell, or sheol—the grave? "There is no . . . knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, (sheol) whither thou goest."

We have now examined all the strong passages in the Old Testament which can be made to teach consciousness and suffering in hell, (sheol) and we leave the reader to form his own conclusion.

Rutland.

Our meetings in Rutland, Vt., have been most deeply interesting and profitable. The spirit of the Lord has rendered special aid, many members of the churches have been quickened, backsliders have repented and been restored to the embrace of their kind Savior, and sinners have been converted, and are rejoicing in the Lord. At the commencement of our meetings, all admitted that the christian religion in this place was in a low state; but to the praise of God we could say, come and see what the Lord hath done for us. Our meetings were held in the Town Hall, a spacious room, and was generally well filled. We had prayer meetings every evening, commencing at 6 o'clock, and preaching at seven. The interest continued to increase from the beginning to the close. We found here, as in every place where we have preached, that the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, was the means of awakening some who were unmoved by every thing else. Professors of religion, who saw these truths, had their love for God greatly increased, and said they could now take delight in reading their Bibles. What once seemed dark and strange, they now saw in clear light, and all harmonious with the character of a holy, merciful, and benevolent being, like our Father in heaven. We are satisfied that the preaching of eternal misery has made more infidels than any other dogma ever presented to the people, and we feel thankful to the Lord, that people begin to see that death—"the wages of sin," does not mean eternal torment. If the truth had been preached, instead of Romish fables, we should probably never have heard of a Universalist; but as it is, we almost wonder that all did not turn Universalists, or infidels. A large number in Rutland have embraced the truth on this subject, including many members of the different churches. Said a very intelligent and amiable lady, who had never made a profession of religion, and who had lost all confidence in the popular preaching of the day,—"If the Bible teaches the destruction of the wicked, I can believe it;" and before we left, she rose for prayers, and expressed a strong desire to be a christian. Others, who had resisted all efforts to bring them to Christ, until people had concluded that nothing could reach them, were struck under conviction on hearing upon this subject, and are now resolved to be the disciples of Christ. Such are the fruits in every place, where the subject is fully presented. By the help of the Lord, we feel determined to wage a perpetual war against the doctrine of eternal misery, for we are satisfied that man never advocated a dogma more dishonoring to God, and better calculated to make his creatures hate him, and turn Universalists and infidels.

Monday evening, Dec. 21st, we had a discussion with Col. F. Rupium.

Subject.—"Resolved, that the spirits that have left the body, are permitted to communicate with persons living in the body in this world, and that this doctrine is sanctioned by the Bible."

About one thousand people were present and listened to the arguments pro. and con. for about three hours, which evidently resulted in good to the cause of truth. We endeavored to show that the Bible sanctions no such doctrine as that taught by Spiritualists, but that it teaches directly the opposite, and that Spiritualism is entirely anti-christian.

Our meetings continued to increase in interest unto the close, on Lord's day, Dec. 27th. Backsliders were reclaimed, sinners converted, and saints made to rejoice in the blessed hope of the gospel. Four were baptized into the death and resurrection of Christ, and received rich blessings from the Lord. Others were ready to obey the Redeemer in this ordinance, but friends thought the weather too cold. In the evening, about forty sat down to the table of the Lord, and enjoyed a heavenly season. A glorious work is in progress in Rutland. To the Lord be all the praise.

Once more we would urge our brethren and sisters in all the churches to labor for the salvation of sinners, and we are satisfied they will see good fruits. If we ever intend to work, now is the time. We have not one moment to lose! Time is short!!

New Year.

We wish all our readers a very happy new year. But in order that it may be so, it is necessary they should present themselves "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God," for none but christians are truly happy. Those who spend its earliest dawn in self-consecration to the Lord, instead of passing the hours in merry scenes of worldly pleasure, are the ones who feel the force of the expression—"Happy new year." Sweet the peace, and rich the joy, that arise in the bosom of him who is dead to this world, and awake to righteousness, being a temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

We never felt more determined, by the help of the Lord, to do all to his glory, than at the present time, nor ever felt a clearer evidence of our acceptance. O praise the Lord for perfect love that casteth out all fear. The christian religion grows more and more lovely, as we become better acquainted with its heavenly principles. It is "the one thing needful." How perfectly adapted to the wants of man; and yet how few know its worth. None can enjoy the kingdom without it, but must perish forever. O Lord, help us to be good.

It is a fit time to form new resolutions, and doubtless many have been made; and let us be firm to keep them. We are truly living in "perilous times," when we need the whole christian armor to meet the adversaries of the Lord. Every possible artifice is employed by man's great enemy to lead us astray. Let us not forget, "That the friendship of the world is enmity with God; whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." Shall we seek after it any more, and thereby lose the friendship of our best friend? Is it kind in us to join with an enemy against the One from whom we receive "every good and perfect gift?" My Father, I pray that I may never be so ungrateful. O keep me from conforming to this world, and help me to walk even as Jesus walked!

To Our Readers.

Dear brethren and sisters, we humbly ask your pardon for all our mistakes during the year just closed; and hope to enjoy an interest in your prayers, that we may be able to please the Lord in all things, and be ready to meet you at the marriage supper of the Lamb, when the King of glory comes.

We feel, more than ever, determined to devote our whole energies to the service of the church of Christ, and persuade sinners to become christians. We shall try, by the help of the Lord, to make our paper such an one as will be read with pleasure and profit by every sincere lover of Jesus and his word. We shall not aim at greatness, but truth and goodness. We shall aim at the heart, rather than the intellect. We wish our readers to feel, when they rise from their reading, as they would at the close of a good prayer meeting, or after an affectionate visit from their dear christian friends.

To all our contributors, we would say, baptize your articles in prayer, and write for no other object but to glorify God. Send us your happy and holy thoughts, express them in as few words, and as pointed and plain as possible;—in short, let every reader do all he can to make the Crisis the best paper in the world,—the one that will most glorify the Author of our salvation. Let us all try to make it so good, that the Lord will delight to own and bless it with the aid of his Holy Spirit, as it flies on its errands of mercy to his dear children, who are sighing for the coming Kingdom.

Tobacco.

MY EXPERIENCE IN THE USE OF TOBACCO.

BY F. H. B.

I was but ten years old when, for the first time, I tasted of tobacco; the quantity was quite small, and did not seem to affect me disagreeably. Its influence was rather pleasant. Meeting with such good success in the first instance, induced me to try it again, and thinking a larger quantity would be productive of more agreeable sensations, I was quite liberal in the end; the quantity being about as large as a big hickory nut. It was the old fashion twist, good and strong. I safely deposited it, and taking a good draught of old cider, commenced champing. It was not long ere I felt to exclaim, with Selkirk, the Scottish sailor, while at Juan Fernandez,

"I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute."

If my visage could have been daguerreotyped, it would, doubtless, have resembled some horned animal, ruminating the cud; or, perhaps the ten-horned nondescript, a practice that must be quite congenial with his otherwise developed habits.

How long I rolled the sweet morsel about in the mouth, I cannot tell; or, whether I was afoot or on horseback, was equally uncertain. It seemed to me that everything above and below began to revolve. Strange, thought I, that people can doubt the truth of the Copernican system, a truth so evident to the senses. The motion of the earth seemed to be eccentrical, so much so, that it struck me in the face, as in the case of the man who drank too freely of ardent spirit. How I felt while I lay on the ground, is only known to those who have experienced the sensation. Nausea, vomiting, vertigo and relaxation of the whole muscular system, was the result. How death-like I felt. Never, thought I, will I taste of it again. It seemed to me I should die. I prayed, but such a prayer! I ejaculated, "O God, forgive, and I will do so no more." It was a hasty speech, uttered to be broken. It was not so much the fear of death, as the awful sensation. It was neither life nor death. It was similar to that death-like feeling often experienced while riding on the water, only worse. The sensation provoked by the use of lobelia is mild when compared with it. It wore off, however, by degrees, and I succeeded in rising from my recumbent position to my feet. How majestically I stood! I trembled like a person in an ague fit. My knees smote together as in the case of Babylon's king. I seated myself, when the following soliloquy took place. "So much for trying to be a gentleman! Quite expensive. Too little profit for the investment. I wonder if everybody has to have such an experience, if so, what simpletons they are. There is nothing about it very inviting, it looks bad, smells bad, tastes bad, and its influence is bad; otherwise, I should not have been rolling and vomiting, and acting like a fool. If this is but the initiation, what will be the degrees? I will never touch it again." So saying, I made my way for the house.

It seemed to me that I felt its deadly power for a month. It not only affected my nerves, but I was conscious of a loss of muscular energy. This sad experience served to deter me from tasting the narcotic for nearly a year; but, finally, I was prevailed on to try it again. I was not quite so liberal in the quantity as before, I had not entirely forgotten the former experiment; it led me to be cautious. This is the only cautious step I ever regretted having taken. If I could have had another "time," it would undoubtedly have cured me, but being cautious, and using little by little, it grew upon me, till finally it became a settled habit. I used it for more than twenty years. At first could only chew; then commenced smoking, which at times I carried to excess. I had an iron constitution, and it did not seem to affect me as it did many others. As the appetite grew upon me, I was conscious of an inkling after something stronger, but did not dream it was provoked by the use of tobacco. To satisfy my growing appetite, I would swallow the saliva. Thus, instead of the deadly nicotine acting on the lining membrane of the mouth, it was carried directly to the stomach, taken up by the absorbents, and conveyed thence into every part of the system. It was on account of swallowing the saliva, that I succeeded in using it without attracting attention. I have been intimate with persons for a great length of time without being detected. Persons in my presence would often receive a good dressing for indulging in the filthy habit, while I would escape. I have often been appealed to as a kind of oracle even while the sweet morsel was in my mouth, if I did not "think it was an awful practice." I have invariably answered in the affirmative. Sometimes I have been requested to talk with some person to see if I could not persuade him to abstain from its use, and this I have done, but not with a very good grace. When reproved for using it myself, which was sometimes the case, I would not allow myself to become ireful. My motto was, keep good natured, laugh it off, and by these means ward off the conviction. If persons reproved me, whom I knew to be great lovers of tea and coffee, I have, at times, indulged in a gentle retort. For though it was no excuse for me to continue in the indulgence of a bad habit because others did, yet, it was some little relief for me to throw it in their teeth, for, thought I, "Why should Satan rebuke sin?" To such I would say, "Pluck the beam out of thine own eye, then you will see clearly to remove the mote from your brother's eye." I was ready always to meet this class of persons, who, like the guide-post, were willing to point to the right course, while themselves remained stationary. I often said that when I reformed, I should abstain from the whole. I should adopt a course of total abstinence.

The Power of Love.

Bro. Grant:—I found the following incident recorded in a monthly periodical, and as it forcibly illustrates the power of love, I will copy it for your paper.

M. D. W.

"A woman had a deadly hatred against a fellow-creature. Now there lived near her a child who was not polluted with this world's wickedness. Mortal man had taught that child only a simple prayer, but the angels talked to her soul, and the Lord's light shone clearly there. Now, that woman once left her home, burning with jealousy, and she stumbled and fell just where that little child lived. The woman was angry and spoke bad words, when the child sweetly asked, "Has she been hurt?" Now the child was not afraid, but looked her in the face and said, "Never mind! God will cure you, and I will ask him." So she put up her little hands to the Lord, and said her little prayer. The tears of the woman started; the child was asking the Lord to bless her, and the Lord was looking at her through the child! She could not bear it; she screamed in agony. And then the child rose up, and the woman caught her and said, "Teach me to pray." The woman forgot her hatred—her fellow-sinner, everything but that child. Her look was on her when the child said, "Do you love?" "Me love? Me? Oh! who can I love?" Then said the child in a whisper, "Love God who loves you, and me, and all the world." "Yes," said the woman, "he loves you, but he cannot love me." Then said the child of love, "You do not know our God, then, for he is love." Now what that woman felt, I do not know; but she fell on her knees, and the power of love impressed her; and she let the child, the little child, lead her home, feeling an angel had been sent to keep her from great sin, and to tell her God was love, and loved her. Now, this woman became transformed, not by fear, but by the power of love in a little child."

Would that every one recognized the great truth, that "God is love," as did this little child! Never did I so clearly apprehend it, as of late. I view him not as an angry God ready to pour the vials of wrath upon the poor sinner; but I view him as presented before me in the character of Jesus Christ, and respond with implicit confidence to the declaration of the inspired apostle, "God is LOVE!" God so loved the world, that he sent his only begotten son "to die for its redemption. Yes, "when we were yet sinners," he gave the costliest gift for our ransom that heaven could bestow! Christ came and manifested that love so great, so incomprehensi-chosen him to be their Friend, has not felt at times a yearning desire to behold the transcendent loveliness of his face, and listen to the audible answer of his mouth; that he may no longer be constrained to walk by faith, or be left to doubt his approving smiles. Weary one! art thou discouraged, who hast waited long to gain one look of Him whom thy soul loveth, and hast with eagerness been crying, Come, Come, Lord Jesus? Nerve thyself to wait a little longer; we shall see him bye and bye, and with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and Moses, too, sit down in his Kingdom and forever feast our eyes on those beauties that no mortal eye hath ever seen. "For God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect."

For the Crisis.

Follow Jesus.

"Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Mark 8: 34.

How much meaning there is in these few words, which Jesus spake, yet how little they are regarded as meaning just what they say. I am glad that there are a few that do believe that he means just what he says and try to live as he has commanded. There are still a few that do deny themselves and take up their cross and follow Jesus where he may lead; yet, on the contrary, how many, very many follow on in their wicked and sinful ways, professing to be the followers of Jesus. O my friends, do you follow Jesus? do you walk in the path that he walked in? Jesus did the will of his Father. Do you do it? Jesus went about doing good. Are you doing the same? Jesus taught his disciples to be humble. Are you humble? He taught them, what! to "lay up something for a rainy day?" No. He said, "Take no thought of your life what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body what ye shall put on." Matt. 6: 25. Now are you obeying, or are you trying to "heap treasure together for the last days?" Jas. 5: 3. O, seek to search your own selves and see if you are following Jesus. See if you follow Jesus when you are clad with "costly array" and sail through the streets and even to the house of God with your silks, satins, jewelry, &c. Do you do this to the glory of God? O ye daughters of Zion, look to yourselves! Jesus commands you to "be clothed with humility." Do you obey? You read that you are not to wear "gold" and "costly array." O then, why do you do it? Will you disobey your Father in heaven for the sake of pleasing some friend on earth? O flee such feelings from the daughters of Zion. Hear what Jesus says; "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." Will you continue to disobey and to do what you are commanded not to do, and to love some friend more than Jesus? O do not disobey longer! Use that "jewelry" and that "costly array" to the glory of God, and follow Jesus, and overcome the things of this world, and you "shall inherit all things." Deny yourself and take up your cross and follow Jesus. Read Isa. 3, and see what the daughters of Zion will do in the last days, and see if you are fulfilling that portion of the word of God. If you are, "Humble yourself under the mighty hand of God that he may exalt you in due time."

Follow Jesus, and he will lead you "in through the gates into the city"—the "New Jerusalem." Look back at the time when you started to follow Jesus and see how you felt then. You could then sing, and feel it too:

"Jesus, I my cross have taken,
All to leave and follow thee;
All things else I have forsaken,
Thou from hence my all shalt be."

Come, make up your mind to follow Jesus, and never again have any of the Devil's signs hanging about you, and when Jesus shall come in the clouds of heaven you will not be ashamed to stand before him, and you will hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The World's Crisis.
BOSTON, JANUARY 6, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER SEVEN.

In our last, we examined the theological definition of sheol and hades, and found it made "strange sense" when applied to the Scriptures; even making out that Jacob was going down to his son Joseph, "to the final and eternal receptacle of all the ungodly and impenitent;" also that Christ was there between his crucifixion and resurrection, and that Job wished to go there. But we found that the Bible declares, that there is no knowledge there, and that the wicked are "silent in the grave," (or sheol.)

As the theological definition of this word makes the Bible teach "monstrous opinions," we will now take another look into the Hebrew lexicon, to get the meaning of sheol, the place where men go at death. Roy defines it to mean "the grave,"—"sepulchre;" and gives as examples, Ps. 86: 13 and 116: 3. "For great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell," (sheol)—"The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell (sheol) gat hold upon me." The last definition, given by Roy, makes many dark passages plain. For instance, Ps. 16: 10 and Acts 2: 27, where it is said of Christ, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," (sheol) or the grave.

We now assume that sheol, the only word rendered hell in the Old Testament, never refers to the future punishment of the wicked, but always refers to the grave, where the whole man is laid at death. Let us examine some of the strongest passages which are thought to have reference to future punishment. Turn to Ps. 9: 17. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, (sheol) and all the nations that forget God." We learn from the Bible, that the wicked are to die "the second death," or be buried in sheol, the grave, the second time, and rise no more forever. Says Paul, "The wages of sin is death."

"Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into hell, (sheol—margin, grave,) for wickedness is in their dwellings and among them." Ps. 55: 15. In Deut. 32: 22, we read, "A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn into the lowest hell, (sheol) and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." Some have thought "the lowest hell" was where the most wicked people go; but we think the Scriptures warrant no such idea. We know that some are buried deep in the earth, and others near the surface; and a fire which shall "set on fire the foundations of the mountains," must, we think, burn to the lowest hell, or grave.

The grave, or sheol, is sometimes personified, as is also death. In Isa. 14: 9–11, the Lord addresses Babylon, and says,

"Hell (sheol) from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations. And they shall speak and say unto thee, art thou also become as we? art thou become like unto us? Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, (sheol) and the noise of thy viols; the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee."

In this example the dead are represented as being stirred up to talk to Babylon when she comes down among them to have "the worms cover" her in the grave.

We find another similar example in Ezk. 31: 15–17, where it is said of Pharaoh, at the time he was overthrown in the Red sea,—

"Thus saith the Lord God, in the day when he went down to the grave, (sheol) I caused a mourning. I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed; and I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him. I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell (sheol) with them that descend into the pit; and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth. They also went down into hell (sheol, the grave,) with him, unto them that be slain with the sword; and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen."

There is one more example where the grave is personified, which is found in Ezek. 32: 21–27.

"The strong among the mighty shall speak to him (Pharaoh) out of the midst of hell (sheol) with them (the Egyptians) that help him; they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword. Asshur is there and all her company; his graves are about him, all of them slain, fallen by the sword; whose graves are set in the sides of the pit and her company is round about her grave, all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused terror in the land of the living. There is Elam and all her multitude round about her grave; all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit. They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude; her graves are round about him; all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword: though their terror was caused in the land of the living, yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit; he is put in the midst of them that be slain. There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude; her graves are round about him, (Pharaoh); all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they caused their terror in the land of the living. And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell (sheol) with their weapons of war; and they have laid their swords under their heads; but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living."

Let us review this scripture a few moments. It will be observed that this host were all warriors "slain by the sword," who caused much "terror in the land of the living." The plain inference is, they are now dead in hell, (or sheol.) This inference amounts to positive evidence, when we take the sense of the 27th verse. They "are gone down to hell (sheol) with their weapons of war; and they have laid their swords under their heads; but their iniquities shall be upon their bones." Do men's souls take their weapons of war down to the theological hell of torment, and lay their swords under the heads of their souls? The idea is absurd! What, then, does this scripture mean? Why simply, that when those warriors were buried in hell, (sheol) they buried them with their armor on, and laid their swords under their heads, which is a common practice among many. What is their condition in hell, or sheol—the grave? "There is no . . . knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, (sheol) whither thou goest."

We have now examined all the strong passages in the Old Testament which can be made to teach consciousness and suffering in hell, (sheol) and we leave the reader to form his own conclusion.

Rutland.

Our meetings in Rutland, Vt., have been most deeply interesting and profitable. The spirit of the Lord has rendered special aid, many members of the churches have been quickened, backsliders have repented and been restored to the embrace of their kind Savior, and sinners have been converted, and are rejoicing in the Lord. At the commencement of our meetings, all admitted that the christian religion in this place was in a low state; but to the praise of God we could say, come and see what the Lord hath done for us. Our meetings were held in the Town Hall, a spacious room, and was generally well filled. We had prayer meetings every evening, commencing at 6 o'clock, and preaching at seven. The interest continued to increase from the beginning to the close. We found here, as in every place where we have preached, that the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, was the means of awakening some who were unmoved by every thing else. Professors of religion, who saw these truths, had their love for God greatly increased, and said they could now take delight in reading their Bibles. What once seemed dark and strange, they now saw in clear light, and all harmonious with the character of a holy, merciful, and benevolent being, like our Father in heaven. We are satisfied that the preaching of eternal misery has made more infidels than any other dogma ever presented to the people, and we feel thankful to the Lord, that people begin to see that death—"the wages of sin," does not mean eternal torment. If the truth had been preached, instead of Romish fables, we should probably never have heard of a Universalist; but as it is, we almost wonder that all did not turn Universalists, or infidels. A large number in Rutland have embraced the truth on this subject, including many members of the different churches. Said a very intelligent and amiable lady, who had never made a profession of religion, and who had lost all confidence in the popular preaching of the day,—"If the Bible teaches the destruction of the wicked, I can believe it;" and before we left, she rose for prayers, and expressed a strong desire to be a christian. Others, who had resisted all efforts to bring them to Christ, until people had concluded that nothing could reach them, were struck under conviction on hearing upon this subject, and are now resolved to be the disciples of Christ. Such are the fruits in every place, where the subject is fully presented. By the help of the Lord, we feel determined to wage a perpetual war against the doctrine of eternal misery, for we are satisfied that man never advocated a dogma more dishonoring to God, and better calculated to make his creatures hate him, and turn Universalists and infidels.

Monday evening, Dec. 21st, we had a discussion with Col. F. Rupium.

Subject.—"Resolved, that the spirits that have left the body, are permitted to communicate with persons living in the body in this world, and that this doctrine is sanctioned by the Bible."

About one thousand people were present and listened to the arguments pro. and con. for about three hours, which evidently resulted in good to the cause of truth. We endeavored to show that the Bible sanctions no such doctrine as that taught by Spiritualists, but that it teaches directly the opposite, and that Spiritualism is entirely anti-christian.

Our meetings continued to increase in interest unto the close, on Lord's day, Dec. 27th. Backsliders were reclaimed, sinners converted, and saints made to rejoice in the blessed hope of the gospel. Four were baptized into the death and resurrection of Christ, and received rich blessings from the Lord. Others were ready to obey the Redeemer in this ordinance, but friends thought the weather too cold. In the evening, about forty sat down to the table of the Lord, and enjoyed a heavenly season. A glorious work is in progress in Rutland. To the Lord be all the praise.

Once more we would urge our brethren and sisters in all the churches to labor for the salvation of sinners, and we are satisfied they will see good fruits. If we ever intend to work, now is the time. We have not one moment to lose! Time is short!!

New Year.

We wish all our readers a very happy new year. But in order that it may be so, it is necessary they should present themselves "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God," for none but christians are truly happy. Those who spend its earliest dawn in self-consecration to the Lord, instead of passing the hours in merry scenes of worldly pleasure, are the ones who feel the force of the expression—"Happy new year." Sweet the peace, and rich the joy, that arise in the bosom of him who is dead to this world, and awake to righteousness, being a temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

We never felt more determined, by the help of the Lord, to do all to his glory, than at the present time, nor ever felt a clearer evidence of our acceptance. O praise the Lord for perfect love that casteth out all fear. The christian religion grows more and more lovely, as we become better acquainted with its heavenly principles. It is "the one thing needful." How perfectly adapted to the wants of man; and yet how few know its worth. None can enjoy the kingdom without it, but must perish forever. O Lord, help us to be good.

It is a fit time to form new resolutions, and doubtless many have been made; and let us be firm to keep them. We are truly living in "perilous times," when we need the whole christian armor to meet the adversaries of the Lord. Every possible artifice is employed by man's great enemy to lead us astray. Let us not forget, "That the friendship of the world is enmity with God; whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." Shall we seek after it any more, and thereby lose the friendship of our best friend? Is it kind in us to join with an enemy against the One from whom we receive "every good and perfect gift?" My Father, I pray that I may never be so ungrateful. O keep me from conforming to this world, and help me to walk even as Jesus walked!

To Our Readers.

Dear brethren and sisters, we humbly ask your pardon for all our mistakes during the year just closed; and hope to enjoy an interest in your prayers, that we may be able to please the Lord in all things, and be ready to meet you at the marriage supper of the Lamb, when the King of glory comes.

We feel, more than ever, determined to devote our whole energies to the service of the church of Christ, and persuade sinners to become christians. We shall try, by the help of the Lord, to make our paper such an one as will be read with pleasure and profit by every sincere lover of Jesus and his word. We shall not aim at greatness, but truth and goodness. We shall aim at the heart, rather than the intellect. We wish our readers to feel, when they rise from their reading, as they would at the close of a good prayer meeting, or after an affectionate visit from their dear christian friends.

To all our contributors, we would say, baptize your articles in prayer, and write for no other object but to glorify God. Send us your happy and holy thoughts, express them in as few words, and as pointed and plain as possible;—in short, let every reader do all he can to make the Crisis the best paper in the world,—the one that will most glorify the Author of our salvation. Let us all try to make it so good, that the Lord will delight to own and bless it with the aid of his Holy Spirit, as it flies on its errands of mercy to his dear children, who are sighing for the coming Kingdom.

Tobacco.

MY EXPERIENCE IN THE USE OF TOBACCO.

BY F. H. B.

I was but ten years old when, for the first time, I tasted of tobacco; the quantity was quite small, and did not seem to affect me disagreeably. Its influence was rather pleasant. Meeting with such good success in the first instance, induced me to try it again, and thinking a larger quantity would be productive of more agreeable sensations, I was quite liberal in the end; the quantity being about as large as a big hickory nut. It was the old fashion twist, good and strong. I safely deposited it, and taking a good draught of old cider, commenced champing. It was not long ere I felt to exclaim, with Selkirk, the Scottish sailor, while at Juan Fernandez,

"I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute."

If my visage could have been daguerreotyped, it would, doubtless, have resembled some horned animal, ruminating the cud; or, perhaps the ten-horned nondescript, a practice that must be quite congenial with his otherwise developed habits.

How long I rolled the sweet morsel about in the mouth, I cannot tell; or, whether I was afoot or on horseback, was equally uncertain. It seemed to me that everything above and below began to revolve. Strange, thought I, that people can doubt the truth of the Copernican system, a truth so evident to the senses. The motion of the earth seemed to be eccentrical, so much so, that it struck me in the face, as in the case of the man who drank too freely of ardent spirit. How I felt while I lay on the ground, is only known to those who have experienced the sensation. Nausea, vomiting, vertigo and relaxation of the whole muscular system, was the result. How death-like I felt. Never, thought I, will I taste of it again. It seemed to me I should die. I prayed, but such a prayer! I ejaculated, "O God, forgive, and I will do so no more." It was a hasty speech, uttered to be broken. It was not so much the fear of death, as the awful sensation. It was neither life nor death. It was similar to that death-like feeling often experienced while riding on the water, only worse. The sensation provoked by the use of lobelia is mild when compared with it. It wore off, however, by degrees, and I succeeded in rising from my recumbent position to my feet. How majestically I stood! I trembled like a person in an ague fit. My knees smote together as in the case of Babylon's king. I seated myself, when the following soliloquy took place. "So much for trying to be a gentleman! Quite expensive. Too little profit for the investment. I wonder if everybody has to have such an experience, if so, what simpletons they are. There is nothing about it very inviting, it looks bad, smells bad, tastes bad, and its influence is bad; otherwise, I should not have been rolling and vomiting, and acting like a fool. If this is but the initiation, what will be the degrees? I will never touch it again." So saying, I made my way for the house.

It seemed to me that I felt its deadly power for a month. It not only affected my nerves, but I was conscious of a loss of muscular energy. This sad experience served to deter me from tasting the narcotic for nearly a year; but, finally, I was prevailed on to try it again. I was not quite so liberal in the quantity as before. I had not entirely forgotten the former experiment; it led me to be cautious. This is the only cautious step I ever regretted having taken. If I could have had another "time," it would undoubtedly have cured me, but being cautious, and using little by little, it grew upon me, till finally it became a settled habit. I used it for more than twenty years. At first could only chew; then commenced smoking, which at times I carried to excess. I had an iron constitution, and it did not seem to affect me as it did many others. As the appetite grew upon me, I was conscious of an inkling after something stronger, but did not dream it was provoked by the use of tobacco. To satisfy my growing appetite, I would swallow the saliva. Thus, instead of the deadly nicotine acting on the lining membrane of the mouth, it was carried directly to the stomach, taken up by the absorbents, and conveyed thence into every part of the system. It was on account of swallowing the saliva, that I succeeded in using it without attracting attention. I have been intimate with persons for a great length of time without being detected. Persons in my presence would often receive a good dressing for indulging in the filthy habit, while I would escape. I have often been appealed to as a kind of oracle even while the sweet morsel was in my mouth, if I did not "think it was an awful practice." I have invariably answered in the affirmative. Sometimes I have been requested to talk with some person to see if I could not persuade him to abstain from its use, and this I have done, but not with a very good grace. When reproved for using it myself, which was sometimes the case, I would not allow myself to become ireful. My motto was, keep good natured, laugh it off, and by these means ward off the conviction. If persons reproved me, whom I knew to be great lovers of tea and coffee, I have, at times, indulged in a gentle retort. For though it was no excuse for me to continue in the indulgence of a bad habit because others did, yet, it was some little relief for me to throw it in their teeth, for, thought I, "Why should Satan rebuke sin?" To such I would say, "Pluck the beam out of thine own eye, then you will see clearly to remove the mote from your brother's eye." I was ready always to meet this class of persons, who, like the guide-post, were willing to point to the right course, while themselves remained stationary. I often said that when I reformed, I should abstain from the whole. I should adopt a course of total abstinence.

The Power of Love.

Bro. Grant:—I found the following incident recorded in a monthly periodical, and as it forcibly illustrates the power of love, I will copy it for your paper.

M. D. W.

"A woman had a deadly hatred against a fellow-creature. Now there lived near her a child who was not polluted with this world's wickedness. Mortal man had taught that child only a simple prayer, but the angels talked to her soul, and the Lord's light shone clearly there. Now, that woman once left her home, burning with jealousy, and she stumbled and fell just where that little child lived. The woman was angry and spoke bad words, when the child sweetly asked, "Has she been hurt?" Now the child was not afraid, but looked her in the face and said, "Never mind! God will cure you, and I will ask him." So she put up her little hands to the Lord, and said her little prayer. The tears of the woman started; the child was asking the Lord to bless her, and the Lord was looking at her through the child! She could not bear it; she screamed in agony. And then the child rose up, and the woman caught her and said, "Teach me to pray." The woman forgot her hatred—her fellow-sinner, everything but that child. Her look was on her when the child said, "Do you love?" "Me love? Me? Oh! who can I love?" Then said the child in a whisper, "Love God who loves you, and me, and all the world." "Yes," said the woman, "he loves you, but he cannot love me." Then said the child of love, "You do not know our God, then, for he is love." Now what that woman felt, I do not know; but she fell on her knees, and the power of love impressed her; and she let the child, the little child, lead her home, feeling an angel had been sent to keep her from great sin, and to tell her God was love, and loved her. Now, this woman became transformed, not by fear, but by the power of love in a little child."

Would that every one recognized the great truth, that "God is love," as did this little child! Never did I so clearly apprehend it, as of late. I view him not as an angry God ready to pour the vials of wrath upon the poor sinner; but I view him as presented before me in the character of Jesus Christ, and respond with implicit confidence to the declaration of the inspired apostle, "God is Love!" God so loved the world, that he sent his only begotten son "to die for its redemption." Yes, "when we were yet sinners," he gave the costliest gift for our ransom that heaven could bestow! Christ came and manifested that love so great, so incomprehensible, in his own life, and death. "We have known, and believed the love that God hath to us." Alas! I must acknowledge that my heart has been too slow to believe the exceeding love of God toward man, but have been too prone to look upon him as a Being whose anger burned against the sinner, and who must needs be earnestly entreated to save them; and that when the pardon is granted, it is not so much out of compassion and regard for the sinner, as for the sake of Jesus, whose entreaties are heard on the rebel's behalf. But my heart has enlarged of late with a feeling sense of the Father's love—his yearnings for the sinner's recovery—yielding up to Justice, the only begotten Son, that a way might be offered whereby the sinner might live. "In this," says the apostle, "was manifested the love of God toward us." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." O yes, it is a settled question that God loves the sinner, and how much more then doth he love his children by adoption. "I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you;" said Jesus to his disciples, "For the Father himself loveth you." Precious truth! may it ever be engraven on my heart, that "God is love," and that those who dwell in love, dwell in God, and God dwelleth in them. "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

M. D. W.

From Sr. J. D. Roberts.

Bro. Grant:—The subject of fasting is one which I have thought a great deal upon, and one which I consider of deep importance. We find by examining the Scriptures that the children of God anciently fasted when about to undertake any thing peculiarly difficult. They not only prayed, but, as if to show a greater degree of earnestness, fasted also. We find in the case of Esther, (see Esther 4: 16,) when the lives of her people were endangered, she betook herself to fasting. Was it acceptable to the Lord? He surely delivered them. See also Joel 2: 12, this seems to be a command; "Therefore also now, (or for this reason,) saith the Lord, turn ye even to me with all your heart; and with fasting and with weeping . . . for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and repenteth him of the evil."

I will not mention any more from the Old Testament, but come down into the gospel dispensation. Matt. 6: 16.—We now hear Jesus tell his disciples when they fast not to be like the hypocrites, or to fast for the sake of having men see them look sad; but to wash the face, anoint the head,—fast as before their heavenly Fa her alone. This surely implies they were to fast, else, what need of giving these directions? I recollet, Matt. 9: 14, the people asked Jesus, Why do we fast and thy disciples fast not? Said Christ, "Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the Bridegroom is with them? But the days will come, when the Bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast." Are we the children of the Bride-chamber? Has the Bridegroom been taken from us? Our Savior says, "Then shall they fast." See again, Matt. 17: 21. A certain man brought his child that was sore vexed with the devil to have the devil cast out by our Savior, at the same time adding, "I brought him to thy disciples and they could not cure him." But why could they not cast him out? Because that kind came forth but by fasting and prayer. So we see there is a kind comes forth only by fasting with prayer.

My brother, sister, do evils surround you which it seems almost impossible to overcome? Do inward temptations arise which you feel wholly unable to withstand? Have you proved the power of fasting and prayer? not fasting alone, not prayer alone, but prayer and fasting? Remember, when Jesus was here there was a kind which went not forth but by the two put together. See Acts 10: 30. Hear Cornelius' testimony. "I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house; and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing, and said, ... send therefore to Joppa," &c. Now Cornelius not only has the privilege of entertaining this holy man of God, but receives instruction from him upon what he must do to be saved. Nor is this all, for while he was yet speaking the Holy Spirit fell on him and all that heard him. We find, Acts 14: 23, when the disciples were ordaining elders in the churches, they prayed with fasting before commending them to the Lord. Also in Acts 13: 3, we find these disciples were not sent forth until fasting and prayer was first offered. Now let me ask, as there was so much necessity at the beginning of the dispensation for earnestness in the cause, how much more need is there at the present time, when iniquity so abounds that the love of many has already waxed cold! Shall we rest content in a cold, or lukewarm state, when we may reasonably expect the coming of the Just One? Nay, verily! Let us be active, and frequent the throne of grace; be in fastings oft, and, like Paul, have the assurance that there is a crown laid up at His appearing.

Yours striving for life,

Jane D. Roberts.

Dean Paul says, when a man forsakes us and wounds us, the heaven, the earth, and the little blooming tree, still stretch forth their arms and take the sufferer in their embrace, and the flowers nestle up to our wounded bosoms, and the rills mingle with our tears, and the breezes flow coolingly along with our sighs. A little angel stirs and infuses spirit into the ocean pool of Bethesda, and we dive with our thorns and stings beneath its warm billows.

Very few men, properly speaking, live at present, but are providing to live at another time.

Domestic Summary.

CIVIL WAR IN KANSAS.

St. Louis, Dec. 30.

Kansas advices of the 24th just received by the Democrat, say that civil war is raging in Bourbon county. Several conflicts have taken place between Free State and Pro-Slavery parties, and a number of prisoners had been taken by both sides.

The U. S. Marshal, with a force of men, demanded the surrender of the Free State party, and the demand was answered by a volley of musket balls. The fire was returned, and the fight lasted an hour, when the pro-slavery party retreated with the loss of one man killed and two mortally wounded. The Marshal was dangerously wounded.

Gen. Lane was entrenched at Sugar Mound, and determined to fight the dragoons if they attack him. A battle was regarded as inevitable.

THE FILLIBUSTERS AT THE SOUTH.

New Orleans, Dec. 30.

The indignation meeting, called for this evening, to discuss Nicaraguan affairs, was adjourned till Saturday on account of the non-publicity of the call, notwithstanding several thousand persons were in attendance. The adjourned meeting takes place on Saturday evening.

The excitement is still going on; 132 men have offered their services to-day. Over 1400 men are now in this city and Mobile, awaiting shipment.

The men from the lower part of Texas, 800 in number, sailed on the 26th inst.

It is impossible to imagine the feeling here, as well as throughout the entire South, so far as heard from, upon this question. The people are "in arms and eager for the fray."

MASSACRE OF AN AMERICAN MISSIONARY IN INDIA.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 30.

Letters have been received here from India, announcing the massacre at Delhi of the Rev. Mr. Freeman and wife, American Missionaries. They were beheaded by the natives, after having been kept prisoners for some days. They were both natives of New Jersey.

Another Revolution in Mexico. New Orleans, Dec. 25. The steamship Tennessee has arrived here with dates from the City of Mexico to the 17th inst. Another revolution broke out on the 10th instant. The garrison at Tacuyba pronounced against the dissolving of the Congress, the overthrowing of the Constitution, and the declaring of Comonfort Dictator. Vera Cruz follows the example, and it was expected the rest of the States would also do so. Later accounts from Yucatan state that the reactionists had captured Eisel, which again was retaken by the government troops.

The Vicissitudes of Commerce.—A few months since, the partner of a commercial house in this city was taken to a lunatic asylum, utterly deranged, as was said, by his unparalleled prosperity in business. During the year previous his firm had cleared $1,300,000. He died in the asylum, and his own estate was valued at $2,500,000, all invested in the firm of which he was a partner. The firm itself failed the other day, and is now utterly insolvent. One item of the assets of the deceased's estate was a thousand shares of the Illinois Central Railroad stock, which was selling at the time of his decease, at $140 a share, and which was worth, after paying up the installments, $800,000. The same property sold yesterday at public sale at $50,000. All this occurred within eighteen months—the prosperity, the insanity, the disease and the insolvency.—Eve. Post.

A THRILLING INCIDENT.

Returning from a visit to New Orleans, we were fortunate enough to secure a passage on a line steamer with but few passengers. Among the ladies, one especially interested us. She was the widow of a wealthy planter, and was returning with only one child to her father's house. Her devotion to the child was very touching, and the eyes of her old black nurse would fill with tears as she besought her mistress "not to love that boy too much, or the Lord would take him away from her."

We passed through the canal at Louisville, and stopped for a few minutes at the wharf, when the nurse wishing to see the city walked out on the guard at the back of the boat, where, by a sudden effort, the child sprang from her arms into the terrible current that swept toward the falls, and disappeared immediately. The confusion which ensued attracted the attention of a gentleman who was in the front part of the boat quietly reading. Rising hastily, he asked for some article the child had worn. The nurse handed him a tiny apron she had torn off in her effort to retain the babe in her arms. Turning to a splendid Newfoundland dog that was eagerly watching his countenance, he pointed first to the apron, and then to the spot where the child had gone under. In an instant the noble dog leaped into the rushing water, and he also soon disappeared. By this time the excitement was intense, and some persons on shore supposing that the dog was lost as well as the child, procured a boat and started off in search of the body. At this moment, the dog was seen far away with something in his mouth. Bravely he struggled with the waves, but it was evident that his strength was fast failing, and more than one breast gave a sigh of relief as the boat reached him, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was still alive. They were brought on shore—the dog and the child.

Giving a single glance to satisfy herself that the child was really living, the young mother rushed forward, and sinking beside the dog, threw her arms around his neck and burst into tears. Not many could view the sight unmoved, and as she caressed and kissed his shaggy head, she looked up to his owner, and said:

"O, sir, I must have this dog! I am rich, take all I have—every thing—but give me my child's preserver."

The gentleman smiled, and patting his dog's head, said: "I am very glad, madam, he has been of service to you, but nothing in the world could induce me to part with him."

The dog looked as though he perfectly understood what they were talking about, and giving his sides a shake, laid himself down at his master's feet, with an expression in his large eyes that said plainer than words—"No, nothing shall part us."—Ex.

St. Louis, Dec. 24. A Kansas letter to the Democrat says that on the evening of the 16th, a battle occurred at Fort Scott, between the pro-slavery and free State men. Five of the former were killed; among them Blake Little, a member of the Lecompton Convention.

Several were wounded on both sides, and twenty Free State men were taken prisoners and confined in the fort.

The Missourians were assembled in strong force on the border, and more fighting was apprehended.

The difficulties grew out of the fact that Clark, notorious as a murderer of Barber, two years since, went about, accompanied by a deputy, collecting taxes of the Free State men, and seizing their property in default of payment, making prosecutions under the rebellion law.

THE WAR IN KANSAS.

Lawrence, K. T., Wednesday, Dec. 23, 1857—Midnight.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:—The last twenty-four hours have been fraught with exciting events. For more than two thirds of that time, the three or four hundred Free State men assembled here, have listened patiently to the discussion of a single proposition.

Origin and History of the Hostilities.—Col. Phillips left Lawrence at 3 o'clock Friday morning, and rode through to the Free State camp (ninety miles) in thirteen hours. He found less than 100 men encamped, but on Sunday morning the number had increased to 183.

Six or seven houses had been burned, but they were the residences of Free State men, and were destroyed by their enemies. The Free State settlers have been subjected to so many indignities, that they have been compelled to establish a Vigilance Committee.

Fort Scott is an abandoned military post, near the southeastern corner of the territory. It was sold by the Government shortly after the organization of Kansas to a party of radical pro-slavery men for $5000, though it originally cost $120,000. Its natural position is excellent, and since its purchase it has been one of the worst strongholds of border ruffianism.

Barnesville is a border pro-slavery town ten miles from Fort Scott. Three scouts of the Vigilance Committee, Gen. Abbott in command, having disappeared, Capt. Bain, with a detachment of fifteen men, went towards Barnesville in search of them. An unsuccessful attempt was made to draw them all into the town; but this proving unsuccessful, a company of eighty mounted Missourians, who were concealed there, suddenly rode out and gave them chase. Cap. B.'s party fled precipitately across the prairie; but owing to the superior numbers of their pursuers, five were taken prisoners

This was on Tuesday. On Wednesday, Deputy U. S. Marshal Lytle, with an armed posse of eighty, mostly Missourians, approached the camp of Gen. Abbott, sixteen miles from Fort Scott. Under a flag of truce Lytle was admitted to the camp. The Free State men numbered forty-five. The terms which Lytle proposed were an unconditional surrender; but he made many promises of kind treatment, &c. This proposition was treated with ridicule on all sides. Gen. Abbott proposed to him, that if the Fort Scott prisoners were released, and the Missourians compelled to go home, the Free State forces would disperse.

To this Lytle could not assent. So after making some violent threats he returned to his men, and an engagement commenced almost immediately. A brisk fire was kept up on both sides for nearly an hour. The camp was in a grove, and the men were protected by trees, stumps, &c. One Missourian, name unknown, was killed on the spot. Two or three others were wounded. Lytle received a bullet in the breast, but it had not at latest accounts proved fatal. Lytle and his forces at last retreated in confusion, taking along with them the body of their dead companion. They did not return, and Abbott retired to a point some thirty-two miles from Fort Scott, where he remained until the arrival of Col. Phillips.

On Sunday morning there were 180 of the pro-slavery forces in the fort, and 83 in Barnesville. Two hundred U. S. Dragoons, sent down by Gov. Stanton, were also only a few miles distant. During the day the Free State men marched towards Fort Scott, and in the evening a party of them approached so near the fort as to take four scouts prisoners, and drive all the rest into the fort. Such was the position of the Missourians and the U. S. troops, however, that it was not deemed prudent to make an attack; and during that night, through a driving snow storm, the Free State forces fell back eighteen miles, that they might encamp in a timbered region, to carry out the instructions, and avoid the troops as long as possible. Col. Phillips stated that the men were very reluctant to retreat, and that they unanimously expressed an eagerness to stand up to the position they had taken, and if necessary to fight the U. S. Dragoons. The announcement was received in the Convention with much sensation and applause.

On Monday morning Gen. Lane arrived at the Free State camp. He immediately enrolled all the men on duty there—about 150—as members of the Territorial Militia. Col. Phillips left during the forenoon, arriving in Lawrence this morning.

With the exception of Mr. Ewing, not a single speaker to-day based his opposition to violent measures on the ground that it would imperil the Union; all the consideration urged was impracticability. The simple truth is that the course of the administration is goading the people of Kansas to a radicalism they never dreamed of before. If persisted in, I believe a bloody revolution is inevitable.

The heated discussions to-day assumed a personal character more than once. Some rather severe passages at arms occurred between Gov. Robinson and Messrs. Thatcher, Walden, Whitman and Phillips.

It is said that Missourians from Fort Scott are now canvassing the border counties, to bring more forces into the field.

Gov. Denver has gone to Leavenworth, it is predicted for more troops. A. D. R.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

DEATH.

Death is a stubborn, cruel foe,
Which kills the humble saints;
It swells the tides of human woe,
The heart with anguish taints.

Death is the gate to dreamless sleep,
Its victims naught can know;
It is the door to darkness deep,
Where dying mortals go.

It drags the whole man to the grave,
The soul it doth devour;
None but our Master then can save,
Or rescue from his power.

The resurrection day will come,
Then death will be destroyed;
The saints are then all gathered home,
To be no more annoyed.

Lord, haste the resurrection day,
Call up the saints that sleep;
Oh! speed the time, make no delay,
Why should we longer weep?

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, Dec. 30.

The steamship Arago, from Southampton, 16th inst, arrived at this port this evening.

No further progress had been made toward launching the Leviathan.

A proposition had been made to the Swedish Chambers to contract a loan of $10,000,000 to support commerce.

Norway has contracted a loan of $2,000,000 for the same purpose.

Six or eight more houses at Hamburg had stopped previous to the 10th, and the Savings Banks were crowded with persons anxious to draw the smallest deposits. The authorities had resource to the military to keep order. On the 13th there was no general return of confidence, and further failures were expected.

Five houses in Stockholm had suspended.

The commercial crisis had become more aggravated at Smyrna, and was increased by the fall in almost all kinds of commodities.

There was great agitation in Syria. A conflict had occurred between the inhabitants of Bethlehem and Tamar, in which one person was killed and several wounded.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Halifax, Jan. 2.

The royal mail steamship Niagara, Capt. Wickman, from Liverpool 19th ult. arrived here at an early hour this morning.

The general news by this arrival embraces little of importance.

There is no later intelligence from India.

Some additional failures are reported; among them Cheesbrough & Sons, one of the largest woolen firms in Yorkshire.

Financial affairs at Hamburg are improving.

The Bank of France reduced its rate of discount to the uniform basis of six per cent.

The commercial crisis in the North of Europe continued with great severity.

Messrs. Powell & Son, London and Manchester warehousemen, have failed. Their liabilities are heavy.

The enterprise to raise the sunken ships at Sebastopol has been abandoned.

A number of new and important failures are reported in Sweden.

The commercial crisis in Norway is still very severe. Two delegates from the government went to Hamburg some days ago, with money to support the firms there, whose failures would be prejudicial to Norwegian commerce.

The effects of the crisis are now showing themselves in Prussia, where a great number of manufacturers were obliged, more or less, to suspend their works.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Operations were resumed upon the Leviathan on the 16th, but, with a most tremendous pressure, the vessel was only moved about three feet, when the work was suspended sine die. No less than three hydraulic rams, one powerful Arab, or windlass, and the double chains which drag the vessel toward the river, are all burst or broken. The Times thinks one half the hydraulic presses in the kingdom will be required to overcome the difficulties. No further attempt would be made till after Christmas.

The return of M. de Thouvenel from Constantinople is believed to be the result of a compromise between the English and French governments. The intention is stated to be that neither Lord Stratford de Redcliffe nor M. de Thouvenel shall return to their posts after their leave of absence is expired.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Casco, Maine, Nov. 17, 1857, Bro. Daniel Marsh, aged fifty-four years. [illegible] In the death of this dear brother, the church in that place are again called to mourn for one of its faithful supporters. In the Spring of 1853 I witnessed, while laboring in that place, a glorious revival, and this brother was reclaimed from a backslidden state, and baptized, and from that time to the hour of his death was a faithful supporter of the Lord's coming to resurrect the dead and change the living. His house was always a home for all God's people, and he was always ready to assist in helping to preach the gospel to those that were needy. Although his sufferings were great, he was never heard to murmur nor complain; and I think I never witnessed a more perfect exemplification of christian fortitude than in this dear brother.

His funeral was attended by the writer, and a discourse preached from 1 Cor. 15: 20, to a large circle of friends and neighbors.

Jesse Partridge.

West Poland, Nov. 25th, 1857.

Died, in Palermo, Maine, Dec. 18th, 1857. Henry Brown, aged thirty-six years.

For the Crisis.

PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

Another year is numbered with the past,
With all its disappointments, hopes and fears,
And in eternity's deep ocean vast,
Immeasurable, lo! it disappears.
To some it gladness brought—to others tears,—
To some it rang a merry marriage bell,—
To others death and shrouds and gloomy biers
In ghastly march, to which the passing-bell
And funeral dirge the while kept time surpassing well.

The sage philosophers, with anxious brow,
Which tells of study ardent, long and deep,
As they dive into Nature, seeking how
She moves and is, and climb the slippery steep
To proud pre-eminence, whilst still they keep
The longing eye upon some distant star,
As if they grudged the necessary sleep,
Lest other hand should pluck from their tiar
The spangle called, renown, so sought for from afar!

Warrior and statesman, merchant, prince and king,
With all their glory, craft and sovereignty,
Which in their train so much vexation bring,
In one short year have been by death set free,
If the dark numbness of the grave might be Called liberation—where, in gloom profound,
Unconscious they await the time when He Shall bid th' archangel his dread tocsin sound,
Which shall awake from sleep the myriads under ground!

Then shall the meek, who long have borne the cross,
Unshrinking at and unabashed by scorn,
And counted worldly gain as worthless dross,
Shall wake to gladness on that glorious morn
With all who from the Gospel womb are born,
To greet their Lord triumphant from the skies,
So long expected by the few who mourn
At his long tarrying—but now their eyes
Behold the glorious Sun of Righteousness arise.

May we who by the mercy of our God
Have been preserved to see another year,
Be not ashamed to spread the truth abroad,
Undaunted by that kind of slavish fear
Which makes us dread the scorner's laugh and sneer;
But boldly spread Emmanuel's banner free,
That all may see and from our lips may hear
The tidings of Redemption, and that we
May gather many souls to serve and worship Thee.

For the Crisis.

The Christian's Day of Rest.

The question of the Sabbath has been quite extensively discussed in our papers and pulpits. To my mind, it has been decidedly proven, that the old Law of the Sabbath, requiring us to observe and keep the seventh day in the manner therein specified, is done away in Christ,—or was done away by him; "For he is Lord even of the sabbath day."

To say that the law is in force, requiring us to keep the day, and only the manner of its observance is changed; is to assume a position that requires divine authority to sustain. The law is as positive as to the manner of its observance, as of the fact. No authority short of the one that instituted the law can change the manner in which it is to be obeyed. And as no authorized change of the mode of obeying has been shown it follows that the whole law is of full force, if any part is. But the evidence, to my mind, shows that it was done away in Christ.

The question remaining is, are Christians under obligations to lay aside their ordinary business and spend any day of the week in such acts of immediate worship and service of God, as are calculated to instruct our minds and improve our hearts? I mean in the study and teaching of the Scriptures, and prayer, and praise, &c.

I know of professed Christians who, believing the law is abolished, will labor on their farms, in their shops, or elsewhere; will hunt, fish and do various other and similar acts,—and with not even the pretence of a special emergency; as if to show their contempt of the law of the Sabbath. Now is this right?

It seems to me that a few considerations ought to dissuade all from such a course. Experience has abundantly shown that man and beast require a rest as often as one day in seven, from labor, for the benefit of their physical constitution. The same experience shows that man as certainly needs rest from mental labor, especially the cares and perplexities incident to the business of this life. To spend the time in prayer and praise,—in reading the Scriptures and speaking together of the things of the kingdom, that we may have comfort of hope [illegible] in faith, seems well adapted to secure these ends. A strong argument [illegible] but he may consider his nature, relations to God, and his fellow, and his corresponding duties, his character, destiny, God's great plan of saving man, the necessary conditions, &c., &c. Man needs the moral influence on his own heart and mind, of as clear and definite information on all these points, as he can obtain. He needs it to restrain from vice and lead to virtue. To refuse the devotion of, at least, that portion of time to this kind of service, is to throw obstacles directly in the way of man's highest good. Can it be done without sin?

A Christian has no right to do violence to the conscientious scruples of a Christian neighbor unnecessarily. The great mass of Christendom believe God has a positive law requiring the observance of the day Now if the Lord permits you to do which you please; to hunt, fish, labor, &c.,—or remain in-doors, read the Scriptures, or otherwise serve God,—or assemble with others in some place, for social or public worship; you are bound by the law of Christian courtesy to do the latter. If the law to "Keep the Sabbath," is not found in the New Testament, the law, "Be courteous," is, and all are as really bound to obey the latter as they would be the former, were it there.

Further; a Christian has no more right to destroy his influence by prodigality than he has his money or property. A Christian is bound to have all the influence he can in doing right. It needs no argument to show that those spending their time in the manner specified above, will, and do, destroy their Christian influence in any community. Now unless they can show that God has made it their duty, to take this course, they are bound to husband their influence that they may use it for the cause of truth.

Again; the influence of living without any time devoted from ordinary pursuits to the acquisition of knowledge on moral and religious subjects, is demoralizing in all its tendencies. Witness the moral desolations prevailing in families professing Christianity, and yet living regardless of the Christian's day of rest and devotion.

Once more. The Lord permits his people to devote a day in seven to his special service, if they are disposed. This is their privilege. It is a free-will offering,—as are many other acts of Christian service. "He that regardeth the day, regardeth it to the Lord." Shall the Christian need any more than to know that the Lord will accept the service, if he thus spends a portion of his time? and, especially, when all these evils are to be avoided, and such desirable results secured?

The early Christians usually met for service on the first day of the week.—perhaps in honor of Christ's resurrection. In this part of the world, the people generally are agreed to lay aside their baseness on the first day. We shall have less annoyance in our meetings, a better attendance; shall have more influence among the people, and can better do them good, by selecting this day; therefore, let us do it.

Pencilings by the Way.

LETTER TO A FRIEND.

MY DEAR SISTER:—In reply to the inquiry, "Have we a right to seek for and expect temporal blessings from the hand of God? I do most unhesitatingly answer in the affirmative. "Are we authorized from the Bible to make such matters a special subject of prayer?" Yes, I think so. Reliance on God for a supply of every temporal need was taught the disciples, when they were bidden to go forth on their mission, without "purse, or scrip," (the "scrip" was a sort of bag in which provisions were carried,) and not to take "two coats." Upon their return, the Savior asked them, "Lacked ye anything?" And they replied, "Nothing." What a lesson of encouragement is here furnished to the minister who has no "purse" of money—no "scrip" of provisions—no "changes of raiment," to go forth on his errand of mercy, trusting in Him from whom he has received his commission, and who has said, "The workman is worthy of his hire." Again, our Savior points to the "lilies of the field," which for splendor excel "Solomon in all his glory," and says, "God clothes them;" although they "are to-day in the field, and to-morrow are cut down." He calls our attention to "ravens," and says, "They have neither store-house nor barn, yet God feedeth them," and asks, "Are ye not much better than they?" He bids us not be anxious respecting what we shall eat, and [illegible] we shall be clothed, "for your Heavenly Father," he says "knoweth that ye have need of all these things," and assures us that if we will make it our first intent to seek the kingdom of heaven, and its righteousness, all these things shall be added. Yes, the food and raiment shall be added to those who comply with the condition. By the word of God, these stand pledged to those who seek "first, the kingdom," &c. O, what a precious promise is this to the "poor of this world," who are rich in faith, and who, having first sought, are now the heirs of the kingdom. As if to remove every vestige of unbelief, and establish the disciples firmly upon the immutable basis of God's special providence and notice, he calls our attention to the tiny sparrow who hops from spray to spray; and assures us that not one of them falls to the ground without our Father's notice; and to impress it more deeply upon our mind, he asks, "Are ye not of more value than many sparrows?" and assures us that even the very hairs of our head are numbered! Who, O, who can doubt, who reads and ponders o'er these repeated assurances of our Father's care? With what confidence, then may we heed the injunction, "Be careful for nothing, but in everything, by prayer, and supplication, let your requests be made known unto God with thanksgiving;" and how blessed the realization of the promise annexed,—"And the peace of God that passeth understanding, shall (mark its positiveness) keep your heart and mind in Christ Jesus!" Praise the Lord! I know this to be true! For many years, that Scripture has been a choice one to me. I have cast anchor upon it in many a rough gale, and always found it solid ground! And have you not in this text, my sister, a reply to your last inquiry?" "Everything," surely includes the temporal need. Try it! try it! and as sure as God lives, instead of disquietude and care, a peace that passeth understanding shall fill thy soul! But, in order to add strength to the testimony, (yet how can aught be added to the testimony of God?) I will bring forward one or two witnesses."

Said a pious man, "God never gave me what I wanted, he always gave me more. As a proof, I will tell you the following anecdote:—When I married, I was a worldly man, and consequently I had not much money to spare. In about three months after my marriage I fell ill, and my illness continued for more than nine months. At that period I was in great distress. I owed a sum of money and had no means to pay it! it must be paid on a certain day, or I must go to jail. I had no food for myself or wife; and in this distress I went up to my room, and took my Bible. I got down on my knees and opened it, laid my fingers on several of the promises and claimed them as mine. I said, "Lord, this is thine own word of promise! I claim thy promises." I endeavored to lay hold of them by faith. I wrestled with God for some time in this way. I got up off my knees and walked about for some time. I then went to bed, and took my Bible and opened it on these words—"Call upon me in the time of trouble! I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." I said, "Lord it is enough." I knew deliverance would come, and I praised God with my whole heart. Whilst in this frame of mind, I heard a knock at the door. I went out and opened it, and a man handed me a letter; I turned to look at it. I looked up again, the man was gone. The letter contained the sum I wanted, and five shillings over. It is now eighteen years ago, and I never knew who sent it; God only knows. Thus God delivered me out of all my distress. To him be all the praise!"

As I have several other incidents of like import to relate, I will reserve them until my next letter, and in the meantime let your soul feed by faith upon the precious promises which I have quoted for your encouragement, and forget not that the very relationship which you sustain to God, authorizes you to ask of him in confidence, those things that you need. As a Father he is obliged to provide for your necessities, yet for this he will needs "be inquired of," and you must "ask in faith, nothing doubting." Yours, as ever,

BESSIE.

For the Crisis.

"I Will Come Again."

"If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 3.

How full of love and tenderness are the sayings of Christ to his beloved disciples. It seemed strange language to them, that Christ, the Son of God, the Lord of glory, must be delivered into wicked hands, and slain; but He who knew the end from the beginning saw that in no other way could God be just and yet the sinner find mercy. As the time drew near when he was to leave his disciples, he speaks to them in parting words, truly, as never man spake; "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." Blessed words! how have the weary pilgrims been made joyful by them. And then follows his prayer for his beloved disciples; and, reader, he prays for you and me, if we believe, that we all may be one, even as he and the Father are one; and when tempted to go away from Jesus, let us remember that he prayed for us, and oh! may the thought of his love to us stir us up to love the Savior more and serve him better.

I have tried to follow Jesus in my imagination through the scenes that follow, and I never do this without learning a lesson of deep submission in times of suffering. We behold him in the garden, and hear him pray, "Abba, Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt." O, what anguish of soul, and what submission! Fellow Christian, look there, and learn to pray; for it is your Lord and Master that pours out his soul in prayer. Sometimes we are apt to think our sufferings great, and then may we think of Jesus; he has passed those scenes before us; was tempted in all points like as we are, and we also read that the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. And when borne to the judgment hall and a mock trial held over him, we may learn of him there.

Jesus is condemned and borne away by the infuriated rabble, urged on by the powers of darkness, and on Calvary is crucified; and, O my soul, reflect, that for your sins he suffered there. And now the plan of salvation is finished; now the sinner may look and live; now the penitent find pardon; now eternal life is placed within the reach of man, and whosoever will, may partake of the water of life freely. O sinner, come, come now, while mercy lingers and the Holy Spirit strives, for it may be the last time.

We follow Jesus further, as he is laid in Joseph's new tomb, and the hope of the disciples, that he was the one that should redeem Israel, seems lost, and they turn to their former employment. But they are not in despair long, for, as they were with one accord in one place, Jesus stood in the midst of them and said, "Peace be unto you." And I do not wonder that the disciples were glad when they saw the Lord. Even a doubting Thomas believed, and cried out in the fullness of his heart—"My Lord and my God!" Their prayer meeting begun in sadness, but methinks it ended gloriously, when Christ manifested himself as he does not unto the world.

There is another place of much interest connected with the Savior's life; it is Olivet. That mount is indeed of blessed memory, for it brings to our minds the time when Jesus went away, and also the promise that he would come again. I always love to read the account given in the first chapter of Acts. The Scriptures tell us that now Christ is at the Father's right hand interceding for those who come to God by him. Fellow christian, how much we ought to love Christ for what he has done and is doing for us. Soon the Lord will come, this same Jesus. Take courage! our journey is almost at an end, and if faithful to God, in a little while the summons will come, "Arise and depart, for this is not your rest."

Minister of the gospel, you see your pattern. Oh, closely follow it! The Judge standeth at the door! and I know that when he comes, "they that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Impenitent sinner, what shall I say to you? Now you can fly to the ark for shelter from the coming storm; now mercy lingers; now the Savior waits to be gracious, but soon the scene will be ended and the door of mercy forever closed, and then tribulation and wrath, indignation and anguish, must be your portion. Turn, turn, for why will you die?

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to drop a few words to you through the Crisis in regard to the cause in this part of Iowa. It is in a prosperous condition at present. I had the pleasure of baptizing five happy souls in Christ last Lord's day, and I trust they are risen with Christ in newness of life, in hope of eternal life at the resurrection of the just. More are inquiring the way. May the good Lord help in this time of need. Your unworthy Bro. in the Gospel hope.

TO SISTER H. PATTEN.

Aged mother, thou art nearing
A bright world of joy and peace;
Death may soon in slumbers lay thee,
But to find a quick release.
Death can hold thee but a moment—
A strong arm will break his power,
And awake to life and glory;
O! the coming of that hour!

O! the resurrection moment,
When the bonds of death are loosed,
When the triumph is made certain,
And the tempter's head is bruised!
No more sorrow, no more anguish,
In that endless age of joy;
But eternal peace and comfort
Shall be ours without alloy.

Here I stop in wonder, thinking,
Can such joy be ever mine?
Will the God of glory place me
Where his glories ever shine?
Will there be no fatal hindrance?
No departure from the way?
No temptation strong and fearful,
Causing me to go astray?

O! may God in mercy grant me
Grace and strength for every hour!
May I have the succor needed,
When I feel the tempter's power.
Yes, I know my Father's kindness,
Know his patience with me here;
Know that when I often wander,
He in mercy does forbear.

Aged Mother, all the conflict
In this trial world below,
Which thou'st met with in thy journey,
Thou and God may only know.
Had'st thou sailed by sunny breezes
All thy journey thus far through,
Had'st thou known no storms or tempests,
Thou could'st ne'er have ripened so.

Storms and tempests only brighten
Christian graces as we go;
They will help us ever onward,
If our faith is only true.
But the moment now is nearing
When the conflict will be o'er;
Yet a conflict, the severest,
May await us ere the hour.

Peace be thine in death's cold slumbers,
Or in waiting for that hour
When the Master in his triumph
Shall descend in mighty power,
Loosing bands which bind the sleepers,
And unlock the silent grave,
In a twinkling change the righteous,
For his mission is to save.

True Riches.

DEAR READER:—Permit the voice of true friendship to address you, and kindly ask your serious attention to a subject of high importance. This subject is the solemn connection of the present short life with the eternal future!

Our Creator, who rightfully claims our supreme love and service, has spoken to us by his beloved Son from heaven. His sublime doctrine, his wondrous miracles, the fulfillment of the prophetic Word, in his birth, his life, his death and resurrection, justify his claim to be "THE SON OF GOD." This claim was confirmed by the voice of his Father from heaven. "This is my beloved Son—HEAR YE HIM." Matt. 17: 5. He is "The faithful Witness" of God's eternal truth to a sinful world, whom God will bring to judgment.—"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14.

Oh, my friend, have you considered the solemn warning to "REPENT," and the gracious invitation of the Friend of sinners to come unto him for eternal life? "This is the (divine) record, that God has given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John 5: 11, 12.

Why do you and I need this great salvation? Because the whole world has "become guilty before God." Rom. 3: 19. We have broken his righteous law, his holy and just command to love him supremely, and to love our neighbor as ourselves. The penalty is death. "The wages of sin is DEATH." Rom. 6: 23. "The soul that sinneth it shall DIE." Ezek. 18: 20.

Permit me, in faithful love, to ask you, if you have seriously considered your condition, as a sinner, justly exposed to an "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power," (2 Thess. 1: 9,) if you have not fled for refuge from this "second death," (Rev. 20: 14, 15,) to the open arms of Jesus, the only mediator between a holy God and sinful men? You may have a fair reputation with your fellow-men, but "God looketh on the heart," and there he sees that "the God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified." Dan. 5: 23.

It may be that you have some faith in Christianity. If you believe "with the heart unto righteousness," your eternal life is secured. "The devils believe and tremble." James 2: 19. Do you believe and love? [illegible] We may have been baptized like Demas, who still "loved this present world," or like Simon Magus, whose heart was "not right in the sight of God." Acts 8: 18, 21. We may have "the form of godliness" and never know its transforming power. We may partake of the supper of the Lord, and eat and drink condemnation to ourselves. 1 Cor. 11: 29. Thousands of members of Christian churches, covetous, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, go down to perdition with a lie in their right hand. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. 6: 7, 8.

Dear friend, have you considered the promise of "the God of heaven" to set up a glorious kingdom of righteousness, love, and peace on this earth, (Dan. 2: 44; 7: 13, 14,) in which you may participate with eternal joy, if now, with your whole heart, you will obey the Savior's counsel of love to you, and "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness?" Matt. 6: 33. Soon "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints," &c. 2 Thess. chap. 1.

Now he holds out the sceptre of mercy, and bids us touch it and live; forewarning us to "fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. 10: 28.

Shall not the love of God, manifested in giving his beloved Son to suffer and die for us, awaken our insensibility and melt our hard hearts to penitence? Shall not the love of a bleeding, dying Savior, draw our affections away from the perishing vanities of an ungodly world?

"There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless, the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand. Prov. 19: 21."

One device is, that God is merciful and will save all men. The counsel of the Lord concerning those who now reject his grace, is, that "he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favor." Isa. 27: 11; Prov. 1: 25–30. It is a plainly revealed fact, that at the final judgment, those whose names are "not found written in the book of life," will be "cast into the lake of fire," to die a "second death," which is defined to be an "everlasting destruction" of soul and body. Rev. 20: 12–15; 2 Thess. 1: 9; Matt. 10: 28. Death is the cessation of life.

Another device is, that divine mercy may be obtained at any period of life, and that it is an easy matter to turn to God at any time. This presumption has been the eternal ruin of thousands. Dear reader, fallen man is dependent on God for salvation, and except he is born of the Spirit of God, he can never enter the kingdom of God. John 3: 5. If divine counsel is rejected to-day, it may be rejected forever.

Self-righteousness is another avenue to perdition. A secret dependence on our own goodness for acceptance with God, instead of a humble and entire reliance on his grace in Jesus Christ for justification, leaves us under the condemnation of the righteous law which we have broken. Equally fatal to salvation, is the opposite error of pretending to depend on Jesus Christ, while, in total opposition to his blessed example, we walk in pride and covetousness. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9. This spirit of supreme love to God, manifested in practical obedience to his holy commandments, and of love to our fellow-men, proved by benevolent action in imitation of Him "who went about doing good," is essential to true christian character. Without it, the knowledge and eloquence of angels, or a faith which can "remove mountains," is as worthless as "sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." 1 Cor. 13: 1, 2.

Hastening to eternal judgment, and to the close of all present scenes, how forcible, dear reader, is that question of the friend of sinners, "What is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" (Luke 9: 25.)

Say, sinner, hath a voice within
Oft whispered to thy secret soul;
Urged thee to leave the ways of sin,
And yield thy heart to God's control?

Sinner, it was a heavenly voice,
It was the Savior's gracious call;
It bade thee make the better choice,
And haste to seek in Christ thine all.

Spurn not the call to life and light,
Regard in time the warning kind;
That call thou mayst not always slight,
And yet the gate of mercy find.

Sinner, perhaps this very day
Thy last accepted time may be;
O, should thou grieve him now away,
Then hope may never beam on thee.

MR. ADAMS AND THE BIBLE.—In a letter to his son in 1811, John Quincy Adams says, "I have for many years made it a practice to read through the Bible once a year. My custom is to read four or five chapters every morning, immediately after rising from my bed. It employs about an hour of my time, and seems to me the most suitable manner of beginning the day. In what light soever we regard the Bible, whether with reference to revelation, to history, or to morality, it is an invaluable and inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue."

THERE is nothing that God has judged good for us that he has not given us the means to accomplish, both in the natural and the moral world.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

LOVE.

I love my Savior and my God,
I love my neighbour, too;
I love the holy blessed Word,
And all who love it, too.

O, let our hearts be truly joined
In fellowship with God,
And always ready to defend
His ever blessed Word.

Let love in purest accents rise
From every loving breast,
To Him who formed the earth and skies
And giveth man a rest.

And may it flow from heart to heart,
And bind them all in one,
That others thus may knowledge take
How sweetly love will join.

The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. I.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

There is a question between Advent believers, whether the Sanctuary will be cleansed before the earth is burned, or whether both will occur at the same time. We all believe that the Sanctuary will be cleansed at the end of the vision of 2300 days; but we do not all think that the world will be burned till a thousand years after that event. Some argue that the thousand years are in the past, and some that the Sanctuary is being cleansed at this time; but with these I have no controversy, because the case looks plain to me that the thousand years is recognized in the Bible as "the great and dreadful day of the Lord;" and it is no less clear that the vision is not ended, and consequently the Sanctuary cannot be in process of cleansing. Some contend that the earth will not be burned till the end of the thousand years, after the wicked are all destroyed in the lake of fire; and others hold that the earth will be burned and the Sanctuary cleansed at the same time. To the former class it may be said, If the living wicked are not burned till cast into the lake of fire, they cannot be "ashes under the soles of your feet,"—as Mal. 9: 3 assures us, (i. e. literally.)

The saints enter on their inheritance when they put on incorruption; and "the purchased possession," which is the new earth, must be redeemed at that time; for Jesus said, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." And when he comes his reward is with him; and as the earth cannot be made new till it is burned, nor inhabited by the saints till redeemed, it follows that the earth will be burned, and "the purchased possession" redeemed at the beginning of the thousand years, when the saints are made incorruptible and immortal. The living wicked, who will fall in the battle of the great day, and be burnt up with the earth, though "destroyed root and branch," will only suffer their first death at that time; and consequently must be raised and judged, in order that they may suffer the second death in "the lake of fire;" for a man cannot suffer the second death till he dies the first death.

None can suppose the New Jerusalem will descend, till the earth is burned and made new. And it will be seen, Rev. 20: 9,—that it is down on the earth when Satan is loosed; for his hosts come up and "compass the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city;" and no man in his right mind can call old Jerusalem "the beloved city," where all the best blood of the whole universe has been shed; nor can it become the camp of glorified, immortalized saints, till purged with the fire of God. "Abraham looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." And will he not come into possession of his land at the first resurrection? "The meek shall inherit the earth." These all died in faith, not having received the (fulfilment of the) promise," but "God was not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city." And will they not get it, when they go into life eternal? "These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the (fulfillment of the) promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. 11: 39, 40. But they will unquestionably get it when Jesus sits on the throne of David; for he said, "I go to prepare a place for you;" and "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also." This proves that he will come, when the place is prepared; and as we know "the righteous will inherit the land, and dwell therein forever;" we cannot be at a loss to know where the inheritance will be located. "We shall reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 10. There is a way to class and harmonize the prophecies which relate to those stupendous events that accompany the ushering in of that great and illustrious day of God Almighty.

The design of this communication is, with the help of God, to present in a series of separate numbers, some of those startling prophecies, in a classified form, and harmonized in the order, or nearly so, in which they will unquestionably be fulfilled. Scripture texts quoted, chap. and ver., will be generally presented, (except where an explanation is necessary, or an objection may be answered,) that we may have the words of God. But many of them will be simultaneous events, or follow each other in such quick succession that we may not know which shall occur first. I believe it is generally allowed that the sign of "the Son of Man," when seen in heaven, is his appearing in reality in mid air, and not a descent to earth; otherwise, there would be no necessity for the saints to "be caught up." It is called a "sign;" and it will be the unmistakeable sign that we have in the course of time arrived at the judgment day.

In view of the tremendous realities of that day, and especially its nearness, may we heed the admonition, "If any man thinketh he standeth, let him take heed lest he fall;" and watch and pray continually, that we may be ready to enter the kingdom.

For the Crisis.

My Reasons.

Why do you preach everywhere the unconsciousness of the dead, and the final destruction of the wicked?

To this question I feel it a privilege to give an answer.

1.—Because it is TRUTH. Christ says,—"Thy word is TRUTH;" and Paul says,—"Preach the word."

2.—Because God's people are chosen to salvation through believing, and purified in obeying the TRUTH.

3.—Because it makes God's word mean what it says, so that those words and phrases which relate to the present state of man,—his condition in death and his final state, retain their literal and natural signification, the same as in any other connection, or any correctly written book.

4.—Because it equalizes the reward of all, both righteous and wicked.

5.—Because it restores to Christ the title of Life-Giver which the heathen dogma of natural immortality takes from him. (See John 10: 27; and 1 Jno. 5: 11)

6.—It removes from the character of God the terrible injustice involved in the idea of punishing men with eternal torment for a moment of transgression; a doctrine, says Dr. Edward Beecher, which "involves God, his whole administration and his eternal kingdom, in the deepest dishonor that the mind of man or angel can conceive." TRUTH.

7.—It makes our Savior's sacrifice a perfect one. If the penalty of the law, according to the popular theory, is eternal suffering, then Christ has not met the demand, and there is no hope for any, dead or living; but, as the wages of sin is death,—(see reason 3,) then, in dying, he made full satisfaction, and we may be saved. Amen. Praise the Lord!

8.—This is the only effectual weapon with which to combat many of the great errors in the religious world, especially this last and greatest manifestation of the power and cunning of Satan,—Spiritualism.

9.—Without this truth, we can never understand, fully, what it is to be truly children of God. The strongest figure which is used to illustrate the moral condition of the child of God is death;—"Dead to sin;"—"Buried with him by baptism into death;"—"Crucified with Christ;"—"Dead indeed unto sin;" &c. Now explain these expressions by the popular theory that in death only the body dies, while the soul, the real man, unfettered, unloaded of its burden, lives on, freer, faster, with higher capacities of suffering or enjoying than before,—and what is the result? Simply, that in conversion the change is only external, no change inside; making religion a complete system of hypocrisy!! Can we avoid this conclusion? So we see it illustrated all over the land. But with the truth in our minds, these expressions have a power and meaning, that tells on men's hearts and lives, and Paul's "dead to sin" means the same as Peter's "ceased from sin," and John's "DOTH NOT commit sin,"—"cannot sin, because he is born of God." Amen.

The above are some of the reasons why I preach these truths; and, in conclusion, let me say,—in this last conflict with the powers of darkness,—in the last work of preparation for meeting our coming King,—we need the whole truth, that we may be wholly sanctified; and to be free from all error, that we may be found in that glorious church that will appear without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; and that we may sit down fully justified, and welcome to that glorious feast,—the marriage supper of the Lamb. Amen.

A Remembrance.

I knew an old man, a kind and very good man, who used to journey over the mountains and through the vallies of New England. His head was often wet with the dew of night, his limbs benumbed by the frosts of winter. His eye would grow dim at others' wo, his countenance brighten at others' joy. When he prayed—for he was a man mighty in prayer—you felt earth and heaven unite. When he spoke to the backslider, they felt their lost condition and fled to Jesus. The sinner that heard him, trembled and cried for mercy; he knew how to reach the most hardened. But the enemy overpowered him. His loved voice is hushed in death! and we are waiting with joyful anticipation the time when we shall greet Father Hastings in a land where there are no partings. Eternity alone will disclose all the good he accomplished.

"It is not the tear at this moment shed,
When the cold turf has just been laid o'er him,
That can tell how beloved was the friend that's fled,
Or how deep in our hearts we deplore him.
'Tis the tear through many a long day wept—
'Tis life's whole path o'ershaded;
'Tis the one remembered, fondly kept,
When all lighter griefs have faded.

Thus his memory, like some holy light,
Kept alive in our hearts, will improve them,
For worth shall look fairer, and truth more bright,
When we think how he lived but to love them.
And, as fresher flowers the sod perfume
Where buried saints are lying,
To our hearts shall borrow a sweet'ning bloom
From the image he left there in dying."

MARION A. COTTON.

Awake!

Sleep is to man, a state of insensibility. The world go on in their schemes; he knows it not. The cry of fire is raised; he is not awakened. Thunder and lightning may be in the clouds;—he is sound asleep. The winds may blow, the earthquake doth not awake him—insensible still. Christians may become insensible to all that is for their good. They may become insensible to the value of prayer, having no heart for it. They do not find much praise for God's mercies. Prayer goeth up, but their heart is not there. Talk of the judgment near, of soon beholding the Judge, of the separation that Jesus declares shall take place at his coming,—asleep and insensible. Talk of the groanings of the world at the sight of Jesus and his mighty angels,—still insensible. Talk of the sweetness of fellowship with God,—he awaketh not; and when asleep they dream of glories, but they may awake when the door is shut. The train with its passengers may have gone; too late, ah, too late! When are christians liable to sleep? When their temporal circumstances are all right; when their nests are well feathered. (There is little danger of sleeping when there is a bramble bush in the bed.) When all is downy, they can say, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry."

Dear christian friends, we are hastening on to scenes of vast moment. Awake from thy slumbers! the Master will soon appear. I see on earth evidence of his near approach. Hasten on thy armor then, and be ready to go in to the marriage of the Lamb. See the distress of nations. Can we, brethren and sisters, shut our eyes to these things and say—this meaneth nothing. Ah! Gabriel may speak next.

From your brother in hope,

W. C. STONE.

For the Crisis.

Life in Christ.

Life is the theme of the gospel. For this end Christ came into the world. "I am come that ye might have life." To the end that sinners might obtain that life the Gospels were written. "These are written, that ye might believe. . . . and that believing ye might have life through his name." John 20: 31. Then we see this life is in the Son of God, (1 John 5: 11) and to be secured by faith in him, and to be obtained by a resurrection and enjoyed in the world or age to come. John 5: 29; Luke 18: 30. Without faith eternal life cannot be obtained; then the opposite to life is death. Yet some say the wicked will live forever; then of course they will have everlasting life. God says "He that hath not the Son hath not life," &c.

This shall be the theme of my ministry, and I see nothing like it to awaken thought and produce conviction in the minds of men who will have it. I have seen the effect of it for the past six weeks, twelve miles north of this place, where I have preached four times. Many there have been made to rejoice in a risen and coming Savior. I baptized five last Tuesday, in the likeness of the Savior's death, that they may be in the likeness of his resurrection; and never did I realize so sensibly the presence of the Holy Ghost as then. Many others have obtained hope. Others acknowledge themselves sinners, and old saints can say "glory," while they look for that blessed hope. I am as ever, yours looking for the crown of life at the coming of Jesus, who is my resurrection and life, MATTHEW BATCHELOR.

Pownal, Vt.

For the Crisis.

"Glory to God!"

Yes, I like it! I love to hear it from a full soul, when the theme is solemn, earnest, full of gospel sentiment; when the great question of redemption, in any of its departments, inspires praise in the heart, with an understanding apprehension of the love and mercy of God, giving proof of sincerity, heartiness, and the reality of the feeling and expression, in the very sound, and certainty that the truth is so received as to produce a conception of the things of God, that must have firm, loud, strong, confirming declaration. But it is a solemn expression. God's name may be used in vain in that manner, as well as in others. Hence, a little care should be used, lest we indulge in irreverence, even in such joyful and solemn language as we have repeated. It is good in time of prayer at the proper point, for individuals, or the whole congregation to say, or shout "Amen," "Glory to God," or "Hallelujah,"—or use any corresponding expression, which may properly respond to the sentiment uttered; and this may be true also in the time of sermon, exhortation, or singing. It may aid the speaker, may show the sympathy of the church, prove refreshing to the people of God, and impressive to sinners; but with due regard to decency and order, for these elements are to appear in the religious worship of christian congregations—at the same time, with watchfulness to avoid confusion; for "God is not the author of confusion," "in the churches of the saints." But how will one "who occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen, at thy giving of thanks!" if, as it is with me, sometimes, he cannot understand what is said, for various noise, or from the incoherent vehemence of a dozen speakers,—can fix no sentiment or sentence upon the mind, long enough to assent or dissent,—not because it is an unknown tongue, but an "all tongue."

I like the response, when it is according to the word and spirit; and having been always accustomed to it, I find but little difficulty in classifying the various sounds which I am compelled to hear. I do not allow myself to get "tried all up," for when it proceeds boisterously, and beyond the control of reason, and an exhibition of sound sense, I just simply let it go, with a very generous don't care, till another time. "But we always have the spirit, and know the power of God!" No you don't, always! The spirit of God never produced that wild, unmeaning, vociferous rant, you and some others gave as a specimen of a powerful, spiritual, gospel-meeting for worship. "But we had the power!" You had your own power! and showed your own weakness! No doubt, the spirit of God does lead people to say Amen, shout, and sometimes under its power, the physical strength may give way; but when a meeting is turned from solemn and impressive prayers and exhortations, to the most odd and drawling colloquy,—strange, comical illustrations,—loud, rampant invective,—stories that will make people laugh,—the various names of Deity being mixed with it,—singing without sense, and from that to hopping and gibberish—a regular frolic,—and this all under the name of religion, the Holy Ghost, the power of God; I must demur, and with Bro. M. would strike up—

"Hark from the tombs"—.

Good christians may become wiser and better. A man will sometimes jump—he will have so much power, and good power too; but it will not be merely when some one or more are determined to have a time, "hit or miss," to make themselves and the cause ridiculous. C.

For the Crisis.

"To-Day."

BRO. GRANT:—I notice an article in the last Crisis with my name attached; and as I have sent you no such article, I suppose it is an extract of one published in the Advent Herald; to which paper I think it ought to have been credited, lest they should think I sent the same article to two papers, a thing which is not considered good etiquette.*

But there are some things in that article which I wish to amend. In the article I say, "In the Old Testament, we find the terms 'to-day' and 'this day' used more than fifty times, and with scarcely a single exception, always qualifying the time of speaking, promising, commanding, &c., and not the time of performing the commands in fulfilling the promises" This I would correct by saying, that, when "to-day" and "this day" are used in connection with commanding, promising, &c, they always qualify the time of giving those commands and promises.

I would also say that these phrases are not used so many times in connection with a promise or command as I said in my original article, much less three hundred times, as some have said. To make an argument of any force based upon the use of a word in other places, and by other authors, the word or phrase should be shown to be placed in a similar connection.

I wish now to quote some of those passages referred to that stand in connection with a command or promise, like the one in dispute. The question to be determined by them is, should "to-day" in Luke 23: 43, be punctuated so as to make it qualify the time of giving the promise, or the time of fulfilling the promise?

"Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments which I command thee this day.—Deut. 11: 8.

If you hearken diligently to my commands which I command thee this day.—11: 13.

If ye obey the commandments which I command thee this day.—11: 7.

If ye will not obey but turn aside out of the way which I command thee this day.—28.

To keep his commandments which I command thee this day.—13: 18.

To observe to do all these commands which I command thee this day.—15: 5.

If thou keep all these commandments, to do them which I command thee this day.—19: 9.

And Moses commanded the people, saying keep the commandments, which I command thee this day.—27: 1.

When ye be gone over Jordan, shalt thou set up these stones which I command thee this day.—27: 4. Query, shall they set up the stones this day, or did he command them that day?

And do his commands and his statutes which I command thee this day.—27: 16.

See, I have set before thee this day, life and good and death and evil.—30: 15.

In that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God.

I call heaven and earth to record this day against you.—30: 19.

Behold while I am alive with you this day, ye have rebelled against the Lord,—31: 27.

This passage is very much like the one in dispute. Put the comma before this day, it makes the rebellion on that day; but as it is placed after this day, (as I think it should be in Luke,) it makes Moses alive with them on that day, just as Jesus was to encourage by his promise, even in that late day.

So much for Moses. Perhaps common sense would like to change these commas, for they are all in just the position I would place them in Luke 23: 43.

Choose you this day whom ye will serve—Josh. 24: 15.

And blessed be thou which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood.—1 Sam. 25, 33.

The living, the living shall praise thee, as I do this day.—Isa. 38: 19.

Turn ye to the Strong-hold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day, I declare unto you that I will render double unto thee.—Zech. 9: 12.

To-day, if ye will hear his voice harden not your hearts.—Ps. 95: 7.

Wherefore as the Holy Ghost saith, to-day, if ye will hear his voice.—Heb. 3: 7.

While it is said to-day, if ye will hear his voice. To-day, after so long a time.—4: 7.

Thus Jesus said to the thief emphatically to-day, after so long a time, in this late hour, even now, I say unto thee, thou shalt be with me in that paradise."

Punctuation is a modern art, invented, says Quackenbos, by Manutius, a learned printer who flourished in Venice at the commencement of the sixteenth century. Its primary object is to show the writer's meaning. It always follows the sense we give to a passage, but does not make that sense. Greek and Latin have nothing to do with the punctuation of a piece of English composition. And the points in our Bible have no more authority than the opinions of a commentator upon the meaning of any passage. Besides, the punctuation of our Bible is not uniform and is very far from being inspired. The passage in Matt. 19: 28, is punctuated differently in different editions, according to the opinion of the editors of those editions upon the meaning of the word "regeneration."

Those who adhere to the present punctuation of Luke 23: 43, are obliged either to admit that Christ and the thief went to heaven on that day, which is contrary to the express words of Christ and the tenor of the New Testament, or to make Paradise mean something beside heaven, which I think is equally opposed to the Scriptures and the general voice of the church, Jewish tradition not excepted. "Paradise" and "thy kingdom" were evidently the same in the mind of Christ and the thief. Yours, &c., E. Crowell.

For the Crisis.

"I am He that Liveth and Was Dead; and Behold I am Alive Forevermore. Amen. And Have the Keys of Hell and of Death."

While meditating upon this language of Jesus, a few days ago, I could but think how much more reason we in our day have for strong faith in the promise of God, than did the disciples and followers of Christ, when as yet his promise was but a promise; and to doubtful, unbelieving, weak minded human nature, was, however they might hope or desire, as likely to fail as any thing yet future, and dependent upon man. Although they had been eye-witnesses of his power many times, yet when told by the Savior that he must die, and be raised the third day, poor unaided man could not comprehend the idea; and therefore could not have faith. And although told by him they loved, that if they were dead, yet if they believed they should live again, and that whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die;—though most welcome news to the poor dying man, yet, is it true? Can this good news be true? And notwithstanding all the reason that they had to believe that he was the Son of God, some of them could say,—"We trusted that it should be he that should redeem Israel." Another must put his fingers into the print of the nails, and thrust his hand into his side, or else he would not believe. And Peter, the ever ready, and never fearing Peter, could say, "I go a fishing; I guess the thing is finished, and like all earthly things has reached its end." And yet methinks that a sad, disheartening sorrow was felt by Peter, and a lingering hope that something would come of all this.

But to us how different do these things appear! We now hear that voice which had been hushed in death, saying; "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore." Here then is surely a foundation for our faith which need not be shaken, for he that said he should die and rise again the third day, has fulfilled his word, and we may ever trust, "that he liveth to make intercession for us." And as we have the witness that he holds the keys of death and the grave, we may safely trust, that, though called upon to die, if we believe in him, we shall live forever, even forever and ever. Help thou our unbelief, O God!

For the Crisis.

Be Generous.

I noticed an article in the Crisis headed, "The Lord's Work Must be Done, and I May be Dead;" a truth indeed, but how few think of it. People try to get all they can consume at present, and all they expect to need through a long life-time, and some thing to leave their children, (and profess to be looking for the Lord,) and, then if they have a little to spare they will give to the Lord; and it is a very little, generally.

Come, Brn. and Srs., do not be so selfish; in the name of the Lord give something of your abundance to the cause of Christ. Remember the sacrifice that has been made for you, and can you not sacrifice something for him who has done so much for you? How did you get your wealth? Worked for it! I suppose some of you did, perhaps hard and honestly, but who prospered you? The Lord; and must be careful of it certainly, but not so much so that you are afraid to lend him a little.

Visit the widow and fatherless in their affliction, and if you can leave without giving them something, if needed, your heart must be harder than adamant. Remember, God has intrusted you with what you have, you are his steward, do not try to excuse yourself, you will have to give an account of your stewardship. There is a reckoning day coming. Come, walk up like men and women of God. Oh! do not be covetous. Remember the poor, this cold winter. Do your duty!

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 13, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER EIGHT.

Having examined the texts in the Old Testament that are rendered hell, and found no proof that they refer to a place of future punishment, or consciousness between death and the resurrection, but in all cases mean simply the grave; we now pass to the examination of the new.

There are three words in the New Testament which are rendered hell; to wit, hades, gehenna, and tartarus.

Hades is found eleven times, gehenna twelve times, and tartarus once. When hell is from hades, it never refers to the future punishment of the wicked, but means simply the grave, as does sheol, the corresponding word in the Old Testament. The word is found in the following passages:—Matt. 12: 23; 16: 18; Lk. 10: 15; 16: 23; Acts 2: 27, 31; 1 Cor. 15: 55; Rev. 1: 18; 6: 8; 20: 13–14. (Our readers will do well to mark these verses.)

We will now give the theological definition of hades.—"To be deprived or shut out from the light and glory of God forever."—Let us apply this definition to Acts 2: 27, 31. In these passages, referring to Christ while in the grave, it is said, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," (hades)—"He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, (hades) neither his flesh did see corruption." Did Christ go to the place where wicked men are punished and "shut out from the light and glory of God forever?" When we give the true meaning of the word hades, which is grave, as in 1 Cor. 15: 55, all is plain. Christ's soul, or life, was not left in hades, the grave, but on the third day, God "raised him from the dead." Says Jesus to John, upon the isle of Patmos, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, amen; and have the keys of hell, (hades,) and of death." We cannot believe for one moment that Christ went to the theological hell, and spent three days and nights among the wicked in torment.

Says Dr. Kitto, in the Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature,—"Hades means literally that which is in darkness." Job, in describing the state of man in death, calls it "a land of darkness, as darkness itself." See Job 10: 18–22.

Kitto says,—"that a careful examination will lead to the conclusion that no sanction to an intermediate state is afforded by these passages where hades occurs, but that they "denote the grave . . . both of the righteous and wicked."

Says Geo. Campbell, a Presbyterian commentator, of Scotland,—"In my judgment, hades ought never, in Scripture, to be rendered hell. . . Sheol (the corresponding Hebrew word,) signifies the state of the dead in general, without regard to goodness."

Moses Stuart says, "Sheol" means "grave, sepulchre, under world, or state of the dead." Again he says,—"Hades means grave, sepulchre, depositing of the dead."

Hell is an old Saxon word which signified to cover; hence when a thing was helled, it was covered up. This word was appropriately employed to represent the place where the dead were laid, and buried; but we repeat, hades and sheol, in the Bible, never refer to the future punishment of the wicked, or a place of consciousness between death and the resurrection.

We now pass to the examination of the word gehenna, which is found twelve times in the New Testament, and occurs in the following passages:—Matt. 5: 22, 29, 30; 10: 28; 18: 9; 23: 15, 33; Mk. 9: 43, 45, 47; Lk. 12: 5; Jas. 3: 6.

"Gehenna," says a learned author, "does not occur in the Septuagint Greek of the Old Testament, nor in any classic author in the world. It was understood by the Jews, and employed only in discourses with them." The word gehenna refers to the "Valley of Hinnom," where they offered sacrifices to Moloch, and kept fires burning to consume the filth which was cast into this place. When the Savior was speaking to the Jews on the subject of the future punishment of the wicked, he illustrates their destruction, by referring to the valley of Hinnom, where they burnt up their filthy matter. No one ever thought of casting a thing there for preservation. And in order to make the point strong indeed, and show that no portion of the wicked man will be preserved, the Savior says "the fire shall not be quenched." Or, as it is expressed in Matt. 3: 12, "He will burn up the chaff (the wicked) with unquenchable fire." If the fire could be quenched, then the chaff would not be "burnt up," for we never speak of quenching a fire, unless we intend to prevent some part of the burning substance from being wholly consumed. Whatever is cast into an unquenchable fire must of necessity be burnt up; unless it be something upon which fire has no effect, in which case, no suffering could be produced. Had the word gehenna been fully translated it would have been rendered, "The fire of the valley of Hinnom." This place where filth was burnt up, was presented to the Jews to illustrate the future punishment of the wicked. As the carcasses and filth were burnt up in "the fire of the valley of Hinnom;" so are the wicked to be finally "destroyed, and that without remedy." Prov. 29: 1.

For the meaning of the word Tartarus, rendered hell, in 2 Pet. 2: 4, see articles from Bro. H. L. Hastings in Nos. 6 and 8 of the present vol. of the Crisis, in which it is clearly shown that it means, "in a physical sense, the bounds or verge of the material creation." The passage in Peter is the only one where the word occurs, and is employed to represent the locality of the fallen angels; but has nothing to do with the future punishment of the wicked. The use of the word among the ancients, and its application to the demons, or angels that sinned, show most clearly in connection with facts mentioned in the Scripture, that tartarus refers, as Suidas remarks, to "the place in the clouds" or "in the air." The articles of Bro. Hastings, to which we have referred, show conclusively, as expressed in his own words, that,—

"Evil angels are cast to Tartarus.
But evil angels are in our atmosphere.
Therefore Tartarus is in our atmosphere."

We have now noticed all the words rendered hell, but find nothing to favor the popular theological definition, which makes it a place where the wicked suffer eternal misery; hence we conclude that the Bible hell, and the theological, are quite different. In which shall we believe?

Question.

FROM JOHN GIBSON.

Bro. Grant:—"As it is believed and argued by many, that the spirit and soul are both one, I wish you to answer the following questions.

1. Did the Spirit of Christ go and preach to the spirits in prison, while his body lay in Joseph's tomb?"

Ans. We think not; but the Holy Spirit, which was employed by our heavenly Father in raising Christ from the dead, did go and preach through Noah, "while the ark was a preparing."

2. "If Christ's soul and spirit are both one, and his soul was not to be left in hell, sheol or hades, and came from there at his resurrection, did not the whole of Christ, soul, body and spirit go to heaven when he ascended?"

Ans. We think so.

3. "If so, could Paul be consistent, in desiring 'to depart and to be with Christ,' unless he expected to go to heaven when he departed?"

Ans. Not if he expected to depart and be with Christ at death.

4. "Are we not to understand by Heb. 4: 12, that the soul and spirit are divided asunder by the word of God?"

Ans. Yes.

"A Request."

A brother asks our opinion in relation to Heb. 6: 14,—"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." He wishes to know whether it is right for christians to marry unconverted people? We think this passage of Scripture is very plain, and needs no comment to make the meaning more obvious.

As Paul says, "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" We have yet to learn that the Lord ever sanctioned the union of his children, with the unconverted, in the marriage relation. Let all take heed to this Scripture, if they wish the approbation of our Father in heaven; for those who have disregarded it, have "pierced themselves through with many sorrows," and entered into a state of bondage, that is often of the most disagreeable nature. Please the Lord, if you lose every friend on earth. Remember, "The friendship of the world is enmity with God; whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." Jas. 4: 4.

For the Crisis.

Isaiah 6: 1-5, compared with John 12: 41.

Some of our esteemed christian brethren understand that these passages prove that our blessed Lord Jesus is Jehovah. The argument is, that, as the apostle says the prophet "saw his (Christ's) glory," and the prophet declares that he saw the glory of "Jehovah of Hosts;" therefore Christ is Jehovah. It must be admitted that if the prophet saw the glory of but one person, or being, on that occasion, the conclusion would appear to be a logical inference from the passages.

This, however, does not appear to be the fact according to the testimony of the prophet. He saw Adonay and he, in some sense, saw Jehovah. The Hebrew word in the first verse is not Jehovah, but Adonay. In the third verse it is Jehovah. He, like Stephen, (Acts 7: 56) saw the Son (Adonay) and (Jehovah) the Father. But as the Savior himself declared "no man hath seen God at any time," John 1: 18, Isaiah's words must be reconciled with this positive declaration, and the question arises, In what sense did the prophet see Jehovah?

The sacred Scriptures appear to give a satisfactory answer to this question.

Our Lord having affirmed that "no man hath seen God at any time," adds, "The only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." John 1: 18. So the apostle, 2 Cor. 4: 6,—"God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined on our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Now as God has declared that "there shall no man see me and live," Ex. 33: 20, must we not understand that the prophet saw the glory of God (Jehovah) in the face of Jesus Christ; or Adonay which signifies Lord?

Jesus Christ is "the image of the invisible God," "the brightness of his glory." He therefore said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." The Son, however, is not the identical Father, any more than an image is the identical original.

Moreover, in the 8th verse the plural word "us" is used, denoting the two persons referred to in the previous verses.—"Who will go for us?"

The glory of Christ consists not only in the excellency of his own divine nature, as "the only begotten of the Father," but also in his being the grand medium of the manifestation of the Father's underived and independent glory, to his intelligent creatures. This glory of our blessed Lord the prophet saw. See also Ps. 110: 1.—Jehovah said unto Adonay. Here are two distinct beings, as the dying martyr saw. Acts 7: 56.

Mr. MacWhorter, of Yale College, has published a volume to prove two things. First, that the Hebrew word Jehovah, signifying "I AM," should be Yahveh, signifying, "I will be." Second, that Yahveh or Jehovah is Christ.

To test the correctness of the term Jehovah, he proposes to "substitute the English I AM, as an equivalent for Lord" where "the latter occurs in the Old Testament." "This (he affirms) is a perfectly valid test, and should such a rendering seem unmeaning or unworthy, in any connection in which it is made to stand, this fact of itself would afford a strong presumption that we have not arrived at the true significance of the term." Page 14.

Let us now apply this "perfectly valid test," to determine whether or not the learned author is correct in affirming that Yahveh or Jehovah is Christ, and substitute the word Christ where the word Lord in capitals occurs, which, in the Hebrew, is usually, Jehovah or Yahveh.

Ps. 110: 1. "The Christ said unto my Lord, (Adonay, i. e. Christ,) sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." Here we see the rendering is "unmeaning and unworthy;" and that the Father, and not Christ, is Yahveh or Jehovah. The dying martyr saw Jesus Christ "on the right hand of God." Acts 7: 56. Did he see two Jehovahs, or is the Father not Jehovah? Isa. 42: 6. "I the Christ have called thee in righteousness, and will give thee (Christ) for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles."

Isa. 53: 6–10. "The Christ hath laid on him (Christ) the iniquities of us all." Ps. 40. "I (Christ) have preached righteousness in the great congregation, O Christ thou knowest." Isa. 53: 10. "It pleased the Christ to bruise him," i. e. Christ. Ps. 2: 2. "The rulers take counsel against the Christ and against his anointed" (Christ.) See also ver. 6. Isa. 61: 1. "The Christ hath anointed me (Christ) to preach good tidings to the meek," &c. See also Micah 5: 4. He of Bethlehem (i. e. Christ) "shall stand and feed in the name of the Christ his God." See also Isa. 55: 5, and other passages.

This we see is all "unmeaning and unworthy," according to the learned author's own "perfectly valid test;" demonstrating Christ is not Jehovah or Yahveh. Isa. 63: 16, positively declares; "O Jehovah (or Yahveh) thou art our Father."

The fallacious impression that we dishonor the Savior, if we withhold from him the highest possible divine nature, prevents many from believing his testimony, that the Father is "the only true God." John 17: 1, 4. The writer was, for a time, the subject of such an impression. Having found at the Cross that deliverance from the guilt and dominion of sin, which reading, prayer, and resolutions had failed to remove; his love abounded towards his precious Redeemer; but not "in all knowledge." Phil. 1: 9. He has since learned, like Peter, that all regard for "the Son of the Blessed," (who delights to honor his Father) which is contrary to truth, will only meet his rebuke. Matt. 16: 22.

It plainly appears from 1 Cor. 2: 11, that "the Spirit of God is no more a distinct person from God, than the spirit of a man is a distinct person from the man. It would be an anomaly of a most extraordinary character; if there was an infinite intelligent person in the universe, to whom no prophet, priest, apostle, or saint of the sacred Scriptures, ever offered any direct prayer or praise!! See the true doxology, Rev. 5: 13. The Spirit of God is "pourd out" or "shed forth," Acts 2: 17, 33; terms inapplicable to personality.

For the honor and glory of the ever blessed God, our Father; "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," I submit this brief essay to your candid and serious consideration.

Finally, "forbearing one another in love;" let our chief concern be to possess the holy, the humble, the benevolent spirit of Him who has loved us and given himself for us, walking daily in his imitable footsteps; "that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

Yours for the truth, in Christian love,
Henry Grew.

Tobacco.

MY EXPERIENCE IN THE USE OF TOBACCO.

BY F. H. B.

Continued.

Once I left off for a month, but wanted it more at the expiration of that time than I did for the first few days. It was a bad step; the reason is obvious. If I had resolved never to have used it again, I should have banished it from my mind forever. But stating a definite time, during which I would abstain, and continually looking forward to the point when it should expire, kept me in a fever of excitement; and instead of diminishing, served to increase the appetite. Not understanding the philosophy of this at the time, led me to suppose I could never leave it off. I thought my case was desperate, and as I was not fully conscious of its injurious effects, concluded I would use it freely, and torment myself no more by an attempted course of abstinence. This resolve I made good for many long years, using it freely, without any compunctions of conscience.

That which would most effectually set me to thinking was to come in contact with a man about two thirds drunk, the tobacco juice issuing from each corner of his much abused mouth, at the same time, smoking an old nasty pipe,—and such an ill savor! It was like the pernicious exhalations that arise from the putrifying bodies on the battle field; or, the unwholesome effluvia which exhale from an old charnel house. It was unendurable. "O Lord!" I have exclaimed, "what is man?" How disgustingly filthy! What a sallow visage—and such a breath! how unearthly! I would taint every thing with which I came in contact. When conversing with one of these "things" in the shape of a man, I have actually stepped back step by step a number of feet—followed up as fast as I retreated—to get rid of the awful breath, which, in five minutes, would scent a large room with such an odor as cannot be found in earth or hell beside. His mouth resembled the orifice of a volcanic mountain, vomiting smoke and filth. Indeed, one of the worst features of this habit is, the constant expectoration. And to confirm the opinion, of that embarrassed feeling, under which tobacco chewers and smokers constantly labor, you have but to remark the fact, that they almost invariably eject their filth into some corner, or under the stove, or behind the bed. If they would spit where it could be reached by a long handle mop, for no decent person would wish to get very near it, it would atone in part for the filthy practice. If the ladies were not the most patient creatures in the world—I mean those that don't use tobacco—there would be civil war in less than twenty-four hours. How often it is the case that a lady is necessitated to take a seat in the cars where one of these gentlemen (?) has been sitting, who has fairly drenched the floor with tobacco juice. No wonder that such men should often receive a reproachful look from the fairer sex, which is as much as to say, "No gentleman would be guilty of such a trick!"

But in returning to the point I will say, that what finally determined my mind in relation to leaving off this evil habit, was the conviction that its influence was stupefying, that it rendered one extremely dull. When I would attempt to read, it was with great difficulty that I could keep my eyes open. It was especially so during the evening. I was almost senseless. It seemed to me that I was almost a fool, that I should never have another thought in my life. Thinking it might be occasioned by the use of tobacco, I resolved I would abstain from it, that I would know in regard to the matter.

I commenced my work of reform, of total abstinence, with a determination to give it a fair trial. Every week that has passed, has strengthened my convictions in relation to its injurious effects, and also, my determination to give it a severe letting alone. Since leaving it off, I have become more fleshy and more healthy. I can read and study in the evening as well as the day time, without being afflicted with excessive dullness. I have seen no occasion for taking medicine, as I did before for many years.

I am fully convinced that its use affects both mind and body. It is the cause of both moral and physical evil, and may be regarded as an active agent in giving birth to many ailments, that afflict fallen humanity. I am now persuaded, that in nineteen cases out of twenty, the hemorrhoids are occasioned by the use of tobacco, tea and coffee. The former may be, and undoubtedly is, the most pernicious, because it contains the most poison, but each of the above articles has an influence to increase the morbid condition of the system, which often results in the above difficulty. In almost every case where the person is afflicted, it will be found that they are in the habit of using one or more of the above articles, or have sometime during life. The constant expectoration consequent on the use of tobacco, deprives of a large amount of saliva, which nature designed should be mixed with food during mastication, and thus become an agent in softening and dissolving the aliment, preparatory to deglutition. Again, the saliva by moistening the cavity and fauces of the mouth, serves to moderate the thirst, but by ejecting it, as in the case of smoking and chewing, the throat becomes excessively dry, a morbid thirst is produced, that can only be satisfied by the free use of drink, which has a tendency to dilute the fluids of the stomach to that degree, as to debilitate digestion. By a constant and successful dilution of the fluids, the organs of digestion become enfeebled, which results in dyspepsia, constipation, hemorrhoids, &c. The eye becomes heavy, the countenance sallow, the hand trembles, the powers of mind impaired, irascible emotions often followed by delirium, which are some of the results. Some persons who are known to be inveterate smokers, suffer similarly to a man whose brain has been affected by the prolonged use of intoxicating drinks; the disease is called "delirium tremens." It is often attended by a springing and hallooing during the hours of sleep, attended with a fear that some person or persons are endeavoring to injure. Persons who use tobacco freely often feel on rising in the morning like an individual who has taken a severe cold which has settled in every part of the system. Young men feel old, and it takes two or three hours in the morning "to get"—as the phrase is—"limbered up." The most reasonable excuse, offered among many as a palliation for continuing this filthy habit, and the only one that the writer of this article ever thought of offering, is, simply, because he loved it. How rational! Who can doubt it?

A Good Opportunity to Invest Money.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—There is one of the Lord's servants who needs help; and I thought it would be a good time for some of the stewards of the Lord's money to invest the same in expectation of reaping a reward in the world to come.

I have received a letter from Bro. Moulton, and learn that he is very low, and it is doubtful about his being able to be out again this winter. Now, brethren and sisters, Bro. Moulton needs your prayers; and while you pray the Lord to feed the poor, &c., remember that the Lord works by means, and that your faith may be perfected by works. Bro. Moulton is one of the Lord's worthy poor, and I hope and pray that he may be remembered by the church. Letters should be directed, "D. E. Moulton, Ware, Mass."

For the Crisis.

A Response to "Carrie."

My Dear Sister:—Though entirely unacquainted,—your communication in the Crisis of Dec. 30th being my only source of knowledge that such an one as yourself existed,—yet that short note touched a sympathetic chord in my heart, and causes me to ask you a few questions, in order to stir up your mind to a remembrance of the right and the cause of the present evil.

Your case is indeed to be deprecated; but I beseech you, let some emotion of gratitude now find place in your heart, that yet there is sufficient efficacy in that blood that was shed on Calvary, for the expiation of human guilt, to extricate you from this sable mist the enemy may have thrown around you to obscure your pathway and cause your feet to stumble on the dark mountains of unbelief.

Within my brief pilgrimage, I have frequently noticed that when a fellow pilgrim became so enveloped in a maze as to be unable to discern where they were, that a retrospective REFLECTION was often the first means of relieving their perplexity and confusion, and causing their pathway to become clear and lucid. When a traveler has lost his way in the thicket and is persuaded, if he proceed, he shall never be able to find the right path, (if a man of wisdom) will he not stop and reflect where and when he made the FIRST misstep? If not able to discern the first misstep, will he not bethink himself of those signs and objects that were proof invincible he was in the right way? Will he not look back to the place where he KNEW he was in the right path, and immediately hasten to retrace his footsteps?

It appears, my dear Carrie, that you have KNOWN what it was to start in the right path. You had such evidence of pardoned sin as caused you to "rejoice with joy unspeakable." Now, what or where was your first misstep? Where did this dark maze commence gathering its dark folds around you? When Christ received you into his vineyard, the understanding was that you should do whatsoever he commanded you. Now when the Spirit prompted you to perform certain duties and bear certain crosses, did you hesitate until the Enemy persuaded you it was not so very ESSENTIAL after all,—that other christians did not perform the same, &c.? If so, those steps must be retraced. If the time has passed, and circumstances changed, so that it is quite impracticable to perform the things that were commanded you seven years since, penitently crave forgiveness for the sin of omission, and engage from this time forth to do whatsoever he shall command you, and I assure you he will give you employment. No "hard times" is any hindrance to his receiving laborers into his vineyard. The harder and more perilous the times, the more help is needed.

If not conscious of leaving undone those things you ought to have done, as in the church formula, have you DONE those things you ought not to have done? Though it were something the world might denominate "trivial," yet if the Spirit demanded concession and you refused to "confess your faults" as publicly as they were committed, the Spirit was grieved, and took its departure, only to return when a place is prepared in your heart by casting out that which grieved it away.

I have often thought of the quaint, yet truthful remark made several years since by a minister. Said he,—"You will always find Jesus Christ right where you left him." Thus I have ever found it in my experience. When I have attempted to pass the cross without bearing it, I have ever found it necessary to retrace my steps and meekly bow my neck to the yoke of the Savior in order to receive his smiles.

But perhaps you do not recollect any thing in particular that caused the Spirit to take its exit. Well, if after prayerful reflection you discern no particular sin of omission or commission that caused your feet to slip, but a kind of general, confused impression that you are all wrong, without knowing where the wrong exists,—that you are enshrouded in such darkness it is useless to try to get right, or to gain the "light of life" again; KNOW this to be the device of our common Enemy to defraud you of that peace that is like a river, and to obscure that "light" which "is sown for the righteous."

I have ever found the following a safe criterion by which to discriminate between the spirit of the "Accuser of the brethren," and that which was to reprove the world of sin. The Holy Spirit is an enlightening spirit. When it reproves, we understand for what it reproves. Not like the unwise and unreasonable parent who severely chastens his child that is quite unconscious wherein it has offended.

While the spirit of the Accuser tells us we are all wrong, it does not let us know what or where the wrong exists; but always discourages the effort to get right,—says its of no use,—have tried and failed again and again,—that I am so organized I cannot be religious, with a hundred other excuses framed by the father of lies; while God's Spirit prompts us to "try, try again."

But lest I weary you I will close, hoping I may soon hear from you again through our family medium—the Crisis. I think it a favorable omen that you have spoken out. Speak again. "Speaking may relieve you." Your "greatest desire is to be a true christian." Well, God desires it; angels desire it, and the church desires it. Then what hinders? God grant you that decided energy of the prodigal to say, "I will arise and go to my father," is the prayer of your affectionate friend,

Beulah.

Grieving the Spirit.

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

Bro. Grant:—As the leading idea for a few thoughts I take the above quotation. The question naturally arises, how may we grieve the Spirit? We have only to look into our hearts and see if we have its fruits, to know whether we are grieving it or not. If we have love, joy, peace, long-suffering, and all its other fruits, we may be sure that we are not grieving it; but if these are lacking, we may be sure that we are committing some sin, or omitting some duty, and thereby grieving the Spirit. I know of no better way to avoid this, than to be filled with it. And what is the fullness of the Spirit? Is it to be full of doctrines, theories, and speculations? We often hear the quotation from Christ's words,—"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." But can we suppose that merely reading the word, or committing it to memory, is what is meant by the expression—"be filled with the Spirit?" If so, then the infidel and caviler may have the Spirit, for they read it.

Those who have felt the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost, know what it is to be filled with the Spirit; and the word alone will not satisfy them. And if we want to enjoy this fullness, we must pray for it. I think many have erroneous views upon this subject. We often hear the scripture quoted, "It is the promise of the Father, which he would send in the fullness of time." But this does not exempt us from asking for it. We know the church was once baptized with it, but it was in answer to prayer, and I doubt whether it was ever given to any individual but in answer to prayer, not even to Christ himself; for it is said of him, that when he was baptized he prayed, and the Holy Spirit descended upon him. The baptism of the Spirit was the inauguration of the new dispensation, and may be compared to the introduction of the water into Boston, or any other city. That was a great day, when the gates were opened, and the clear Cochituate rushed into the main arteries and veins leading through every street and lane in the city, thereby giving the inhabitants an opportunity to quench their thirst. But if it is ever so abundant, we shall be thirsty still, unless we draw from the fountain.

God is a Sovereign as well as a Giver; and if his blessings are not worth asking for, they are not worth having. Those who wait for the witness of the Spirit will wait in vain unless they earnestly pray for it. I conclude, then, that it is the duty of every christian to pray for the Spirit for themselves and others.

Yours &c., D. N. S.

DEATH AND LIFE.

BY LUCY HOOPER.

Not unto thee, O pale and radiant Death!
Not unto thee, though every hope be past,
Though life's first, sweetest stars may shine no more,
Nor earth again one cherished dream restore,
Or from the bright sun of the future cast
Aught, aught of joy on me.

Yet unto thee, O monarch robed and crown'd
And beautiful in all thy sad array,
I bring no incense, though the heart be chill,
And to the eyes, that tears alone may fill,
Shines not as once the wonted light of day.

Still upon another shrine my vows
Shall all be duly paid, and though thy voice
Is full of music to the pining heart,
And woos one to that pillow of calm rest,
Where all Life's dull and restless thoughts depart,
Still not to thee, O Death!

I pay my vows, though now to me thy brow
Seems crowned with roses of the summer prime,
And to the aching sense thy voice would be,
O Death! O death! of softest melody,
And gentle ministers alone were thine,
Still I implore thee not.

But thou, O Life! O Life! the searching test
Of the weak heart! to thee I bow:
And if the fire upon the altar shrine
Descend, and soothe each glowing hope of mine,
Still may my heart as now
Turn not from that dread test.

But let me pay my vows to thee, O Life!
And let me hope that from that glowing fire
There yet may be redeemed a gold more pure
And bright, and eagle thoughts to mount and soar
Their flight the higher,
Released from earthly hope or earthly fear.

This, this, O Life! be mine.
Let others strive thy glowing wreaths to bind—
Let others seek thy false and dazzling gleams,
To me their light went out on early streams,
And faded were thy roses in my grasp,
No more, no more to bloom.

Yet as the stars, the holy stars of night,
Shine out when all is dark,
So would I, cheered by hopes more purely bright
Tread still the thorny path whose close is light,
If, but at last, the tossed and weary bark
Gain the sure haven of her final rest.

DEBT AND GRACE,

As Related to the Doctrine of a Future Life. By C. F. Hudson.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"The contents show profound learning, and a philosophic grapple with the subject. —Christian Advocate and Journal.

"We have here a work surpassing in elaborateness and completeness the most of modern theological productions. . . The author is mild and candid in the statement of his views, correct in his representations of others, and exceedingly full and impartial in his representations of the various phases of belief and conjecture that have prevailed, both among philosophers and Christian writers, from the Fathers down to the present time. . . . It will attract the attention of leaders in religious thought. Far broader in its views than Beecher's "Conflict of Ages," more scriptural and thorough, though less impressive and eloquent, it will probably evoke as much criticism and as greatly disturb the stream of religious controversy."—Zion's Herald.

"This is an able work in defence of the doctrine that the wicked are to be annihilated and the righteous only are to be immortal. The author is very elaborate in discussing the philosophy, exegesis, and history of the subject. The practical industry and wide research that are exhibited, are quite unusual in our American writers. The candor of his statements and reasoning is also admirable. . . . The volume may deserve the attention of ministers, because it is the most able and complete exhibition of a view which is far more likely to make converts in the future than Universalism. . . . The entire subject of future punishment needs a new discussion by persons of eminent scholarship, vigorous thought, and genuine piety."—Congregational Herald.

"When we shall have time to do so, we will faithfully review this annihilation theory. But for the present, let us say, that the work embodies a great amount of information in the history of theology, and abounds in powerful arguments against the dogma of endless punishment."—Christian Freeman.

"It is a work with which no one who feels an interest in the subject can afford to dispense, whatever may be his views. . . . . . It is not merely a work of learning; it is full of thought; it everywhere bears the stamp of an acute and vigorous intellect. . . . It will be regarded by those capable of appreciating it as one of the most valuable contributions to our theological literature which has appeared for many years." —A Reader.

"I believe the work is to excite a great deal of interest, to meet the mind of the religious world just where it is greatly exercised, and to lead to important results through the discussions it may provoke."—F. D. Huntington, D. D.

From Eld. Ira Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—Brother Hiram Bishop is prostrated by a paralytic shock, is helpless and very poor; his wife is also in feeble health. They are entirely dependent upon the charity of a cold world; and he wishes me to make an appeal to the brethren, through the Crisis, in his behalf.

Domestic Summary.

THE MORMON WAR—KANSAS AFFAIRS.

Washington, Jan. 7.

(Herald correspondence.) General Scott is busily engaged with the Secretary of War in arranging the campaign against the Mormons to be commenced in the Spring. Orders are issued and will be dispatched immediately for the first cavalry and the 6th infantry, now in Kansas, and the 7th infantry, now in Texas, to hold themselves in readiness to march by the first of April to reinforce the army in Utah. Troops from the Pacific side will also be ordered. The War Department has determined on sending immediately large reinforcements to the army now serving in Utah. This force will consist of four full regiments which will be composed of both cavalry and infantry, with two light batteries of artillery. It is expected that they concentrate at Fort Leavenworth and take up their line of march at an early day.

IMPORTANT FROM KANSAS.

Quindaro, Kansas, Monday, Dec. 28, 1857.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

Peace has been declared in the southeast. All the Free State prisoners in Fort Scott (arrested under the Rebellion Act) have been set at liberty; and all the Missourians, soon after hearing that "Jim Lane" was in their vicinity, suddenly left for home. The Free State forces have, therefore, dispersed, and Lane arrived in Lawrence on Saturday evening. When the last detachment of U. S. troops reach Fort Scott, they will find peace restored, and Lane will be attending to his usual business in Doniphan and Lawrence.

A story has just been received here from Independence, that there is another requisition out for Gen. Lane, charging him with high treason. It is not generally accredited. Any such movement would inflame to an unprecedented degree the public excitement now existing throughout the Territory.

At the latest accounts from Gen. Lane the U. S, troops had not molested, and the Missourians had kept out of the way.

Three more companies of dragoons passed here last night, on the Fort Scott road. Probably they are going to the scene of the difficulties. A. D. R.

MOVEMENTS OF UTAH TROOPS.

St. Louis, Jan. 8.

The Republican has just received a letter from Fort Kearney, of 23d ult., stating that Col. Johnston was at Fort Bridger Nov. 26. Col. Cook with his whole command had also arrived. The grass had all been burnt, and the animals were dying at the rate of a hundred a day.

The Mormons are fortifying all the passes to Salt Lake City.

A letter dated at the camp of Col. Cooke's command while en route, makes no mention of being molested by the Mormons. The report that 200 of the troops had been massacred is therefore entirely false.

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, Jan. 6.

The steamer Atlantic, from Liverpool 23d ult., arrived at this port this afternoon.

Further attempts to launch the Leviathan were postponed until the spring tides at the commencement of January. The hydraulic power was to be more than doubled. The steamer remained even and fair on the ways, and at high tide had nearly six feet of water under her.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

In London on the 19th the funds were quite buoyant, under the favorable returns of the banks, and money was easy at 8 1-2 per cent. for the best paper in the discount market, and at 4 to 6 per cent. on the Stock Exchange.

At Hamburg, a further recovery of confidence was reported, and the rate of discount for the best paper receded to between five and six per cent.

FRANCE.

Commercial affairs in Paris had slightly improved.

GERMANY.

The intelligence from Germany still represents the financial embarrassments as very great, although it was thought that the crisis was decidedly approaching its termination.

NAPLES.

The Neapolitan government has declared the steamer Cagliari to be a fair prize of war. The Minister of Foreign Affairs had published a statement supporting this view. The English prisoners are included in the impeachment, and are to be tried immediately.

An earthquake took place on the night of the 17th throughout the whole kingdom of Naples, but its effects were most severe in the towns of Salermo, Potenza and Nola. At Salermo the walls of the houses were bent from top to bottom. Numerous villages were half destroyed. In the province of Basilicati, and on the main land, the dead, says the dispatch, are reckoned at several thousand. This is considered an exaggeration. The authorities had erected huts for the houseless families. The city of Naples experienced three violent shocks, and the population had encamped in the open country. The northern ports were exempt.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, Jan. 10.

The Cunard steamship Africa, Capt. Shannon, which sailed from Liverpool about 2.30 P. M., on the 20th ult., arrived at this port about 9 o'clock this morning.

INDIA.

Lucknow had been relieved. Our authority says that the relief was achieved with a loss of only four officers killed and forty wounded.

Reinforcements were pouring into India, and all alarm for the garrisons and outposts had ceased.

Twenty-four inferior members of the Royal family, and an influential rebel chief had been executed at Delhi.

PORTUGAL.

The epidemic at Lisbon continued to decline.

SWEDEN.

The crisis continued to be severely felt at Stockholm. The failures amounted to upwards of thirty.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Peace Dale, R. I., Dec. 23d, 1857, Sister Susan Rose, aged thirty-two years.

Sr R. was formerly member of a Baptist Church in this vicinity; but for three or four years past has identified herself with those who are looking for that "Blessed Hope." Consumption terminated her brief career. After

"Life's fitful fever she sleeps well
That blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep."

A husband, three small children, and the church, mourn her loss; but not as those who have no hope.

Eld. E. Bellows spoke the words of consolation on the occasion, Dec. 25, from Rev. 14: 13. The discourse was timely and appropriate.

J. T. Dixon.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

:o:

The Lord willing, I will preach at
Whetstone, Crawford Co., Jan. 10th.
Delaware, Delaware Co., Jan. 17th.
Caledona, Crawford Co., Jan. 24th.

It is expected that each of the above named appointments will commence on Saturday, at 11 o'clock, A. M. Evenings, as much earlier in the week as the brethren shall think best. Please write and let me know what evening of the week preceding the Sunday of the appointments you wish me to commence. P. O. address, North Fairfield, Huron Co., O.

J. M. Judson.

Conference.

There will be a Conference holden on the 2d Saturday of each month, in Orrington, Me., at the Advent Chapel. Brethren in the ministry will please remember these meetings.

I. Damman.

I will hold meetings as follows:
Collinsville, Thursday, Dec. 17th.
Lovely Street, Friday, Dec. 18th.

WATCH-NIGHT REFLECTIONS.

Stay! fold thy swiftly gliding wings,
  Pause in thy flight, O Time!
And let me question of the past
  In the solemn midnight chime.
Years, that with change of light and shade
  Passed o'er me, where are ye?
"Gone," knell-like voices answer back,
  "Gone to eternity!"

What record have ye borne before
  To that dread trial hour?
What witness will ye bear me there?
  To have a fearful power.
"A long, dark page of murmurings
  Against the Hand Divine,—
Of blessings scorned—a heart that dared
  To question and repine.

Of proud rebellion 'gainst the love
  That pleasing ill withheld,—
Of whispered warning oft,—the heart
  Refusing still to yield.
Of lost, lost hours, time's golden sands
  Thrown heedlessly away,
Or wasted in pursuits of earth,
  As false and vain as gay."

And is this all, O vanished years!
  Wrote ye not one bright line?
Ye have, my soul, the midnight hour
  Heard that deep vow of thine.
Enough! I stay thee not, O Time!
  Upraise thy wing, pass on,
And bear that vow, renewed again,
  Before the Eternal Throne.

God of my life! thou first and true,
  My life, my soul, I give
For thee,—thou only good and kind,
  For thee to die or live.
Or few or more years, days, and hours,
  Fly on till all are gone;
O Time! thy moment brightest, best
  Will tell life's journey done.

Pencilings by the Way.

MY DEAR SISTER:—I rejoice in that you are enabled to see more clearly what is your high privilege, and that with increasing faith you are enabled to cast all of your care upon Him who careth for you. According to my promise, I will proceed to give you those "other incidents," for which you are "looking with so much interest."

"G. A. was a very intimate acquaintance of mine," says the writer of this article; "when he was living in the city of C——. I heard the story which I am about to relate, from his own lips. He had been out of employment for a considerable time, and was in consequence so circumstanced as only to keep himself from dying of hunger; in fact, he was left with but eighteen-pence, half penny, in the world.

Nor had he but one friend, but the Friend that 'sticketh closer than a brother.' He went to chapel, thanking God for that which was past, and trusting him for that which is to come, and heard Dr. Newton preach a sermon in aid of a society that was under perplexing circumstances. Sensibly feeling the solemn appeal which the Dr. made to the liberality of the audience, in behalf of the society, he at once gave the whole of his eight pence half penny. But he still trusted in him who delivered the Israelites out of the land of Pharoah. He rose next morning penniless, but very soon after terminating the duties of his closet, a message came to him, saying that he was to commence work that morning. He has been in constant employment ever since, and God in his infinite goodness and mercy, has raised him to a state of respectability. Truly the words of the Lord were verified in this man: "Them that love me I will honor."

The same writer relates another incident of a "French pastor," now living, who was "eminent as an author in his own country, and well known to a large portion of the religious world, in ours."

"He had no income but the scanty stipend of a pastor, and upon that had to maintain eleven children. His poverty was deep, his difficulties constant; but his heart was ever full of cheerful gratitude, and his hands were ever open to those who were poorer than himself. His friends say that on more than one occasion he has been left without a single sous, or a morsel of bread for his children. Meal-time coming, his wife told him that they could have no dinner. He replied, 'Yes, we shall dine as usual: lay the cloth.' It was objected that to lay the cloth was very useless, when there was nothing to lay upon it. 'Lay it,' he persisted, 'lay it just as usual; the Lord will provide.' The cloth was laid, and seemed for a while to mock faith by its barrenness; but a knock was heard, and the family soon surrounded a board which they all felt that the Lord himself had spread."

My sister, are not these incidents sufficient to teach us that our heavenly Father does care for us in respect to our temporal wants, as well as those of a spiritual character? "None ever trusted in him and were confounded." The God who rained manna from heaven to feed his people, increased the widow's meal, and cruise of oil, and fed Elijah with food conveyed by raven wings, is our God; he changeth not.

Let me cite one or two more illustrative of the efficacy of believing prayer. A widow lady residing in the town of F——, was greatly oppressed by her husband's brother, and reduced almost to a starving condition, though he had ample means to render her comfortable. One day she retired to her closet and prayed the Lord to take away his appetite until her wants were supplied. Three days afterward she was called to visit a relative who was very sick, and when the physician who had been sent for arrived, he said that he had been detained to prepare medicine for Mr. H., whose appetite had left him for several days.

This same woman was much oppressed by a neighbor in whose barn she had some hay for her cow. They were about to remove the building, and would not permit her to take the hay out, and she, in her distress, went again to the Lord, and prayed him to prevent them from removing the barn until her hay could be taken out. The men came and endeavored to move the building, but the chains broke and they had a great deal of trouble. Finally a portion of the barn fell down, and her hay tumbled upon the ground. Some no doubt would smile incredulously at these incidents, but are they any more remarkable or incredible than the multiplication of the widow's meal, the increase of the oil, or wonderful release of Peter from prison?

The trouble is, the church has lost her faith in God, to a great extent,—she does not expect wonders to be wrought in these days, and those humble, devoted few, who cherish the primitive faith and believe fully in the power of prayer, and the willingness of God to provide for their necessities, are generally considered fanatics and enthusiasts. Very well, they certainly are in honorable company, and they may take comfort to themselves from reading the history of God's people in ancient times. "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver you," is an eternal promise. Believe it!

BESSIE.

For the Crisis.

"Behold I Come as a Thief."

Blessed is He that Watcheth!

DEARLY BELOVED:—We are taught in the Bible that just before the return of he Nobleman with his bright and shining retinue, to gather his jewels, there will something very remarkable occur all over the world. In Rev. 16: 14, we read they are the spirits of devils working miracles. which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them together to the battle of the great day of God Almighty! I am fully satisfied that this scripture is now being fulfilled. The innumerable instances of wonderful and miraculous power in what is now called Spiritualism, which have occurred for the last fifteen years and are now of daily occurrence makes it useless to deny it.—Those who think that devils cannot work miracles would do well to ponder upon this scripture. Also read Exodus 7: 20-22; 8: 6-7. This is Satan's last great masterpiece; his last dreadful work of deception by which he will gather the nations to destroy them. And alas! while millions are being deceived by it, how few seem to understand its real nature, although so plainly pointed out in the word of prophecy. There are many scriptures which refer to it. But I will refer to only a few of them at this time.

It is very evident that the first named passage must be fulfilled before the day of God, because the object of these miracles is to deceive the nations. And when the thunders of the archangel's trump shall sound in the ears of an astonished world, and the graves shall yield up their captives, and we behold the saints all shining, ascending to the great white throne, all the puny wonders of Satan's host will sink into insignificance. In 1 Tim. 4: 1, we read; "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter time some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." 2 Tim. 3: 8,—"Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith." Moses established his claims before Pharaoh, as a messenger from God, by miracles. The magicians attempted to destroy his claims by performing similar miracles, among whom were Jannes and Jambres. God allowed them to go to certain lengths by performing certain miracles through Satanic agency, when he arrested them and extorted from them, "This is the finger of God!" When they attempted to produce lice upon man and beast, they failed, and were outdone by Moses. And they said; "This is the finger of God."

Thus their folly was manifested. In like manner says Paul to Timothy, second Epistle, 3: 9, "Their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was." It is clearly evident from this passage that in the latter times miracles will be wrought in order to resist the truth of God's word. And we might as well deny that Moses wrought miracles as to deny that the magicians and sorcerers of Egypt did. For the account tells us positively they did. And we might as well deny God's word as to deny it. Jesus Christ established his claims by miracles; and wicked men in these last days are endeavoring to destroy his claim by miracles, through Satanic agency. And millions will be deceived, ensnared and ruined by them. This is the last desperate effort of Satan and his host to destroy men! O that men would heed God's word, and keep away from it! But alas! they will continue to play with devils till God shall set his great white throne in the heavens and their folly shall be manifest to all men.

There is a very striking contrast between the purity of the miracles of Jesus, and those of modern Spiritualism. Jesus never wrought a miracle to gratify an idle curiosity; but only on especial and great occasions, and always to benefit some one or more. But those of the present time are wrought on the most trifling occasions, and often for mere sport. How solemn is this thought when we read that for every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account in the day of judgment! Spiritualism is as much a standing sign and warning to this generation, that the day of the Lord is at hand, as was the ark of Noah! The ark could rest only in one portion of the earth; and it required one hundred and twenty years to complete the warning. But this sign of Spiritualism is in every part of the world! And it is reasonable that it will continue only a short time.

O weary, tried, and tempted saint of God, now look up and lift up your head! Your redemption draws near! Soon, very soon, the four angels will let go the four winds, the last servant be sealed, and great Babylon will come into remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath! Jeremiah says, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall the Lord raise up from the earth, and the slain shall be from one end of earth to the other. I think this evil spoken of may be Spiritualism. One more suggestion and I close.

When God withdraws his Holy Spirit, and good angels who minister to men, and lets Satan's host loose upon the world, it would require but a very short time to gather the nations. O let us be holy, that in that day God may hide us in his pavilion.

Are We Ready?

"They that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut."

DEAR BRETHREN:—Are we all ready to go in with him to the marriage? Have we on the wedding garment? Are we as holy and pure as we would like to be at the moment when Jesus makes his appearance in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory? If we are not, let us cry mightily unto the Lord for holiness of heart, for without holiness no man shall see the Lord. O let us be up and doing while the day lasts! Let us put off the works of darkness and put on the armor of light. Let us lay aside every weight, and every sin, and run the race with patience, looking unto Jesus who has done so much for us, lest we be weary and faint in our minds.

Your Bro. full of hope,

A Fictitious Signature.

Several reasons may be urged for using an assumed signature or initial, in writing for a public journal. There is a delicacy in some minds which deters them from wishing to appear before the public—the innocent desire to awaken curiosity, which might cause the article to be more fully read—an unwillingness to write upon common-place topics over their own name—a desire for surprise on the part of their friends—using the same name they would appear, at times, to write too much. It is not understood in the literary world, in any department, as a deception; nor is it supposed, often, that a writer deserves censure, as having chosen an unmeaning initial, because he is ashamed of his name, or afraid to say all, over his own signature, which he would say incognito. Some, indeed, are more anxious to see the name, because they would know the writer; but it is to a great extent a matter of caprice.

Always, there will be fault to find with Editors and writers. If any of the readers of the Crisis suppose that its writers over assumed initials, or names, would not have said as much with their proper autograph, I might answer for several, but will speak for one, that I do not point at particular individuals, (if I did, I would call them by name,) but constantly, as you know, who have read, endeavor to exhibit principles,—with this exception, that I allow myself what all allow—to refer to public men, whose position has made them public property. The Editor always knows the writer's name. If any one possesses an interest, or reason, to know whether an article is written by me, let him write, or speak, and he shall have a polite, respectful and definite answer.

PASSING AWAY.

We love the sparkling gems of earth,
  And yet they will not stay;
But from the hour of their birth,
  They pass from us away.

I've watched the flowers of summer;
  In sighs they seemed to say,
Like dew-drops of the morning,
  We're passing swift away.

I've lingered by the rippling stream,
  But its waters could not stay;
On to the depths of ocean
  It swiftly passed away.

To the youthful hearts now beating
  With hope and strange delight,
The visions of the future seem
  All fair and true and bright.

But alas! earth's scenes are changeful,
  Its pleasures may not stay;
Like the sere leaves of autumn,
  They all must pass away.

To-day we meet the friends we love,
  And rapture fills our way;
To-morrow joy is turned to grief;
  For death sweeps them away.

Earth's brightest ones are doomed to fade,
  In prime, beauty and bloom;
Death mantles them in life's spring time,
  And leaves them in the tomb.

And e'en the earth now firmly set,
  Is doomed for her decay;
On her broad brow there is engraved,
  Fast passing now away.

O, can there be a brighter state,
  Where pleasures ne'er decay;
Where all the bright and beautiful
  Are passing not away?

Yes, in that hour when nature fails,
  The hills and all the plain,
We have a promise sure, that
  All earth shall bloom again.

'Tis thus in life before us spread,
  Joy follows close on pain,
And when we like the flowers die,
  'Tis but to live again.

And then will bloom the fairer flowers,
  Where beauty holds her sway;
Immortal ones shall ever rove,
  And never pass away.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. Mix.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me once more, in some column of the "Crisis" to appear with a public acknowledgment of my full belief in the near approach of the "reign of Christ on the earth." It is very evident to my mind, from the reading of I Cor. 15th chap., that a great and very important work remains to be accomplished by Jesus, after his advent to our earth, before the kingdom of God can fully come; because we read, 25th verse,—"He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." In the first place, he is to "subdue all things unto himself," and then unto the church. We read in Luke 19th, the account of the "nobleman, who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom," and to return. We also have an account of the disposal he made of his goods during his absence, and also of the conduct of those who were chosen to be citizens when he returned "having received the kingdom." They hated him. They anticipated their revolt by sending a message after him, to let him know that he could "not reign over them." Now we find that after account was taken of such as were entrusted with his money, it is added,—"But those mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me."

There is, then, a work of death to be performed upon his enemies previous to the destruction of this last enemy of the church. "For he hath put all things under his feet." The second Adam has attained unto the full possession of that dominion promised unto the first; yea, to him death is no longer an enemy; over him "death hath no more dominion." But death is not destroyed, neither will he be till all the enemies of Christ are slain before him. Isa. says, 40: 10,—"Behold the Lord God will come with strong hand and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Yes, all that are Christ's at his coming will be gathered unto him, together with the "first fruits," which Enoch saw in the Spirit of prophecy, saying, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, . . . of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude 15. He is first to be avenged, and then he will avenge his own elect bride. He will destroy death, abolish his dominion, and take full possession of earth's entire territory.

Then will this prophecy of Micah 4: 8, be fulfilled,—"And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." What is the first dominion? Gen. 1: 26,—"Over all the earth." Adam lost it; Christ restores it, "even the first dominion," and also the promised kingdom, together with the "Holy City," which God hath prepared for his saints of all ages, and for his own eternal abode. Death has reigned and triumphed long over the dominion of earth; but here, on this footstool of God, will ere long be achieved one of the most glorious victories of which it is possible for man to conceive; when he who "is alive forever more, amen," and has the keys of hell and death, shall set before his saints this "open door," which no power of death can ever shut; when he shall bring out the monster himself, (who has for so many centuries been feeding upon the fairest work of God's creation, gorging himself with loved and valued ones,) putting a stop to his work and causing him to disgorge himself of that which he has already devoured, of the pure and blest, what a shout of victorious triumph will fill the newly restored dominion, from the redeemed throng!—"Thanks be to God, which giveth (hath given) us the victory, (us even the church herself,) through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

Well might the apostle add,—"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast," &c. And so would I exhort you, brethren and sisters of the nineteenth century, who are of "like precious faith;" be not "moved away from the hope of the gospel," but "continue in the faith."—The hope of the gospel is sure, it is an anchor, it cannot be moved, it is cast within the veil; but if our faith fail we may be moved away from it and never attain to the resurrection of the just. The hope of the resurrection seems to be the only, yea, is the only firm hope which the believer can lay hold upon in this time of peril, when almost everything, aside from the word of God is laid before the mind, if possible, to get the individual to lay hold of something less firm than is the hope of the gospel.

O Brn., watch in all things, "endure afflictions," for the time is now when but few can endure sound doctrine. There are heaps upon heaps of teachers, whose teachings just serves to rub an itching ear, sufficiently to turn it away from the truth, and then it can very easily be made to listen to follies. The Lord keep us from every evil work, and preserve the little flock unto his heavenly kingdom."

In glorious hope, waiting,

SARAH MIX.

Prospect, Ct.

From Sr. F. M. Cudworth.

DEAR CHILDREN:—Another year is now numbered among the things that were. Almost in silence the last hour winged its flight; but why sound so mournfully the wailing winds, as they breathe the knell of the departed year with a soft and touching requiem? It has gone, forever gone; and hearts echo—gone!

For a moment let memory scan the past, though it bring to mind things that will slumber in oblivion to all but God, and will be unfolded alone at the tribunal bar. Have we a conscience void of offence toward God and man? Do the acts of the past year authorize us to hope for a happy future? If memory brings to mind deeds of kindness performed in a christian spirit,—hours of heartfelt devotion,—acts of self-denial,—forgiveness to the erring,—patience in tribulation and an overcomer in all things, then it is sweet to reflect on the past. But, is it otherwise? Does time with its cold and warning finger point you to misspent hours, deeds of unkindness, broken vows, and selfish enjoyments? Have you done despite to the long suffering spirit of God, and distressed the pure and excellent of the earth? God says, "Come, let us reason together." Forsake the evil, heartily, instantly; waste no more time; begin the present year in the fear of God. The kingdom may yet be yours. Delay not; be in earnest; and the crown will deck your brow at last; and when the knell shall be sounded for the last year of time, angels shall welcome you to the home of the blest, and you will be greeted with the overcomers in the paradise of God. Farewell.

Your sister in Christ,   F. M. C.

BRO. GRANT:—Truly we are living in perilous times, when iniquity abounds, and the wicked are doing wickedly; when there is distress of nations with perplexity; when the rich men howl for the miseries that are upon them: they have heaped up their treasures for the last days. It seems to me that we are fast approaching that time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. At that time all will be delivered whose names are written in the Book.

I am glad you take a decided stand against tobacco. There are many (and some of them professed Adventists) that are crying hard times with their mouths filled with the filthy weed.

Yours looking for a better country,

Extracts from Letters.

SR. L. SHELDON writes from Derry, N. H.:—"Let me say to you who have the privilege of meeting with the dear children so often, be faithful; do your duty in the fear of God. Here we meet and part; but by and by we shall, if faithful, meet where we shall have no separation to fear. Here we meet with sharp rebukes and hard sayings; but let us bear all with patience; we shall soon be freed from bondage.

'Our conflicts here though great they be,
Shall not prevent our victory.'

Dear Brn. and Srs., with patience bear your trials, for we shall soon lay our armor down."

——:o:——

SR. S. J. MILLER writes from West Brattleboro, Vt.:—"I feel very thankful to God and to you, Bro. G., for this paper to read. How it does enliven my poor soul to read its contents. O how the children would rejoice to see the heavens give way and our long looked for Savior descend in his beauty! Don't you want to see him? Oh! methinks I hear respond in my ears, Amen, Amen! let him come! O how many of us will be able to say, 'Lo! this is our God, we have waited for him!' It seems to me that the prospect does grow brighter and brighter; the Kingdom is very near. The condition of the world is enough to convince any man of the things that are shortly to come. How can men go on so blindfolded! But they will not see. O sinner! what will be your condition? Just think for a moment. Lost, lost, lost! will soon ring in your ears. O make your peace with God, before it shall be FOREVER too late!

There are but few of us here in this place; but the few that are remaining are trying to live for the Kingdom. We do not very often have preaching, but I hope the preaching Brn. will not forget that the few that remain get hungry and want food. We seldom have any one come this way excepting Brn. Pratt and Munger. We would be very glad to see any of God's preachers. My prayer is that we may be doing our Master's will when he comes."

——:o:——

SR. A. BASSETT writes from Williamsburgh:—"I am still holding on to the promise. It is not long since I had the blessing of hearing Bro. Pratt hold forth the truth two evenings; one evening in this place, and one in Goshen. The result of which meetings here and there have been for my interest, and the good of others. In Goshen there was a good interest. Three were baptized and four were converted, and are active children, taking up the cross in every meeting. This is cheering; this is good; and more are anxiously inquiring the way. It is a deciding time now for saint and sinner. A few more days or months at most, and we shall see the King in all his glory."

I LOVE TO PRAY.

I love to pray at morning's dawn,
To God who rules on high;
To breathe in earnest, touching tones,
A prayer for grace more nigh.

At midnight's hour, 'tis passing sweet
To bend the suppliant knee,
And kindly thank my blessed Lord
For blessings given me.

As twilight dimly veils the earth
In richest sombre hues,
As nature's hushed to quiet rest,
And gently fall the dews;—

Ah, lovely hour! my spirit cries,
To bow before the Lord!
And raise my voice in ardent prayer,
To him the Great Adored.

"Behold the Righteous Shall be Recompensed in the Earth; Much more the Wicked and the Sinner."

PROV. 11: 31.

1. All those who take God at his word and believe the gospel, and by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, immortality, shall have eternal life; "and the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." "For the Lord loveth judgment and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved forever." "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." "And they sang a new song, saying, thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my son." "And I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty.

Good enough, brethren and sisters, so let us endure unto the end, for God's words will not fail. Amen.

2. All those that obey not the gospel shall be punished with everlasting destruction. The wicked shall perish and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; "they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." But the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off." "Man that is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish." "Let sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." "Bless thou the Lord, O my soul, praise the Lord." Ps. 104: 35. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." "But he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." "The fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars shall have part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

Now, dear sinner, turn to God while there is time and opportunity. Oh! turn, for why will ye die? "Kiss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little." "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

Pencilings by the Way.

"BY GRACE ARE YE SAVED."

Yes, "grace, grace," must be the song from the foundation to the top-stone! "Not by any works of righteousness we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost which he shed on us abundantly, through Christ our Savior." "That in the ages to come, he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus." "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, unto good works."

How we are constantly brought to Christ as the agent employed in man's salvation, and the medium through which the grace of God flows to the believer. He it is whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation for our sins, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness (not our own) for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God, to declare, I say, his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus.

"Where is boasting, then? It is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay, but by the law of faith." Most clearly, then, is the fact established by the word that we are saved by grace; which grace is communicated from God through Christ,—that he becomes our righteousness, or, in other words, his righteousness is accepted as an equivalent for our deficiency, on the ground of our faith, and that when we do thus believe on Christ, his righteousness is wrought in us, thereby constituting us righteous persons. We are thus made partakers of the Divine nature—are made Christlike in our disposition, and at last will be renewed bodily in his image.

How, then, are we justified? "By the grace of God, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." How do we obtain peace with God? "Through our Lord Jesus Christ." How do we receive the gift of righteousness? "By Jesus Christ." How does grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life? "Through Jesus Christ our Lord." How are we delivered from the bondage of the law? "I thank God; through Jesus Christ our Lord." "For Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth." How do we have access unto the Father? "Through Christ." "How do we offer up acceptable sacrifices to God? "By Christ."—And when the company of the redeemed awake to life, clothed with immortality, shouting "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" to whom is this salvation ascribed? "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!" Well might the apostle say;—"By grace are ye saved," and when the top-stone is brought forth with shouting, we will cry "grace, grace unto it!"

BESSIE.

For the Crisis.

Decision of Character; or Firm Faith in God.

We are living in an age when we need to be admonished on this point, for we are living in an age like unto the age of Noah and of Lot, as Jesus said it would be just before he comes. Then the thoughts and imaginations of man's heart were evil and that continually. Men could believe everything, but to exercise faith in God was too much;—just the same characteristics of faith now. The important inquiry made by him who knew and foretold the character of this age—"Shall the Son of Man find faith on the earth when he comes?"—should be continually sounding in the ears of all who profess to believe God as he has spoken. There is a great lack of decision of character in the present age, notwithstanding the great profession of faith by church-going people; and this applies to not a few who have started as virgins to meet the Bridegroom, with the lamp of light in their hands. Now the just shall live by faith.

A fixed principle of the heart, a firm, unshaken confidence in God, a never-giving-up spirit has characterized the children of God in all past ages. See, for example, Moses, Ex. 32: 26; Caleb, Num. 13: 30; Ruth, Ruth 1: 16; Joshua, Joshua 24: 15; David, Ps. 17: 3; Job 13: 14; Abraham, Rom. 4: 20, and a host of others too numerous to mention. But read for the encouragement and strengthening of your faith, Heb. 11th chapter. Here is a great sermon, and worthy of imitation, because it was spoken by one who practised in his life what he taught others to do. Pure religion then was in doing good to others and keeping one's self unspotted from the world; but now it is to look out for your own interest, as every one else does,—keep up your reputation so as to be highly respected in society, and be sure to keep up with all the fashions that are approved of in the church, and then we shall let OUR light shine to others, that they may take knowledge of us.

Some are continually finding fault with others, and that things do not go to suit them;—the sermon was too practical or too doctrinal to suit them. But I am inclined to think there is a lack of faith. A lack of decision of character is the great fault. We want to say, like one of old, "As for me and my house we WILL serve the Lord."

Take, for another example, the three Hebrews, who would rather be cast into the furnace than deny the God of heaven and earth. There was decision of character, the same as children of God need in these days of fables.

And here let me relate an exhibition of firm faith in God, that I beheld a few months since, while in one of the cities of the Queen's dominion. I went to spend a few hours with a brother (the only Lot in the city) on Lord's day evening. His custom is to spend an hour or two in reading the word of God to his children, and explaining it to them, and then have a season of prayer. But this evening the children wanted to go to hear a popular sermon delivered to the Sunday School. But no, says the brother, I want you to obey me, come and sit down and listen to the word of God. His wife being such an one as Job had, thought he was very wicked in not letting the children go. But the Bro., Lot-like, sat down and read and explained the word of God to one of his daughters and then we had a season of prayer. It was blessed. There is a fixed principle, a firm faith, that is not moved by storms and persecutions, though it is from his own kindred.

My faith is unshaken in the soon coming of Israel's King. O, who would not live for an endless life, an incorruptible inheritance, and to be associated with all the good of all ages? Roll on, ye wheels of time, and bring the welcome day!

Yours, praying for the kingdom to come.

The Cross and the Crown.

The first advent of Jesus must not be preached alone. It must not be disjointed from the second. This is to rend the crown from the cross, and who will take up the cross if there is no crown to follow? Who will embrace a suffering Savior if there be no glorious inheritance, which stamps the value of Christ's sufferings, when the glorious Savior shall appear? It is strongly impressed on my mind that it has been through the separating of these—the crown from the cross—the second from the first advent—that christendom has been reduced to that pass to which it has arrived. Men have lost sight of the glorious coming of God, bringing his salvation with him; and, by so doing, have alienated their minds from the fear and love of Christ; so that they have been brought to say, why should we believe in Christ? what has he done for us? let us break his bands asunder and cast his cords from us. The race and the prize must be viewed in conjunction. I would not preach the glory without the suffering, nor suffering without the recompense. We are always running into extremes. Because some have kept a circle round the cross and have detained their hearers always there, as if this was the Lord's intention, and that the cross only led to the cross,—others have well nigh forsaken the cross, that they might circle always near the crown. I would be evermore looking to the cross to remind me how the crown was purchased. The most precious thing the crown can boast of is the love that obtained it for me. It cost Jesus his life. Again, as I stand at the cross, I would be evermore looking at the crown, to remind me of the end my Savior had in dying for me—that the redemption and glorification of my nature was the object contemplated and achieved in his death. Thus, regarding them as cause and effect, the one works the other.

The cross calls forth my gratitude as I look on the glory it has produced; but separated from this view it fails to produce its intended effect; considered apart from the recompense it has purchased, it is exceeding heavy and burdensome. But let us take example from Jesus, who, for the joy (of the crown and kingdom) that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame,—and is now in heaven waiting the restitution (or restoration) of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.—Then the crown shall be given him (Jesus) and dominion, and glory, and a kingdom,—for the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever and ever. The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. II.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

In the foregoing number the subject was introduced, of harmonizing some texts which commence the day of judgment. In classing many of them, they must be presented as consecutive, though they will transpire at the same time. Thus; the Son of man will appear, and, at that time, destroy the man of sin, or Babylon, "with the brightness of his coming," and bind satan; for he must be bound "a thousand years;" the last trumpet sound; the righteous dead arise; the living saints are changed, and are together "caught up, to meet the Lord in the air;" the kingdom set up—in the days of the divided, or toe-kingdoms of Rome; the throne of judgment set; all the saints and the living wicked stand before it, and the books are opened; the saints are acquitted; the wicked doomed; and the great image smitten in the last great battle. All these are represented as synchronous events, or rapidly succeeding each other; after which the earth will be burned, and the wicked with it; for it is "reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men." Then the Sanctuary (whatever it is, whether the people of God, or their final location,) will be cleansed; "the purchased possession" redeemed; all things created new, and the glorious time arrive for the marriage and supper of the Lamb;—Jesus is "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world."

It may be said, this view of events is not as they are recorded in the Revelation, for there the marriage of the Lamb is represented as taking place before the great battle, and the binding of Satan. To this I would reply, that the marriage of the Lamb is there mentioned before the first resurrection, the former being in the 19th and the latter in the 20th chap.; and as the saints are all translated when the Son of man appears, it follows that the marriage must be after that event; and Isaiah tells us that the saints enter into their chambers to remain "for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." If they remain till the indignation be past, then all those mighty scenes of destruction must be performed in the course of that little moment; and probably here is the last preparation of the bride, and "when destructions are come to a perpetual end," then she will be made wholly ready.

In accordance with the above view of events, I shall, as the first head of the subject, present the proof-texts which begin that solemn day.

1.—The appearing of Christ, the fall of Babylon and binding of Satan. "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn; and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Matt. 24: 30. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him; and they also that pierced him, (with their sin and unbelief) and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Rev. 1: 7. "I saw in the night vision, and behold, One like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him." Dan. 7: 13. The apostate church is represented as an adulterous woman, and also as the man of sin; "whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. 2: 8. John saw this woman in vision, on whose forehead was written mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." Rev. 17: 5. "And a mighty angel took up a stone, like a great mill-stone, and cast it into the sea, saying, thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and be found no more at all." Rev. 18: 21. "And there followed another angel, saying, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Rev. 14. 8. "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her." Rev. 18: 20. A great shout is heard in heaven, saying, "Alleluia, salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, be unto the Lord our God. For true and righteous are his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hands. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up forever and ever." Rev. 19: 1–3. "And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, until the thousand years be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." Rev. 20: 1–3. "For this purpose, the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil." 1 John 3: 8. As soon as Satan is chained in the bottomless pit, his works will be destroyed. In the mean time let us have on the armor, that we may "stand against the wiles of the Devil," and [illegible] in due season" when Jesus [illegible].

BROTHERLY LOVE.

Can we err in too much loving,
Though we suffer by our loving?
Jesus loves till he is driven—
Driven from our hearts by sinning.
'Twas because of so much loving—
Loving still the undeserving,
That our SAVIOR was betrayed—
Yes, betrayed and crucified.
Is the Master less than servant,
That we're thus our fellows spurning?
Rare indeed the Christian virtues
In the man who has two faces—
Smiles to beckon fair ones to him,
Frowns to frighten others from him—
Vainly thinking he divineth
All the workings of the spirit.
Sure the good are least suspecting,
And the crafty most surmising.
Christian, leave the tares for burning!
Better far to suffer sorrow,
Than the good by thee to suffer.
Be not lofty! keep near Jesus!
And thy neighbor still keep loving;
For the lowly learneth lessons
Which the worldly never study;
With their wisdom mingleth trusting;
With their sorrow mingleth blessing,
And their path, so rough and thorny,
Is by love made smooth and pleasant.

Does Jesus Care for Me?

"For above all principality and power and dominion and might," upon his Father's throne, sits the exalted Savior. He is the Son of the Highest—Jehovah—"the high and lofty One who inhabiteth eternity." Being accounted worthy to receive honor and praise, he is surrounded by ineffable glory, worshiped and adored by legions of holy angels who delight to do his will.

From his royal abode how poor and insignificant must the poor dwellers of this sin-cursed earth appear! How must even the most mighty intellect, the most exalted wisdom dwindle into insignificance before the greatness of Christ Jesus! Then what am I? Like a drop in the mighty ocean; like a grain of sand; like one of the countless leaves of the forest. Poor, weak, erring, blind, ignorant, utterly unworthy of his notice. Worse than all this, I have rebelled against his righteous government—chosen to walk in my own ways, disbelieved his promises. Surely, [illegible] would turn with scorn and contempt from one guilty of such ingratitude, such baseness. But I look into the word of God and find that though Jesus is high and holy, yet his compassion extends to the very vilest; his love is infinite and inexhaustible; his salvation is for all. I know that he once left his robes of glory, his glorious estate, and came to rescue sinners from the dread curse which rested upon them.

I remember the glad tidings which greeted the shepherds of Bethlehem. I remember the history of the "Man of sorrows"—his works of love, his pity, his tenderness, his meekness, his care for the sorrowing and afflicted, his forgiving love for the erring and sinful. I love to read that he has the same deep, unwearying love now, that characterized his every act when he dwelt among mortals. I love, if doubt or unbelief intrudes, to look towards Ghetsemena—toward Calvary, and ask why was grief, and sorrow, and agony laid upon the Son of God?—why was he wounded for our transgressions? Truly, God loved the world when he gave his only begotten Son to die for us! And now, in heaven, our Savior intercedes for humble, contrite ones.

Exalted Savior! thou art my Savior. Thou art a real Savior for real sinners. I will not reject thine offered salvation. I will not doubt thy love. I will earnestly go on trusting in thee.

Faith tells me that I shall be victorious, and when the Prince of life appears, join the redeemed in ascribing "blessing and honor and glory and power unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

I LOVE TO PRAY.

I love to pray at morning's dawn,
To God who rules on high;
To breathe in earnest, touching tones,
A prayer for grace more nigh.

At midnight's hour, 'tis passing sweet
To bend the suppliant knee,
And kindly thank my blessed Lord
For blessings given me.

As twilight dimly veils the earth
In richest sombre hues,
As nature's hushed to quiet rest,
And gently fall the dews;—

Ah, lovely hour! my spirit cries,
To bow before the Lord!
And raise my voice in ardent prayer,
To him the Great Adored.

PROV. 11: 31.

1. All those who take God at his word and believe the gospel, and by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, immortality, shall have eternal life; "and the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." "For the Lord loveth judgment and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved forever." "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." "And they sang a new song, saying, thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, [illegible] will be his God and he shall be my [illegible] "And I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty.

Good enough, brethren and sisters, so let us endure unto the end, for God's words will not fail. Amen.

2. All those that obey not the gospel shall be punished with everlasting destruction. The wicked shall perish and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; "they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." But the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off." "Man that is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish." "Let sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." "Bless thou the Lord, O my soul, praise the Lord." Ps. 104: 35. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." "But he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." "The fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars shall have part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

Now, dear sinner, turn to God while there is time and opportunity. Oh! turn, for why will ye die? "Kiss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little." "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

Pencilings by the Way.

"BY GRACE ARE YE SAVED."

Yes, "grace, grace," must be the song from the foundation to the top-stone! "Not by any works of righteousness we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost which he shed on us abundantly, through Christ our Savior." "That in the ages to come, he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus." "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, unto good works."

How we are constantly brought to Christ as the agent employed in man's salvation, and the medium through which the grace of God flows to the believer. He it is whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation for our sins, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness (not our own) for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God, to declare, I say, his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus.

"Where is boasting, then? It is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay, but by the law of faith." Most clearly, then, is the fact established by the word that we are saved by grace; which grace is communicated from God through Christ,—that he becomes our righteousness, or, in other words, his righteousness is accepted as an equivalent for our deficiency, on the ground of our faith, and that when we do thus believe on Christ, his righteousness is wrought in us, thereby constituting us righteous persons. We are thus made partakers of the Divine nature—are made Christlike in our disposition, and at last will be renewed bodily in his image.

How, then, are we justified? "By the grace of God, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." How do we obtain peace with God? "Through our Lord Jesus Christ." How do we receive the gift of righteousness? "By Jesus Christ." How does grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life? "Through Jesus Christ our Lord." How are we delivered from the bondage of the law? "I thank God; through Jesus Christ our Lord.' "For Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth." How do we have access unto the Father? "Through Christ." "How do we offer up acceptable sacrifices to God? "By Christ."—And when the company of the redeemed awake to life, clothed with immortality, shouting "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" to whom is this salvation ascribed? "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!" Well might the apostle say;—"By grace are ye saved," and when the top-stone is brought forth with shouting, we will cry "grace, grace unto it!"

Decision of Character; or Firm Faith in God.

We are living in an age when we need to be admonished on this point, for we are living in an age like unto the age of Noah and of Lot, as Jesus said it would be just before he comes. Then the thoughts and imaginations of man's heart were evil and that continually. Men could believe everything, but to exercise faith in God was too much;—just the same characteristics of faith now. The important inquiry made by him who knew and foretold the character of this age—"Shall the Son of Man find faith on the earth when he comes?"—should be continually sounding in the ears of all who profess to believe God as he has spoken. There is a great lack of decision of character in the present age, notwithstanding the great profession of faith by church-going people; and this applies to not a few who have started as virgins to meet the Bridegroom, with the lamp of light in their hands. Now the just shall live by faith.

A fixed principle of the heart, a firm, unshaken confidence in God, a never-giving-up spirit has characterized the children of God in all past ages. See, for example, Moses, Ex. 32: 26; Caleb, Num. 13: 30; Ruth, Ruth 1: 16; Joshua, Joshua 24: 15; David, Ps. 17: 3; Job 13: 14; Abraham, Rom. 4: 20, and a host of others too numerous to mention. But read for the encouragement and strengthening of your faith, Heb. 11th chapter. Here is a great sermon, and worthy of imitation, because it was spoken by one who practised in his life what he taught others to do. Pure religion then was in doing good to others and keeping one's self unspotted from the world; but now it is to look out for your own interest, as every one else does,—keep up your reputation so as to be highly respected in society, and be sure to keep up with all the fashions that are approved of in the church, and then we shall let OUR light shine to others, that they may take knowledge of us.

Some are continually finding fault with others, and that things do not go to suit them;—the sermon was too practical or too doctrinal to suit them. But I am inclined to think there is a lack of faith. A lack of decision of character is the great fault. We want to say, like one of old, "As for me and my house we WILL serve the Lord."

Take, for another example, the three Hebrews, who would rather be cast into the furnace than deny the God of heaven and earth. There was decision of character, the same as children of God need in these days of fables.

And here let me relate an exhibition of firm faith in God, that I beheld a few months since, while in one of the cities of the Queen's dominion. I went to spend a few hours with a brother (the only Lot in the city) on Lord's day evening. His custom is to spend an hour or two in reading the word of God to his children and explaining it to them, and then have a season of prayer. But this evening the children wanted to go to hear a popular sermon delivered to the Sunday School. But no, says the brother, I want you to obey me, come and sit down and listen to the word of God. His wife being such an one as Job had, thought he was very wicked in not letting the children go. But the Bro., Lot-like, sat down and read and explained the word of God to one of his daughters and then we had a season of prayer. It was blessed. There is a fixed principle, a firm faith, that is not moved by storms and persecutions, though it is from his own kindred.

My faith is unshaken in the soon coming of Israel's King. O, who would not live for an endless life, an incorruptible inheritance, and to be associated with all the good of all ages? Roll on, ye wheels of time, and bring the welcome day! Yours, praying for the kingdom to come,

The Cross and the Crown.

The first advent of Jesus must not be preached alone. It must not be disjointed from the second. This is to rend the crown from the cross, and who will take up the cross if there is no crown to follow? Who will embrace a suffering Savior if there be no glorious inheritance, which stamps the value of Christ's sufferings, when the glorious Savior shall appear? It is strongly impressed on my mind that it has been through the separating of these—the crown from the cross—the second from the first advent—that christendom has been reduced to that pass to which it has arrived. Men have lost sight of the glorious coming of God, bringing his salvation with him; and, by so doing, have alienated their minds from the fear and love of Christ; so that they have been brought to say, why should we believe in Christ? what has he done for us? let us break his bands asunder and cast his cords from us. The race and the prize must be viewed in conjunction. I would not preach the glory without the suffering, nor suffering without the recompense. We are always running into extremes. Because some have kept a circle round the cross and have detained their hearers always there, as if this was the Lord's intention, and that the cross only led to the cross,—others have well nigh forsaken the cross, that they might circle always near the crown. I would be evermore looking to the cross to remind me how the crown was purchased. The most precious thing the crown can boast of is the love that obtained it for me. It cost Jesus his life. Again, as I stand at the cross, I would be evermore looking at the crown, to remind me of the end my Savior had in dying for me—that the redemption and glorification of my nature was the object contemplated and achieved in his death. Thus, regarding them as cause and effect, the one works the other.

The cross calls forth my gratitude as I look on the glory it has produced; but separated from this view it fails to produce its intended effect; considered apart from the recompense it has purchased, it is exceeding heavy and burdensome. From his royal abode how poor and insignificant must the poor dwellers of this sin-cursed earth appear! How must even the most mighty intellect, the most exalted wisdom dwindle into insignificance before the greatness of Christ Jesus! Then what am I? Like a drop in the mighty ocean; like a grain of sand; like one of the countless leaves of the forest. Poor, weak, erring, blind, ignorant, utterly unworthy of his notice. Worse than all this, I have rebelled against his righteous government—chosen to walk in my own ways, disbelieved his promises. Surely, [illegible] would turn with scorn and contempt from one guilty of such ingratitude, such baseness. But I look into the word of God and find that though Jesus is high and holy, yet his compassion extends to the very vilest; his love is infinite and inexhaustible; his salvation is for all. I know that he once left his robes of glory, his glorious estate, and came to rescue sinners from the dread curse which rested upon them.

I remember the glad tidings which greeted the shepherds of Bethlehem. I remember the history of the "Man of sorrows"—his works of love, his pity, his tenderness, his meekness, his care for the sorrowing and afflicted, his forgiving love for the erring and sinful. I love to read that he has the same deep, unwearying love now, that characterized his every act when he dwelt among mortals. I love, if doubt or unbelief intrudes, to look towards Ghetesmena—toward Calvary, and ask why was grief, and sorrow, and agony laid upon the Son of God?—why was he wounded for our transgressions? Truly, God loved the world when he gave his only begotten Son to die for us! And now, in heaven, our Savior intercedes for humble, contrite ones.

Exalted Savior! thou art my Savior. Thou art a real Savior for real sinners. I will not reject thine offered salvation. I will not doubt thy love. I will earnestly go on trusting in thee.

Faith tells me that I shall be victorious, and when the Prince of life appears, join the redeemed in ascribing "blessing and honor and glory and power, unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

Correspondence.

From Sr. C. E. Cole.

My Dear Sisters:—It is more than eight months since I met with any who were looking for the coming of the Lord. During this time I have not hesitated to warn the worldling, and to introduce the kingdom and the King to those with whom I have had daily intercourse. May they become obedient is my prayer. You, with me, are expecting the King of kings and Lord of lords. You have volunteered to make preparations to be received of him when he comes. Believing it is our heart's desire to do good and communicate, let us improve the opportunity to instruct, encourage and assist each other, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed. Resist temptation. Oh how much is comprehended n those two words! Do we realise it? Let us examine it and see if we are not daily yielding to temptation. Let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us.

I am here reminded of one evil very prominent to our sex. It a willing reception of those unnecessary articles, namely, tea and coffee. It is my opinion women are responsible in a great degree for the evils resulting from its use. Why do our children love to sip from our cups? You are aware it is not the taste they so much love; but simply because it is so easy for them to follow their mother's example. Hence it is fondly cherished and liable to become an unavoidable habit. Not a few men would be prepared to abandon its use were it not practiced by their companions.

I would not hesitate as an illustration to mention the unexpected good resulting from the discontinuance of its use, on my own part, in my own family. Indeed, I will, hoping it may prove beneficial to some young mother.

I was not permitted during my childhood to enjoy with my parents the contents of the cup. But when I arrived at matured years I set aside this principle of prohibition as no longer worthy of my regard, example taking the preference. For nearly twelve years it had been my daily drink when I abandoned it as unnecessary and injurious, and the unexpected blessing resulting therefrom has more than paid me for my self-denial. After the lapse of a few days my little girl of six years refused to taste from her father's cup, saying, "It don't taste good to me now, because mother don't drink any more."

Shortly after a man in our employ, after reading an article in the Crisis on this point, exclaimed, "It is the truth;" and that for the future tea should be counted as his enemy.

I continued preparing tea for supper and coffee for breakfast, as was my custom, my husband being the only recipient. But this was of short continuance, for at the supper table he said, "Let this be the last tea you make for me. I will drink no more." And at the breakfast table, also, made the same request. The circle of influence did not cease here. Mrs. Mary L——, a sister of the man mentioned in the above, regarding her brother's example worthy of imitation, has also abandoned tea, notwithstanding they have always been accustomed to it.

Perhaps my letter is already too long, but I venture to express a wish that we may all be enabled through the influence of the Holy Spirit to overcome evil with good, and be among those that are caught up to meet the Lord in the air; for so shall we be ever with the Lord.

Sr. H. E. Graves writes from Apponaug:—"There has been a protracted meeting in Pontiac, and victory has turned on Zion's side. There has been a shaking among sinners and backsliders. Natick trembles. She is awaking. Glory be to the Name of the Lord for this! The children, old and young, are gathering themselves up to work for God on old Warwick plains, at Bro. Champlin's church.

I read of a protracted meeting in Lowell, in the past week's Crisis; and I rejoice in the Lord that the waiting ones are doing all they can to turn men from darkness to light. I have never forgotten to pray for them, since I was called to part with them; and I shall soon meet them again to part no more forever.

Thank God, I am kingdom bound; and let others do as they may, as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord. Moreover, I know that my Redeemer liveth; and because he lives I shall live also!"

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 20, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER NINE.

In our last two articles, we have endeavored to show the Bible meaning and application of the words sheol, hades, gehenna, tartarus. We found nothing to sustain the popular, or theological hell, as commonly taught at the present day; but on the contrary, that sheol and hades invariably refer to the grave; and that gehenna—"the fire of the valley of Hinnom," was employed by the Savior, in conversation with the Jews, to show that the wicked will be "burnt up," as the filth was burnt in gehenna. Tartarus, we found only once, and used to represent the airy regions or confines of this world, occupied by the fallen angels, or demons.

It appears plain from the Scriptures, that when the dead are put into sheol or hades, they are laid where there is "no knowledge," and consequently neither suffer, nor enjoy, any thing; but when cast into gehenna, they are consumed like the tares of the field, and become "extinct," as saith the Scripture.

But there is a passage of Scripture found in Matt. 25: 46, which is thought to stand as a Gibralter rock, in opposition to the position we have taken. It reads,—"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal."

The word rendered "everlasting" is from the same word (aionion) in the original, as the word "eternal" in the same text; hence it follows that the punishment of the wicked is as long as the life of the righteous, which is eternal. No man believes in eternal punishment stronger than the writer. But what is the punishment? This passage only gives its duration, consequently we must examine other texts to ascertain how the wicked are punished. We find many plain declarations on this point, but we will only quote one now, which is found in Rom. 6: 23. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." We have yet to learn from the Bible, or any other common sense book, that death means life in misery; or, as sometimes expressed, "A death that never, never dies." It would be just as consistent to say, a life "that never, never" lives, which is an absurdity. Observe, the wages of sin is not dying, but death, which is the end of dying. A person is not dead, till the act of dying is completed; and when dead, they "know not anything," and consequently suffer nothing. We learn from Rev. 20: 14, that the death-penalty for sin "is the second death." If there is a second there must be a first death, and the second must be like the first; but the first is a literal death, or extinction of life; consequently the second must likewise be a cessation of conscious existence.

Suppose the first is a moral death, then the second must be moral also; and, between these two deaths, there must have been a moral resurrection, or conversion; and as none can die a second death who have not been once dead, and afterwards made alive, it necessarily follows, provided the death be a moral one, that none can die the second death but backsliders, or in other words, those who have partaken of "the first resurrection," which must be conversion, if this view is correct. But we read in Rev. 20: 6, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." If the first resurrection is conversion, as some believe, the Scripture just quoted proves that they cannot backslide, because "on such the second death hath no power." Consequently, no one can die the second death, and the subject is only mentioned for a scare-crow. But if we let the first death be literal, the resurrection literal, then all is plain, and the second death is also literal, and results in the destruction and extinction of the wicked.

We are sometimes told, "if the punishment of the wicked is simply extinction of being, it is not a very heavy penalty, and consequently, we take away the motive to repentance." Let us look this objection in the face. Is death a punishment? Is there any higher penalty? Please settle this point before we advance. Is it possible for a rational, common sense man, to claim for one moment that death is not a punishment? This point being settled, we would ask another question. As death is a punishment, would not eternal death be eternal punishment? Let sober reason answer, and all will say, yes. But the objection may arise in some mind, "How can the wicked be punished when they are dead?" Why, for the reason that death is the punishment.—"But how can they suffer when they are dead?"—"The wages of sin is death," not suffering; and the punishment does not begin till they are dead. Suppose the punishment was whipping, when would it begin?—"When they begun to whip."—How long would it continue?—"As long as the whipping continued."—If the penalty was imprisonment, when would it begin?—"As soon as they were put in prison."—How long would it continue?—"As long as they are kept in prison." We now come to the point. If the punishment is death, when does it commence?—"Why, when they are dead." Certainly. How long will it continue?—"As long as they remain dead." Well, as the punishment is eternal, it follows as a matter of course, that they will never come to life after they die the "second death;" but, as expressed by the prophet, "they shall be as though they had not been."

Another objector says,—"If death is the only punishment, it is not very great."—In reply, we remark, if eternal death is a small punishment, then it follows, as a sequence, that eternal life is a small reward. Does any one wish to take such a position? If eternal life is the reward of the righteous, as the Bible most plainly teaches, then those who die "the second death" lose all the righteous have gained. The whole matter is resolved into a simple problem of loss and gain. The good gain eternal life through Christ, and the wicked lose it. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotton Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.

We can see how the Lord can destroy men in the exercise of love and mercy; but we can see neither love, mercy, nor justice, in keeping men, women and children alive eternally, for the sake of tormenting them. If a domestic animal—a dog for instance, should be terribly mangled, and was howling and yelling in agony, your kind friends and neighbors would say, "Why don't you kill him and put him out of misery?" Finally, in mercy to the dog, you take his life and end his sufferings. Upon the same principle, we believe God destroys the wicked. At the judgment, thieves, pirates, robbers, murderers and other wicked classes, stand condemned, in the most miserable and awful situation, having broken the commandments of the Lord, and rendered themselves unfit to enjoy the society of the good; and, as their probation is over, the question arises, what can be done with them? Mercy says, destroy them; love speaks, put them out of existence; justice says, they are worthy of death; and God in his goodness says, "They shall be as though they had not been." This looks right. Our Creator is under no obligation to bestow upon any of us a future existence, but has promised it as a gift, upon condition that we will obey him. He does the wicked no injustice, when he puts them back to dust in their original condition. All they enjoyed in this life was clear gain; and as they have refused to comply with the terms upon which they can have eternal life, and have formed habits in this world which would make them miserable in the world to come, the Lord in mercy refuses to perpetuate their existence in misery, and is consequently obliged to take away their life, and let them die "the second death," from which there is no resurrection; hence they experience eternal death, or "eternal punishment."

Encouraging.

A Voice from Rutland.

"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake."

The following interesting article is from the pen of J. W. Carhart, the Methodist minister in Rutland, Vt., and taken from the Northeastern Christian Advocate, of Jan. 1st, 1858.

LETTER FROM RUTLAND.

Mr. Editor:—I shall take it for granted that you still take an interest in the welfare of the people of your old charge, and that some information concerning them would be acceptable. . . . .

Quite an excitement has prevailed here for a few weeks past, not of a religious character, however, so far as we can judge, produced by the lectures of a Mr. Grant, of Boston. He professes to be—or rather does not profess to be any thing in particular, but every thing in general. His doctrines would place him in the school of modern Millerite enthusiasts—not under obligation to any body—wishing to unite with the different ministers of the place for the purpose of "getting up a revival."(?) The ministers of the different evangelical denominations, happen to have heard of modern Millerism and its disastrous effects on mind, and also on our religious societies, before they heard of Mr. G., consequently they did not wish to sanction the teachings of that class of men, by uniting with him in his efforts to "get up a revival."

The nineteenth century is too late an age to teach the abominable doctrine of the materiality of the human soul with great success among the thinking, reading part of community; and the doctrines that necessarily follow:—such as the unconscious state of the dead from the death of the body till the resurrection of the same.

As to the second advent of Christ, all Christians agree that he will appear at the appointed time; and but few Christians, if any, believe it to be possible for man to determine the precise time of his coming. It is indeed strange that men can yet be found so silly as to advocate a doctrine long since exploded and blown into so many fragments, that a single trace of it is difficult to be found.

A remarkable feature of the affair is, a few evenings since Mr. G. was challenged by a Spiritualist to a controversy on the subject of the unconscious state of the dead, that doctrine being in conflict with his views and sentiments, he determined to vindicate his cause. Although the evangelical ministers of the place recognized the doctrines advanced by Mr. G. as unscriptural, and consequently dangerous, yet none of them felt disposed to hold a controversy with him, for the same reasan that the lion refused to fight with the skunk.

The spiritualist had nothing to fear in the controversy, and was a fit subject for an opponent, as will presently appear. At the close of the debate a collection was taken, and the proceeds divided between the two competitors. The next day our Spiritualist, doubtless thinking it proper to practice what he preached, held too close an interview with the spirits of our town, the consequence of which was, he became, as we "outsiders" would say, decidedly—drunk. He of course left town, perhaps for the "spheres." Mr. G. exults over laurels won in vanquishing such an opponent.

But the strangest feature of the whole affair is, many professed Christians, and members of Christian churches, attend his lectures—welcome him to their firesides for conversation with their children, and consider him "the great power of God!" In my opinion, the time has come when Christians should not "be carried about by every wind of doctrine," nor should they be following every "babbler" of these times.

Tobacco.

MY EXPERIENCE IN THE USE OF TOBACCO.

BY F. H. B.

(Concluded.)

It is, however, really amuing to listens to the excuses which are framed to justify the use of this narcotic. Mr. or Mrs. A. says, "My food rises in my stomach;" Mr. B. has the heart-burn; Mr. or Mrs. C. is "troubled with indigestion, and the physician says I had better use a little tobacco." Strange advice! What is the cause of this indigestion? Is it not traceable, in most cases, that is, is not gastric dyspepsia traceable to the habit of drinking strong tea and coffee and overloading the stomach with food? The use of tobacco in such cases must, instead of being a benefit, be a decided injury. Yes, but my physician tells me I had better use it. Well, good common sense tells you you had better not. Whose advice will you follow? Physicians are but men. There are reasons why some physicians give this advice. I say some, for there are a few who will do so. Some persons, however, connected with the medical profession, care not what men do, so long as their measures have not a tendency to bring about a "distressingly healthy time." What care they what people eat or drink, so long as they have plenty of practice, and high rates to pay them well for their services? There are many physicians who pass by this filthy habit in silence, because they have not moral stamina enough to reprove men for it. It is with them, as with many clergymen; and who does not know that ministers and physicians are regarded by the mass of community as two of the worst classes of professional men? Their motives to benefit men are not appreciated, and never can be. The former, is said to kill the man spiritually; the latter, physically. Knowing then the bad repute in which they are held, it is not strange that this class of physicians, who are lacking in moral courage, should be remiss in this duty. Yet, this is not a sufficient excuse to justify them in holding their peace.

We never apply caloric to a burn, thinking thereby to effect a cure, and why should a person be persuaded that tobacco will aid digestion, when in fact, it contains one of the most virulent poisons? It is absolutely preposterous. Better own up, and confess you use it because you love it; this is half of the battle, and the other half is, to give it a severe letting alone, and thus become a clean, healthy, man or woman.

I must confess that it looks much worse to me than I ever expected it would. How it looks in a christian, and especially a minister of the gospel, to be chewing the nasty stuff, or smoking an old filthy pipe. I have seen some in the practice of smoking, that looked as though they had been stealing sheep. How they shy off into some retreat, to indulge in the filthy practice, that even Satan himself would not engage in. Some will say it is a great pity the writer of this article did not discover the evil at an earlier date. I think so too. But then, that is easily accounted for. The perception had become blunted through the prolonged use of the narcotic, and hence, did not see and understand its injurious effects. My effort at leaving off was a simple experiment. The thought somehow found its way into my mind, that the influence of the nicotine was stupifying, was deadening. I knew this long before I left it off, but did not think sufficiently of the matter to lead to any practical results. At last the thought seemed to come with double force. I looked at it candidly. I weighed it fully, and concluded to test its practicability. I did so with the happiest results. I do not regret the trial. The victory is a glorious one.

There are many who, undoubtedly, will say, if you do not want to use it, you can abstain, but let others alone. Do not be reproving us for indulging in this practice. But such a course as this would be wrong. Shall a man prove recreant to God and to principle, through fear of displeasing somebody? The proper time to reprove men for sin is, when we have become convinced of it and reformed ourselves. Such preaching as this is practical, and is the only kind that does any good. The habit of using tobacco is an evil habit; its influence is evil, and only evil, continually. The same may be said of tea and coffee; the former is the least hurtful when it can be obtained in its pure state. But this, at present, is impossible. Tea is rendered impure by the admixture of gypsum and Prussian blue, which is dusted over it in the drying pans. It is a well known fact that the leaves of "the black currant; mock orange; purple-spiked willow herb; cherry-tree; hawthorn; bramble; sloe, &c., are substituted for tea by dealers."

We will bring this article to a close, hoping that some person who is in the habit of indulging in the use of these articles—tobacco, tea and coffee—will be induced to commence a course of total abstinence. If you want to get rid of many ailments that you now have, leave off these bad habits. If you want to get rid of that "gone feeling" that you speak of so often, leave off the use of tobacco, tea and coffee. Do not say you cannot, for you can. Be men, be women, and above all, show the virtue of christian principles, by giving these censurable habits a severe letting alone.

Musings of an Evangelist.

No. I.

In what may follow in the articles I now propose to present, some things may appear too small to entertain the mind, some things will not be looked at from the standpoint which the writer occupied, while some of them may have been suggested by the devil. But we propose to write out some of our secret musings and make them public. They may meet the eye and heart of some who have passed over the same road, or of some who have located on the road and have forgotten who were on pilgrimage to "the better land." Some may also have their thoughts awakendd to consider important duties much neglected.

But where shall I begin? I have always been thinking. Well, I will begin at the point where I thought seriously of obeying the deep impressions the word of God made on my heart about the duty of the Christian to hold up before the world a crucified, risen, living, glorified Savior. When I felt that the love of Christ constrained me, the spirit of Christ wrought upon me, and the word of Christ was as fire shut up in my bones, and that I must preach the gospel of Christ, I thought of my unworthiness, unfitness, ignorance, want of education, slow speech, small gift; then of the vastness of the work; the responsibili[illegible] liability to err in my calling, [illegible] to err in the work. "I could [illegible] the words of an apostle,—"Lord, [illegible] is sufficient for these things?"

Yet I believed the Lord had blessed his word, had arrested my attention, shown me his love for me, a lost sinner, had healed my soul, and shown me the perishing condition of a sinful world, while the voice of the word sounded in my ears and reached my heart, "Who will go for me?" I started at the thought, and answered, I cannot go.

The word read again, "Go ye into the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." What results to follow the preaching of the gospel! thought I. But I can't preach. "He that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins," led me to contemplate the great gain of preaching if God helped.

But I don't know how to preach. I shall appear like a fool. Here again the word met me, "God hath ordained by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

But what shall I preach, if I try?—"Preach the word." Again, "The Lord gave the word and great was the company of them that published it."

But it is not the fashion now to preach the plain word. People want eloquent orations and learned addresses, theological essays, and pleasing speakers, of much school wisdom. I can produce none of these. Here the words of Paul stare me in the face. "And I brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech, or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified And I was with you in weakness and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not in enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of the power. That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God."

I could plead no longer. A learned man must come down to my level to preach as God wanted to have him. Let the Spirit dwell in my heart, and go thou with me, O Lord, and I will try. I did try, but "the fear of man" brought a snare on my heart, and failed; sinking in doubt and shame I half determined it was a final test of my call—the case had turned that I could not preach. In a moment I saw the snare; faith renewed its hold on the arm of the Lord. I at once resolved, I will try again. I did try, and God has set his seal to the effort, and stood by me, granting his aid, and blessing me a thousand times.

But what was the prospect of worldly advantages, of a home of peace and plenty, of ease and enjoyment? I thought of these things, I saw the multitude around me professing to be Christians, and many of them were such, with varieties of pleasant things, farms, stock, houses, stores, goods, shops, &c., and spending their time and energies, improving their various gifts to increase these things—to add to their comfort and conveniences, to supply their houses and families with all earthly blessings. But the faithful ministers of Christ could not so act; they must practice greater self-denial than others.

Here was a temptation; I had talent to do business; had tried, and found I could earn money. I had friends and associates and kindred, in whose society I delighted. Should God permit, I could establish myself in a desirable position, and enjoy society, help on the cause of God with my spare means, and so be in quiet. Is not this a temptation to nature?

But hark! A voice whispers to my soul as in the stillness of a death-scene, and with the power of an earthquake, "God gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." How could I plead longer? Jesus had denied himself of his glory in heaven, taken our nature, refused earthly glory, wealth, and dominion, roved in the wilderness, the mountains, the deserts, "had not where to lay his head," spent his time teaching the people, did not settle down, but said, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God;" died at the hand of his enemies. This he did for me, that my sins might be forgiven, that I, and "whosoever believeth might have everlasting life." Could I refuse to be his servant?

From D. R. and M. S. Mansfield.

Bro. Grant:—We can say to the praise of our heavenly Father, that the outpouring of his Spirit has been felt in this place to the conversion of many souls. The state of the church through this section has been very low for a time; we have wept over our condition and cried unto God for help. He who never slumbers or sleeps we believe has heard our prayers, and has not turned us away empty.

Through the providence of God a door was opened unto us in this place about the 10th of November. On the 15th, by order of the church, Bro. and Sr. Seymour were called to assist in a protracted meeting. They spent ten days with us and preached the word to a crowded house. Our meeting continued three weeks. The word preached took effect in the hearts of many. Eighteen have been buried with Christ in baptism. The Disciple church have baptized as many more since the meeting closed.

Our prayer and conference meetings are very interesting. Others we expect will soon put on Christ. The church is rousing up to a sense of her duty, and our prayer is, that she may continue in this state until her Lord shall call her home. There appears to be an opening throughout this section for a good work. May we have health and strength to discharge our duty to this people.

We are very glad to hear that the health of our dearly beloved Bro. Hastings is improving. He has many warm friends in the West who have never seen his face. We hope that he will still continue to improve, and that he will soon visit the West. We think he would find it very beneficial to his health. Will he correspond with us upon this subject?

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Buchanan, Mich., Dec. 23, '57.

From Bro. L. S. Ludington.

Dear Bro. Grant:—It is a long time since I have spoken through a public medium; but since my retirement, follies and misfortunes have caused others to speak of me through the papers, and I now feel called on to make public mention of myself. It is about a year and a half since I have attempted to preach a sermon, and nearly as long a time since I have enjoyed the blessings of Christian association. My health, mental, moral and physical, has been very poor. First, my mind was much impaired by being overtaxed, and often painfully perplexed and troubled.—Second, my moral health failed in consequence of neglect, and refusal in part to perform the duties which heaven enjoined. And lastly, my physical infirmities may justly be attributed to the aforesaid mental and moral conditions.

But notwithstanding all the wanderings of mind and heart, the truth of the gospel of Christ, and the divinity of its author, I have steadfastly held and defended, when questioned respecting them: and I am very happy to say, that for a little time past I have derived from them much comfort and support. O how could I ever have ceased to proclaim their claims and benefits! How kind the hand, and adorable the wisdom, which has so led me under the rod, and so controlled events as to enable me to find again myself and my Savior!

I did not design to leave the Savior, nor to throw away my faith,—only to leave part of my work, and to escape some "fiery trials." But how much did I get of ease and comfort? Nothing; but lost all, and almost lost myself forever.

I now heartily thank God for my humiliation under his rod, and for the peaceable fruit which it yields. I sought forgiveness at his hand, and found his promise true. I now ask forgiveness of all my injured brethren: and I know that all who have forgiveness from "God for Christ's sake" will forgive me,—even me.

Let all whom God hath called to the ministry of his word be careful how they preach, how they act, and never leave the work, until it is finished, or God gives you a discharge; if you do you will find harder labor, worse trials, and perhaps final ruin. Beware!!

Since it has been thought by some that my mental confusion was caused by my association with the Advent ministry, I feel in duty bound to say that while I kept myself to that work my mind grew strong; but when I turned it to other matters and tried to escape the former, I became confused and troubled. The effect of truth upon the mind and heart, is, to regulate, control, and save. I know not what my future engagements may be; but, "looking unto Jesus," I shall have

"Whatever may my time employ,
The soul's calm sunshine
And the heartfelt joy."

My faith in Christ and his gospel is unshaken, and my sympathy is with all who are looking and striving for the kingdom to come. I have not, in all my wanderings and irregularities, felt malice in my heart toward the truth, or its supporters! my acts, which gained for me an unenviable notoriety, were acts of frenzy, produced by a disordered conscience, under mental exertion, and a keen sense of wrongs which I suffered; and these, aided by the use of stimulants,—which were taken to support a sinking frame, and to calm a troubled mind.

If I were to set forth all the facts connected with my late history, I doubt not the public censure would be more generously mingled with pity; but I forbear, leaving wrongs to be righted by the All-wise, in whose hand are the hearts of men.

No. IX.

For the last two weeks, we have laid our pen down on this subject, to listen to the interesting experience of Bro. Berick. We hope all who use this poisonous drug, as well as tea and coffee, will follow his example, and enjoy the rich comfort that results from total abstinence. We suppose some think it not safe to leave off a habit so long indulged, and yet really wish they were free from its pernicious effects.

Says Dr. Clay, of Manchester, England:

"Some individuals assert that it would be injurious to aged and habituated smokers to give up the custom suddenly, but what is the fact? Thousands of aged persons, long accustomed to smoking, are annually sent to our prisons and houses of correction, where they are suddenly deprived of tobacco, and yet no bad consequences ensue; they return to society, after their period of confinement, improved in appearance, and evidently in better health. . . . The smoker is constantly in a depreciated atmosphere. The saliva secreted from the glands within the mouth, which ought to be pure and unadulterated, for the purpose of mixing with the food for the formation of nourishment of the body, is, on the contrary, impregnated strongly with tobacco, and secreted in too large quantities, and, by this means, drains the system of its strength, brings on that very indigestion it is recommended to cure, and thus silently, slowly, but no less certainly, undermines the strongest constitution, and produces that sallow, emaciated, and cadaverous class of society, exemplified by smokers and chewers of tobacco. Smokers obtain the same effects from this herb as from spiritous liquors—it is, in fact, an inebriating object, and, if drunkenness be a sin, smokers are really and truly drunkards. . . . Its attendant evils are great and numerous; polluting the breath, blackening the teeth, wasting the saliva, injuring the complexion, producing indigestion, emaciation, and a host of nervous disorders; the stomach becomes much deranged; the scene is often wound up by death from apoplexy."

"Snuffing is a degree worse than smoking; in addition to the adulterations already mentioned in the manufacture of tobacco, it requires more for the formation of snuff. It is made to undergo various adulterations; salt is sometimes mixed with it to increase its weight, and to give it pungency; and for this purpose, urine is also added to it, in order to obtain the muriate of ammonia which it contains. Glass, finely powdered, is also employed, to give a greater degree of acrimony, and to stimulate the living membrane of the nostrils, and this, by some manufacturers, is very extensively used, particularly in the Welsh snuffs. . . . It vitiates the organs of smell, it taints the breath, affects the sight, the respiration and the digestion. . . It is generally allowed the disease which terminated the life of Napoleon Bonaparte was brought on by excessive snuffing. . . It is the sole cause of that variety of dyspepsia, of which I have witnessed a vast number of instances, the symptoms being a painful sensation of weight at the stomach; of a hard, undigested substance pressing, as it were, upon a tender part of the stomach, which sensation is for the time relieved by taking food; remarkable depression of spirits, every thing seen through a medium of gloom and distrust, and tremors of the nerves. . . Snuffing has a strong tendency to encourage a determination of blood to the head, giving rise to apoplexy, and, on this account, plethoric subjects should never indulge in such habits. . . .

Chewing.—If smoking and snuffing are attended with such disagreeable consequences, what must we consider chewing? This is the worst manner for the health in which tobacco can be used. The waste of saliva is greater than in smoking, and the derangement of the digestive organs proportionably severe. All confirmed chewers are more or less subject to long-standing diseases of the stomach and liver. . . . Tobacco is closely allied to intoxicating liquors, and its votaries are neither more nor less than a species of drunkards; at least it produces the same effects of inebriety, and is attended by the same fearful results. Can any man justify himself in the use of this poisonous plant, in opposition to the evidence I have brought before you? Will he still willingly be a slave to his pipe, box, and quid? To what does this evidence amount? That tobacco is an active poison—that its use is productive of the most distressing and fatal diseases.

Let every child of God summon all his strength, and say, by the help of the Lord, I will quit the use of tobacco forever. I will be a slave no longer to a habit that is robbing me of my sweet peace, and sowing the seeds of death in my constitution. Tobacco, I bid thee an eternal farewell.

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Portland, Jan. 14.

The screw steamship North American, Capt. Grange from Liverpool, 30th Dec., arrived here this evening.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

London, Wednesday, 30th. The Times city article says:—The funds opened steadily, and showed a tendency to increased firmness during the whole day, until after regular hours, when a sudden decline took place, attributed to operations in connection with the failure of the dealer announced yesterday.

INDIA.

The Bombay mails of Dec. 4th had reached England.

The news of the relief of Lucknow is confirmed. The enemy fought desperately.

The rebels had evacuated Lucknow.

Sir Colin Campbell asks for reinforcements, although his force is computed at 12,000, in fine order.

The women, children and sick were safely conveyed to Cawnpore.

The fighting before Lucknow was very severe. On the 16th, the enemy suffered enormously. The fight on that day was one of the most severe ever witnessed. On the 19th the enemy were flying in great numbers from Lucknow, and firing had nearly ceased. After the fight of the 16th, the bodies of 160 Sepoys were counted in one place.

Two telegraph clerks had been murdered near Alumbagh, the news being thereby stopped.

When Campbell left Cawnpore on the 11th, he rode forty miles at one stretch. In his engagements he relied on his artillery as much as possible, thereby avoiding unnecessary loss of men.

Nena Sahib, with all his men and baggage, it is said, has joined the rebels at Gwalior.

It is reported that the King of Delhi's son and two nephews, after being tried by military commission, had been shot.

The Daily News Bombay correspondent says the rebels at Oude have placed a boy on the throne, and keep him in State at Fyzabad, a city of 100,000 inhabitants, defended by a large fort, with wall, ditch, round towers, and new entrenchments. Here the last great stand may be expected.

Three companies of the 34th native Infantry mutinied at Chittagong and marched to Dacca. 100 Europeans were sent to intercept them.

Jaunpore territory is threatened by a large force from Oude.

Serious disorders are anticipated in Rajpootna, and European troops were urgently wanted.

The steamer Sarah Sands, while conveying troops to India, took fire Nov. 11, and burned for 15 hours. All the after part of the vessel was destroyed. She put into Mauritius for repairs. The troops showed perfect discipline. The preservation of all on board was extraordinary.

RUSSIA.

Navigation of the Azof is closed for the season.

The Circassian Chiefs have sent a petition to the great European Powers, praying the Treaty of Paris, which forbids hostilities in the Black Sea, and opens the commerce of Circassian ports, may be enforced against Russia.

CHINA.

Hong Kong dates are of Nov. 15.

The fleet were about to move into Canton river. The French will co-operate with the English. Operations are expected to be commenced immediately.

THE BLACK SEA.

The master of the Russian ports in the Black Sea has been complicated by the fact that the Russian Government has re-established military servitude on the coast of the Crimea, razed the town of Kameisch, and forbidden the entrance to that port of merchant ships, as before the Crimean war.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Halifax, Jan. 16

The Cunard steamship America, Capt. Lott, from Liverpool 10.30 A. M., Jan. 2, arrived at this port at 10 o'clock this morning.

[By Telegraph from London to Liverpool.]—London, Saturday.—The Times City Article says: "The year has commenced favorably in all the Stock markets, and Consols have experienced a further improvement of nearly half per cent; the last price to-day being exactly the same as that on the 1st of January, 1857. At the Bank, notwithstanding the approach of the 4th, the demand for discount is very light. In open market the rate for best bills ranges from 6 1-2 to 7 per cent.

The Operations against Canton.—(From the Times.)—By the present time, probably, Canton has been attacked and captured. It has been determined to make the dispute entirely local. Should the Emperor answer the capture of Canton by the expulsion of the English traders from Shanghae, then, indeed, matters will grow serious. But should he determine that the Canton Governor and mob have been justly punished, it is possible that hostilities may be confined to operations which were to be commenced in the south. The British force seems to be sufficient for the purpose of acting retribution at Canton. In a few days, says our correspondent, we may reasonably expect to have 700 guns and 7000 men in these waters, and of the latter we shall probably be able to land 4000. The blue-jackets were being drilled for service on land.

We learn that the French have also determined to resort to hostilities against the Chinese. Thus we shall have the singular spectacle of two nations prosecuting hostilities against the same people on different grounds, and without any formal convention of alliance. It is well understood that the Americans are to retain their position of looking on.

The Leviathan.—The process of working down toward the water will be formally commenced for the sixth time, either to-day or Monday. No less than 11 presses are fixed against the aft cradle, and 10 against the forward one. One of the former is of enormous strength and dimensions.

NAPLES.

Letters from Naples give graphic details of the late earthquake. Official accounts leave no doubt that several thousands perished, and some estimates reach as high as 10,000 to 20,000.

SPAIN.

A letter from Spain says it appears certain that the Spanish Government will consider the mediation of England and France in the Mexican affair as broken off, if Mexico does not accept all its conditions.

In consequence of this resolution, preparations are being actively made, both in Spanish ports and in Cuba, for an expedition against Mexico.

PRUSSIA.

A Berlin letter says the American crisis caused such serious effects on the commerce of Tharingen that the government of Weimar has thought it necessary to convoke an extraordinary session of the Diet to regulate commercial affairs.

TURKEY.

It is said that the Porte, before consenting to the cutting of the Suez Canal, demands the evacuation of Perim.

INDIA.

The accounts of the relief of Lucknow are meagre. The loss of the rebels between the 13th and 17th, is estimated in one account at 7000.

CHINA.

According to advices in French papers, negotiations entered into by the English representative with the Chinese government have failed.

The persecutions by the Chinese against the Christians were increasing, and several of the latter have fallen victims.

Domestic Summary.

LATER FROM KANSAS.

St. Louis, Jan. 12.

The Free State men were making arrests of fraudulent voters under the new act of the Legislature.

At Calhoun, a judge named Calvert was arrested for stuffing the ballot boxes, and another named Redman for receiving fraudulent votes.

Calvert was taken to Leavenworth, and with a cannon belonging to the Kickapoo Rangers, paraded through the streets.

Much excitement prevailed and fears were entertained that serious trouble would follow.

Political parties were much divided, the majority being bitterly opposed to the Lecompton Constitution.

Gen. Calhoun was supposed to be in Western Missouri, and had been advised not to return to the Territory.

NEWS FROM THE ARMY OF UTAH.

Washington, Jan. 9.

From advices received to-day, it appears that the army will not retreat from Utah, as was expected by the Government, but will fight it out where they are. This insures a bloody war in the Spring.

Orders will be issued from the headquarters of the army on Monday, directing the troops destined to reinforce the troops now en route for Utah.

LATER FROM THE UTAH EXPEDITION.

St. Louis, Jan. [illegible]

The Republican has advices from the Utah expedition to Dec. 1. The troops were all in winter quarters at Fort Bridger, with the exception of Col. Cooke's command, which was posted forty miles distant on Henry's Fork, where a scant supply of grass remained.

Fort Bridger was being rebuilt, for the purpose of protecting the provisions.

The troops were comfortably stationed in tents with stoves.

The weather had been very mild and good health prevailed.

The provisions on hand were sufficient to last till next June, by close allowence.

Capt. Marcy had been sent to Taos and Santa Fe to obtain supplies.

It is said that Col. Johnston is so well assured that the Mormons will leave in the Spring, that he asks no increase of the force now under his command.

Gov. Cummings has signed a proclamation declaring the Territory in a state of rebellion.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

New York, Jan. 13.

The steamship Star of the West, from Aspinwal 4th inst., arrived here shortly after 9 o'clock this evening.

The Mormons having left San Barnardino for Salt Lake, their farms were being sold at a ruinous sacrifice.

Col. Anderson had surrendered to the frigate Susquehannah.

Col. Anderson before surrendering destroyed all the buildings and cattle at Castillo, and broke the machinery of the Lake steamers.

The Mildness of the Season.—It is stated that the farmers of Perry county, Pa., are ploughing their farms for the spring crops.

A resident of Yonkers, N. Y., reports hearing a party of late or early frogs "peeping" very briskly Monday morning. The violets are in bloom in sheltered spots, the grass is starting out, and the buds on a good deal of shrubbery are in a very forward state.

Obituary.

Died, at his residence in Effingham, N. H., Dec. 24, '57, Elder Thomas Sanborn, aged fifty-four years.

Bro. S. gave his heart to God in early life, and at the age of twenty-seven entered the ministry. As a faithful watchman he was ever ready to proclaim and defend whatever he believed to be God's truth. He was one of the first who embraced the doctrine of the second coming of Christ about '43, and joyfully bore the glad tidings to the bidden guests.

He quietly fell asleep in Christ after a lingering and distressing illness of some four months. Our dear sister is left alone to mourn, but she sorrows not as those that have no hope.

His funeral was attended by the writer, who endeavored to comfort the deeply afflicted friends with these words;—1 Thess. 4; 13—18.

Herald and Expositor please copy.

T. H. Piper.

Fell asleep, in Granby, Mass., Dec. 20th, 1857, Sr. Eliza, wife of Orrin Frost, aged twenty-six years, and infant, three weeks.

Sr. F. has been a believer in the near coming of Christ for about three years. As she fell asleep she left behind the evidence that she should obtain immortality throug Jesus, at the resurrection to eternal life. She left a husband and children to mourn their loss, with a large circle of relatives and friends.

W. B. Davis

Fell asleep in Jesus, Bro. Samuel Rowell, aged seventy-seven years.

He experienced religion when about sixty. In 1843 he became a firm believer in the Advent doctrine, and steadfastly maintained his profession, always ready to give a reason for his hope.

Abroad, in meeting, or in whatever company, he was found ready for every good word and work. His house was a home for the pilgrim; none were turned empty away. It may be said of him, as the poet says of the happy man,—

"His God and his Bible were all that he desired,
And to holiness of heart and life he constantly aspired."

His sufferings were extreme beyond description.

By this affliction an aged, feeble widow is left to mourn the loss of a beloved husband; five children are bereft of one of the kindest and most affectionate fathers; the neighbors of a kind and obliging friend.

His remains were conveyed to our quiet graveyard, there to rest until the morn of the resurrection, when we believe he will come forth clad in immortal bloom. May the Lord sanctify the event to the good of his family and friends.

H. M. B.

Died, Dec. 24, 1857, in Kennebunk, Me., William Huff, aged 24 years.

The subject of this notice experienced a hope in Christ in the Fall of 1854. He died in hope of being raised when Jesus comes.

May God sanctify the bereavement to the good of his friends. The funeral was attended by the writer, and some remarks made from Luke 20: 37, 38.

W. H. Mitchell.

ing of his Spirit has been felt in this place to the conversion of many souls. The state of the church through this section has been very low for a time; we have wept over our condition and cried unto God for help. He who never slumbers or sleeps we believe has heard our prayers, and has not turned us away empty.

Through the providence of God a door was opened unto us in this place about the 10th of November. On the 15th, by order of the church, Bro. and Sr. Seymour were called to assist in a protracted meeting. They spent ten days with us and preached the word to a crowded house. Our meeting continued three weeks. The word preached took effect in the hearts of many. Eighteen have been buried with Christ in baptism. The Disciple church have baptized as many more since the meeting closed.

Our prayer and conference meetings are very interesting. Others we expect will soon put on Christ. The church is rousing up to a sense of her duty, and our prayer is, that she may continue in this state until her Lord shall call her home. There appears to be an opening throughout this section for a good work. May we have health and strength to discharge our duty to this people.

We are very glad to hear that the health of our dearly beloved Bro. Hastings is improving. He has many warm friends in the West who have never seen his face. We hope that he will still continue to improve, and that he will soon visit the West. We think he would find it very beneficial to his health. Will he correspond with us upon this subject?

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Buchanan, Mich., Dec. 23, '57.

From Bro. L. S. Ludington.

Dear Bro. Grant:—It is a long time since I have spoken through a public medium; but since my retirement, follies and misfortunes have caused others to speak of me through the papers, and I now feel called on to make public mention of myself. It is about a year and a half since I have attempted to preach a sermon, and nearly as long a time since I have enjoyed the blessings of Christian association. My health, mental, moral and physical, has been very poor. First, my mind was much impaired by being overtaxed, and often painfully perplexed and troubled.—Second, my moral health failed in consequence of neglect, and refusal in part to perform the duties which heaven enjoined. And lastly, my physical infirmities may justly be attributed to the aforesaid mental and moral conditions.

But notwithstanding all the wanderings of mind and heart, the truth of the gospel of Christ, and the divinity of its author, I have steadfastly held and defended, when questioned respecting them: and I am very happy to say, that for a little time past I have derived from them much comfort and support. O how could I ever have ceased to proclaim their claims and benefits! How kind the hand, and adorable the wisdom, which has so led me under the rod, and so controlled events as to enable me to find again myself and my Savior!

I did not design to leave the Savior, nor to throw away my faith,—only to leave part of my work, and to escape some "fiery trials." But how much did I get of ease and comfort? Nothing; but lost all, and almost lost myself forever.

I now heartily thank God for my humiliation under his rod, and for the peaceable fruit which it yields. I sought forgiveness at his hand, and found his promise true. I now ask forgiveness of all my injured brethren: and I know that all who have forgiveness from "God for Christ's sake" will forgive me,—even me.

Let all whom God hath called to the ministry of his word be careful how they preach, how they act, and never leave the work, until it is finished, or God gives you a discharge; if you do you will find harder labor, worse trials, and perhaps final ruin. Beware!!

Since it has been thought by some that my mental confusion was caused by my association with the Advent ministry, I feel in duty bound to say that while I kept myself to that work my mind grew strong; but when I turned it to other matters and tried to escape the former, I became confused and troubled. The effect of truth upon the mind and heart, is, to regulate, control, and save. I know not what my future engagements may be; but, "looking unto Jesus," I shall have

"Whatever may my time employ,
The soul's calm sunshine
And the heartfelt joy."

My faith in Christ and his gospel is unshaken, and my sympathy is with all who are looking and striving for the kingdom to come. I have not, in all my wanderings and irregularities, felt malice in my heart toward the truth, or its supporters: my acts, which gained for me an unenviable notoriety, were acts of frenzy, produced by a disordered conscience, under mental exertion, and a keen sense of wrongs which I suffered; and these, aided by the use of stimulants,—which were taken to support a sinking frame, and to calm a troubled mind.

If I were to set forth all the facts connected with my late history, I doubt not the public censure would be more generously mingled with pity; but I forbear, leaving wrongs to be righted by the All-wise, in whose hand are the hearts of men.

Tobacco.

No. IX.

For the last two weeks, we have laid our pen down on this subject, to listen to the interesting experience of Bro. Berick. We hope all who use this poisonous drug, as well as tea and coffee, will follow his example, and enjoy the rich comfort that results from total abstinence. We suppose some think it not safe to leave off a habit so long indulged, and yet really wish they were free from its pernicious effects.

Says Dr. Clay, of Manchester, England:

Thousands of aged persons, long accustomed to smoking, are annually sent to our prisons and houses of correction, where they are suddenly deprived of tobacco, and yet no bad consequences ensue; they return to society, after their period of confinement, improved in appearance, and evidently in better health. . . . The smoker is constantly in a depreciated atmosphere. The saliva secreted from the glands within the mouth, which ought to be pure and unadulterated, for the purpose of mixing with the food for the formation of nourishment of the body, is, on the contrary, impregnated strongly with tobacco, and secreted in too large quantities, and, by this means, drains the system of its strength, brings on that very indigestion it is recommended to cure, and thus silently, slowly, but no less certainly, undermines the strongest constitution, and produces that sallow, emaciated, and cadaverous class of society, exemplified by smokers and chewers of tobacco. Smokers obtain the same effects from this herb as from spiritous liquors—it is, in fact, an inebriating object, and, if drunkenness be a sin, smokers are really and truly drunkards. . . . Its attendant evils are great and numerous; polluting the breath, blackening the teeth, wasting the saliva, injuring the complexion, producing indigestion, emaciation, and a host of nervous disorders; the stomach becomes much deranged; the scene is often wound up by death from apoplexy."

"Snuffing is a degree worse than smoking; in addition to the adulterations already mentioned in the manufacture of tobacco, it requires more for the formation of snuff. It is made to undergo various adulterations; salt is sometimes mixed with it to increase its weight, and to give it pungency; and for this purpose, urine is also added to it, in order to obtain the muriate of ammonia which it contains. Glass, finely powdered, is also employed, to give a greater degree of acrimony, and to stimulate the living membrane of the nostrils, and this, by some manufacturers, is very extensively used, particularly in the Welsh snuffs. . . . It vitiates the organs of smell, it taints the breath, affects the sight, the respiration and the digestion. . . It is generally allowed the disease which terminated the life of Napoleon Bonaparte was brought on by excessive snuffing. . . It is the sole cause of that variety of dyspepsia, of which I have witnessed a vast number of instances, the symptoms being a painful sensation of weight at the stomach; of a hard, undigested substance pressing, as it were, upon a tender part of the stomach, which sensation is for the time relieved by taking food; remarkable depression of spirits, every thing seen through a medium of gloom and distrust, and tremors of the nerves. . . Snuffing has a strong tendency to encourage a determination of blood to the head, giving rise to apoplexy, and, on this account, plethoric subjects should never indulge in such habits. . . .

Chewing.—If smoking and snuffing are attended with such disagreeable consequences, what must we consider chewing? This is the worst manner for the health in which tobacco can be used. The waste of saliva is greater than in smoking, and the derangement of the digestive organs proportionably severe. All confirmed chewers are more or less subject to long-standing diseases of the stomach and liver. . . . Tobacco is closely allied to intoxicating liquors, and its votaries are neither more nor less than a species of drunkards; at least it produces the same effects of inebriety, and is attended by the same fearful results. Can any man justify himself in the use of this poisonous plant, in opposition to the evidence I have brought before you? Will he still willingly be a slave to his pipe, box, and quid? To what does this evidence amount? That tobacco is an active poison—that its use is productive of the most distressing and fatal diseases.

Let every child of God summon all his strength, and say, by the help of the Lord, I will quit the use of tobacco forever. I will be a slave no longer to a habit that is robbing me of my sweet peace, and sowing the seeds of death in my constitution. Tobacco, I bid thee an eternal farewell.

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Portland, Jan. 14.

The screw steamship North American, Capt. Grange from Liverpool, 30th Dec., arrived here this evening.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

London, Wednesday, 30th. The Times city article says:—The funds opened steadily, and showed a tendency to increased firmness during the whole day, until after regular hours, when a sudden decline took place, attributed to operations in connection with the failure of the dealer announced yesterday.

INDIA.

The Bombay mails of Dec. 4th had reached England.

The news of the relief of Lucknow is confirmed. The enemy fought desperately.

The rebels had evacuated Lucknow.

Sir Colin Campbell asks for reinforcements, although his force is computed at 12,000, in fine order.

The women, children and sick were safely conveyed to Cawnpore.

The fighting before Lucknow was very severe. On the 16th, the enemy suffered enormously. The fight on that day was one of the most severe ever witnessed. On the 19th the enemy were flying in great numbers from Lucknow, and firing had nearly ceased. After the fight of the 16th, the bodies of 160 Sepoys were counted in one place.

Two telegraph clerks had been murdered near Alumbagh, the news being thereby stopped.

When Campbell left Cawnpore on the 11th, he rode forty miles at one stretch. In his engagements he relied on his artillery as much as possible, thereby avoiding unnecessary loss of men.

Nena Sahib, with all his men and baggage, it is said, has joined the rebels at Gwalior.

It is reported that the King of Delhi's son and two nephews, after being tried by military commission, had been shot.

The Daily News Bombay correspondent says the rebels at Oude have placed a boy on the throne, and keep him in State at Fyzabad, a city of 100,000 inhabitants, defended by a large fort, with wall, ditch, round towers, and new entrenchments. Here the last great stand may be expected.

Three companies of the 34th native Infantry mutinied at Chittagong and marched to Dacca. 100 Europeans were sent to intercept them.

Jaunpore territory is threatened by a large force from Oude.

Serious disorders are anticipated in Rajpootna, and European troops were urgently wanted.

The steamer Sarah Sands, while conveying troops to India, took fire Nov. 11, and burned for 15 hours. All the after part of the vessel was destroyed. She put into Mauritius for repairs. The troops showed perfect discipline. The preservation of all on board was extraordinary.

RUSSIA.

Navigation of the Azof is closed for the season.

The Circassian Chiefs have sent a petition to the great European Powers, praying the Treaty of Paris, which forbids hostilities in the Black Sea, and opens the commerce of Circassian ports, may be enforced against Russia.

CHINA.

Hong Kong dates are of Nov. 15.

The fleet were about to move into Canton river. The French will co-operate with the English. Operations are expected to be commenced immediately.

THE BLACK SEA.

The master of the Russian ports in the Black Sea has been complicated by the fact that the Russian Government has re-established military servitude on the coast of the Crimea, razed the town of Kameisch, and forbidden the entrance to that port of merchant ships, as before the Crimean war.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Halifax, Jan. 16

The Cunard steamship America, Capt. Lott, from Liverpool 10.30 A. M., Jan. 2, arrived at this port at 10 o'clock this morning.

[By Telegraph from London to Liverpool.]—London, Saturday.—The Times City Article says: "The year has commenced favorably in all the Stock markets, and Consols have experienced a further improvement of nearly half per cent; the last price to-day being exactly the same as that on the 1st of January, 1857. At the Bank, notwithstanding the approach of the 4th, the demand for discount is very light. In open market the rate for best bills ranges from 6 1-2 to 7 per cent.

The Operations against Canton.—(From the Times.)—By the present time, probably, Canton has been attacked and captured. It has been determined to make the dispute entirely local. Should the Emperor answer the capture of Canton by the expulsion of the English traders from Shanghae, then, indeed, matters will grow serious. But should he determine that the Canton Governor and mob have been justly punished, it is possible that hostilities may be confined to operations which were to be commenced in the south. The British force seems to be sufficient for the purpose of acting retribution at Canton. In a few days, says our correspondent, we may reasonably expect to have 700 guns and 7000 men in these waters, and of the latter we shall probably be able to land 4000. The blue-jackets were being drilled for service on land.

We learn that the French have also determined to resort to hostilities against the Chinese. Thus we shall have the singular spectacle of two nations prosecuting hostilities against the same people on different grounds, and without any formal convention of alliance. It is well understood that the Americans are to retain their position of looking on.

The Leviathan.—The process of working down toward the water will be formally commenced for the sixth time, either to-day or Monday. No less than 11 presses are fixed against the aft cradle, and 10 against the forward one. One of the former is of enormous strength and dimensions.

NAPLES.

Letters from Naples give graphic details of the late earthquake. Official accounts leave no doubt that several thousands perished, and some estimates reach as high as 10,000 to 20,000.

SPAIN.

A letter from Spain says it appears certain that the Spanish Government will consider the mediation of England and France in the Mexican affair as broken off, if Mexico does not accept all its conditions.

In consequence of this resolution, preparations are being actively made, both in Spanish ports and in Cuba, for an expedition against Mexico.

PRUSSIA.

A Berlin letter says the American crisis caused such serious effects on the commerce of Tharingen that the government of Weimar has thought it necessary to convoke an extraordinary session of the Diet to regulate commercial affairs.

TURKEY.

It is said that the Porte, before consenting to the cutting of the Suez Canal, demands the evacuation of Perim.

INDIA.

The accounts of the relief of Lucknow are meagre. The loss of the rebels between the 13th and 17th, is estimated in one account at 7000.

CHINA.

According to advices in French papers, negotiations entered into by the English representative with the Chinese government have failed.

The persecutions by the Chinese against the Christians were increasing, and several of the latter have fallen victims.

Domestic Summary.

LATER FROM KANSAS.

St. Louis, Jan. 12.

The Free State men were making arrests of fraudalent voters under the new act of the Legislature.

At Calhoun, a judge named Calvert was arrested for stuffing the ballot boxes, and another named Redman for receiving fraudulent votes.

Calvert was taken to Leavenworth, and with a cannon belonging to the Kickapoo Rangers, paraded through the streets.

Much excitement prevailed and fears were entertained that serious trouble would follow.

Political parties were muchdivided, the majority being bitterly opposed to the Lecompton Constitution.

Gen. Calhoun was supposed to be in Western Missouri, and had been advised not to return to the Territory.

NEWS FROM THE ARMY OF UTAH.

Washington, Jan. 9.

From advices received to-day, it appears that the army will not retreat from Utah, as was expected by the Government, but will fight it out where they are. This insures a bloody war in the Spring.

Orders will be issued from the headquarters of the army on Monday, directing the troops destined to reinforce the troops now en route for Utah.

LATER FROM THE UTAH EXPEDITION.

St. Louis, Jan. [illegible]

The Republican has advices from the Utah expedition to Dec. 1. The troops were all in winter quarters at Fort Bridger, with the exception of Col. Cooke's command, which was posted forty miles distant on Henry's Fork, where a scant supply of grass remained.

Fort Bridger was being rebuilt, for the purpose of protecting the provisions.

The troops were comfortably stationed in tents with stoves.

The weather had been very mild and good health prevailed.

The provisions on hand were sufficient to last till next June, by close allowence.

Capt. Marcy had been sent to Taos and Santa Fe to obtain supplies.

It is said that Col. Johnston is so well assured that the Mormons will leave in the Spring, that he asks no increase of the force now under his command.

Gov. Cummings has signed a proclamation declaring the Territory in a state of rebellion.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

New York, Jan. 13.

The steamship Star of the West, from Aspinwall 4th inst., arrived here shortly after 9 o'clock this evening.

The Mormons having left San Barnardino for Salt Lake, their farms were being sold at a ruinous sacrifice.

Col. Anderson had surrendered to the frigate Susquehannah.

Col. Anderson before surrendering destroyed all the buildings and cattle at Castillo, and broke the machinery of the Lake steamers.

The Mildness of the Season.—It is stated that the farmers of Perry county, Pa., are ploughing their farms for the spring crops.

A resident of Yonkers, N. Y., reports hearing a party of late or early frogs "peeping" very briskly Monday morning. The violets are in bloom in sheltered spots, the grass is starting out, and the buds on a good deal of shrubbery are in a very forward state.

Obituary.

Died, at his residence in Effingham, N. H., Dec. 24, '57, Elder Thomas Sanborn, aged fifty-four years.

Bro. S. gave his heart to God in early life, and at the age of twenty-seven entered the ministry. As a faithful watchman he was ever ready to proclaim and defend whatever he believed to be God's truth. He was one of the first who embraced the doctrine of the second coming of Christ about '43, and joyfully bore the glad tidings to the bidden guests.

He quietly fell asleep in Christ after a lingering and distressing illness of some four months. Our dear sister is left alone to mourn, but she sorrows not as those that have no hope.

His funeral was attended by the writer, who endeavored to comfort the deeply afflicted friends with these words;—1 Thess. 4: 13—18.

Herald and Expositor please copy.

T. H. Piper.

Fell asleep, in Granby, Mass., Dec. 20th, 1857, Sr. Eliza, wife of Orrin Frost, aged twenty-six years, and infant, three weeks.

Sr. F. has been a believer in the near coming of Christ for about three years. As she fell asleep she left behind the evidence that she should obtain immortality throug Jesus, at the resurrection to eternal life. She left a husband and children to mourn their loss, with a large circle of relatives and friends.

W. B. Davis

Fell asleep in Jesus, Bro. Samuel Rowell, aged seventy-seven years.

He experienced religion when about sixty. In 1843 he became a firm believer in the Advent doctrine, and steadfastly maintained his profession, always ready to give a reason for his hope.

Abroad, in meeting, or in whatever company, he was found ready for every good word and work. His house was a home for the pilgrim; none were turned empty away. It may be said of him, as the poet says of the happy man,—

"His God and his Bible were all that he desired,
And to holiness of heart and life he constantly aspired."

His sufferings were extreme beyond description.

By this affliction an aged, feeble widow is left to mourn the loss of a beloved husband; five children are bereft of one of the kindest and most affectionate fathers; the neighbors of a kind and obliging friend.

His remains were conveyed to our quiet graveyard, there to rest until the morn of the resurrection, when we believe he will come forth clad in immortal bloom. May the Lord sanctify the event to the good of his family and friends.

H. M. B.

Died, Dec. 24, 1857, in Kennebunk, Me., William Huff, aged 24 years.

The subject of this notice experienced a hope in Christ in the Fall of 1854. He died in hope of being raised when Jesus comes.

May God sanctify the bereavement to the good of his friends. The funeral was attended by the writer, and some remarks made from Luke 20: 37, 38.

W. H. Mitchell.

For the Crisis.

PILGRIM.

Brother, sister, is thy face
Heavenward set to "run the race?"
Are thy steps to glory bound?
Will thy treasure there be found?

Pure and spotless, undefiled,
Meek and lowly, heaven's own child,
Patient, bearing all life's ills,
Drink the cup thy Father fills,
Trusting ever in his grace,
Hoping soon to see his face,
And in glory there abound,
On that holy, happy ground.

Do thine eyes their vigils keep,
Lest thou turn aside thy feet
From that narrow way to rest,
'Mid the pure, the good, the blest?

O, how blest must be that day,
When life's ills shall flee away,
And in glory usher thee,
There to spend eternity!

Shall I meet thee there, my friend,
In that world which ne'er shall end,
Where the weary are at rest—
With the pure, the good, the blest?

May it ever, ever be
'Mid that gorgeous company,
Chanting forth the praise of God,
In a song of one accord;
Pure and holy, heavenly strains,
In those sweet angelic themes,
Where there's known no groan or sigh,
'Mid th' immortal company.

O, how joyous is the thought,
That we soon may there be brought,
Leaving all our pain and woe
In this trial world below!

May the God of heaven above,
Keep us in his truth and love,
Give us an eternal rest,
With the pure, the good, the blest!

Motive—Duty.

Not to look at the question metaphysically, but in a practical view, let us for a moment inquire: What is motive? It must be the cause of all voluntary action, and hence must lie at the very foundation of moral action, and consequently form a part of duty itself. It may be called power—power to move; thus we speak of motive power in the mechanic arts. So we have moral motive, i. e., a moral power or influence to promote moral actions, good or evil,—motion always being involved.

But while we say that moral action must spring from a point where motive lies, we cannot conclude that that is the sole cause of such action, unless we consider it—the motive—as a result; for we must notice the elements which in their operation secure an influence upon the mind—which is the moving energy—positive or negative; and this becomes controlling, re-actionary, absorbing, directing, till the sources of that condition are entirely lost sight of. It would be found, therefore, that a state of mind is requisite, not only to the power of a cause, but to its existence; hence, a motive is found at times, and obeyed, which at other times could not exist; also, lesser and greater will attend more or less forcibly, on different occasions. Desire, love, hate, ambition, may be principles which generate the condition we call motive. I conceive the apostle's sentiment practically illustrative;—"Desire when it is conceived bringeth forth sin." Now here is a process before the point is reached which "bringeth forth sin"—the moral act. The existence of motive granted, and its action established in the performance of duty, we inquire for the necessary bearing of motive upon duty.

Object or aim is not the whole of motive.

Our object may be right, and the act be duty, while the whole motive is not right.

We may have also, a wrong motive and do a work which is right and duty in itself.

The motive may be right and the act be wrong, or not a matter of duty.

Hence, the fact of the object—which is only one element embraced in motive—being to do that which is commanded, as an imperative duty, is no proof that we have been moved entirely by a motive which is entirely right. We do not always know the force of our own prejudices, the perversity of our own will, the nature of our own desires; so that while we may suppose that we are quite perfect in the influence upon us—and our motive solely to subserve the cause of Christ—we may possibly work from some (to ourselves,) unseen, undiscovered principle of selfish human nature; and this, let me say, is the danger to us all; therefore, beware of impulsive action, for impulsion will drown the conception, and you will not know that you are right, or have the right momentum, even when you attempt that which is duty in itself. Correspondence.

From Eld. P. B. Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—According to the request of our friends I continue to give you some further account of my evangelistic labors in the West. My last was dated Shabbona Grove, Ill., Dec. 8th. I preached in Earlville where I had contemplated holding a series of meetings, but the weather, with some other circumstances, appearing unpropitious, and feeling a strong desire to spend a little time in Ottawa, I, the next morning, took cars for that place, which I reached at 12 1-4 o'clock A. M., the same night.

10th. Spent the day in looking after a few friends and trying to find a place to preach in. In the evening met four brethren in Mechanics Hall, to whom I proposed to preach, but for want of fire and a congregation I did not finally make the attempt—but enjoyed a season of prayer and talked the matter over concerning a series of meetings in the second Congregational Church which had been offered us by the pastor—who is a Millenarian—and the trustees, providing we would meet the contingent expenses of the house while we occupied it, which, being lighted with gas, and warmed with a furnace, with the ringing of the bell, required a sexton, and altogether, it was stated, cost about two dollars and a half a night. Said brethren agreed to become responsible for the expenses a few evenings, although with the understanding that most of them had little or no faith in the effort,—Ottawa being "a hard place."

11th. Issued hand-bills and preached in the evening to about thirty persons in the basement of the church; blessed with liberty and some faith.

12th. Preached as the evening before, except the audience a little increased. Bro. Schlozer, the pastor, had returned, and took part in our meeting—having promised to attend and help if I did not preach on the "annihilation of the wicked, which he did not know whether I believed or not;" to which I replied that I believed God would punish the wicked "with everlasting destruction," and that I always preached my views when I thought the occasion required.

13th. Sabbath.—Preached twice; audience in the evening large and attentive.

15th. Tuesday.—This evening announced that such as were desirous that our meetings continue were desired to remain after the audience was dismissed. A good company remained, when fifty-nine dollars and twenty-five cents were subscribed—twenty-five dollars being paid on the spot—so that from that time we were not troubled about the contingent expenses; but felt God was gaining favor with the people and in some measure blessing the truth.

30th. Preached this afternoon and evening and concluded my labors in Ottawa, for the present, leaving at 1 o'clock A. M., being just three weeks and one hour since I arrived in the city. After preaching in the evening, twenty-five friends improved the opportunity of a social meeting and witnessed by word of mouth for the truth. A few had been converted and some backslidden ones reclaimed; but the hour having arrived that we were to close, I requested that those who believed the cardinal doctrines I had preached, the doctrines of the Lord's coming, his personal advent and reign on the earth, with his saints resurrected and translated, and were determined from henceforth to live a Christian life, should rise up,—when seventy-nine friends rose up, beside a few avowed friends who were not present, but had before given their testimony for the truth.

Dec. 31st. Preached to the little flock in Cordova, in connection with which we had a prayer and conference meeting. This was a season of great refreshing, and altogether such as seemed becoming on bidding adieu to the old year, and hailing the birth of the new. But more we rejoiced that

"The millennial year rushes on to our view, and soon will be here. All glory be to the Lord on high!

Jan. 2d, 1858. Returned to my family, having been absent six weeks and two days; found all well. During my absence have averaged a sermon for every day since I left, but am as yet, in the mercy of God, in excellent health.

3d. Preached in this place. In the evening had a large and crowded audience while I preached on the orthodoxy of heresy.

On Thursday I go (D. V.) to attend the Quarterly Meeting in Vermillionville, Ill., and hope it may be the pleasure of God that I return immediately afterward to perform some labor in this place and the surrounding cities. Was glad when in Cordova to learn Bro. Chandler was yet in the field as an evangelist, being on a tour north. But, alas, how few the laborers!

And I am very truly yours,

Letter from Bro. S. N.

Eld. M. Grant, Dear Brother:—Will you permit an old man to tell you some of the effects of the use of tobacco upon myself for more than forty years. When I was but a youth I saw many older than myself making a constant use of tobacco, either by chewing or smoking, and I verily thought it to be quite manly and becoming; as I frequently saw the minister, the deacon, the doctor, the lawyer, and the merchant, I thought it would be an accession to my becoming a man. So I procured me a very fine tobacco box and filled it with tobacco. I went chewing and smoking, gagging and vomiting, until I succeeded in getting the mastery over it; and when I did, I thought I had achieved a great victory. But some five or six years after, when, by the grace of God, I was led to see my lost condition as a poor miserable sinner out of Christ, and was led to plead with God for mercy, I had at this time some serious convictions whether it was right in the sight of God for me to make use of this pernicious weed. But I found that the minister and professor were in the constant use of it, so I got over my convictions by looking at others whom I thought far better than myself.

I kept on smoking and chewing, and after a while entered the holy work of the ministry, preaching the doctrine of self-denial; but this doctrine was for my hearers and not for myself. Still, from time to time I had serious convictions that it was wrong, and that I was spending my money for that which was not bread. I found my health began to decline; my nerves became shattered; a hoarseness seized my lungs, and my teeth one after other dropped out; my nights, many of them, were sleepless, and my appetite very irregular, with a constant tremor in my limbs. But with all this I had not man enough, the habit got so deeply rooted in me, to lay it by, although I would have given any sum of money in my power to have been rid of it.

In 1843 I was in a neighboring town to fulfill an appointment, and a brother asked me if I ever had read Mr. Miller on the prophecies. I had never heard of the work. I bought it and read it, and read it again and again, and compared it with the Bible; and when reading, my mind was most solemnly impressed that our blessed Lord and Savior was about to be revealed from heaven. I felt truly as though I loved him with all my heart and that I loved his appearing. But this conviction came powerfully to my mind,—shall I be found blameless at his coming? I think I love him, for he is my Savior; he has washed my sins away in his own precious blood, and given me a good hope of eternal life at the resurrection, when he shall come to make up his jewels. Then, such powerful conviction rested on my mind as I never had before in regard to my evil habit.

Would to God that every minister, and every christian, could feel as I felt until I made the resolve, live or die, the use of that pernicious weed is done with me, or I am done with that forever. Now came the trial, after more than forty years use of it; such a trial I never had before, but my mind was fully made up. I then repaired to the throne of grace, first to ask God to pardon me for this wickedness, and to give me grace to overcome the powerful enemy. Then many times in the day, both in the closet and in the family, I pleaded with God to give me the victory. The struggle was a hard one indeed, and some thought I would die. I then entered into a solemn covenant with my God, if he would give me grace to overcome that enemy, that, as many times as I partook of my food, let me be where I would, when it was possible, I would get upon my knees and acknowledge his goodness and mercy towards me; and the covenant God has enabled me to keep until this day.

Now brother minister, and brethren and sisters, and especially you that are looking for the coming of your Lord, if you are in the use of this pernicious weed, I pray you to stop and reflect for a moment whether you will be found blameless at his coming while you are indulging in this sinful gratification? One who loves the coming of the Savior, S. N——

From Eld. J. P., Jun.

Bro. Grant:—Some weeks since I made the request that in your articles on the subject of man's organization and destiny, you make "the difference existing between Adventists" on this question so evident, that the readers of the "Crisis" may readily "comprehend wherein the disagreement lies." In your "Response," three opinions were selected from the eight given in article "number one," as embracing "all shades of belief." They are as follows: "Some believe that when a man is dead he never lives again; others, that he is immortal and never dies; others, that though he may die, he will have a resurrection from the dead." To this you added, "If neither of the above propositions express the belief," 'entertained by a large portion of Adventists,' "will our brother be so kind as to give us a concise and plain statement of their faith; for he would not knowingly misrepresent the faith of any class of believers." That the above three "propositions express the belief" 'entertained by a large portion of Adventists,' I make no question; but that they fairly and distinctly mark the "difference existing between Adventists," may be questioned with justice.

The first proposition, "that when a man is dead he never lives again," expresses in concise and unmistakable terms the doctrine of human annihilation. This opinion, with its legitimate consequences, was the avowed faith of the French atheists during the "Reign of Terror."

The third, "that though he may die, he will have a resurrection from the dead," is the common property of all evangelical believers. It includes Baptists, Christians, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, Pedobaptists, Presbyterians, Adventists, and so to the end of the list. Who among us doubts the fact of death, or the certainty of "a resurrection from the dead?" All Adventists believe that man is mortal; that he suffers the penalty of death, and that he will have a literal resurrection.

As therefore the first proposition is that of rank infidelity, and the third the common faith of us all—no more mine than yours, and no more yours than mine—how shall the readers of the "Crisis" understand and apply the second proposition, "that he is immortal and never dies?" These three propositions are designed to express so many distinct and opposite opinions, and also to specify what constitutes "the difference existing between Adventists touching the organization and future condition of mankind; yet we agree in rejecting the first, and all acknowledge the truthfulness of the last." Now did you purpose the first for those of our brethren who believe in the extinction of man at death, and the final annihilation of the wicked? I have not, neither will I do you, or them, the injustice to suppose so. That you deliberately purposed to give your readers the impression, that those of your brethren who conscientiously differ from you on man's organization, and his condition after death, and the final destiny of the wicked, do not believe in man's mortality, or in the "resurrection of the dead," I cannot believe, for the resurrection is a great cardinal doctrine wherein we find a blessed oneness of sentiment, upon which we all have a glorious hope, and from which we mutually and equally draw much joy and consolation. What disposal shall be made of the remaining proposition? It stands in contradistinction to the belief of human annihilation at death, and that of the resurrection of the dead; for it reads, "others, that he is immortal and never dies!" If you mean this for the faith of your brethren, then, all I have to say is, you have either stated our opinion very obscurely, or as it stands in its relation to the other opinion, you have placed us in an exceeding false position.

Now, Bro. Grant, I am not aware of using in my former communication, any language unbecoming a gentleman or a professed follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. If I have, you will do me a favor by pointing out in what manner I have violated any rule of common or christian courtesy. And if apparent, the apology due will be at once given.

Why I have sent this communication, and made the above remarks, may be understood by yourself and the reader, by once more reading the article in the last "Crisis," headed, "Information wanted," and having the humble signature of "A Learner."

I have taken a "critical review of the whole subject," and now believe the doctrine of the unconscious state of the departed to be a hurtful error; but if "the lucubrations of a certain brother of the Congregational order," backed by the criticisms of one of the best scholars now living, and whose piety none call in question, (Prof. Whiting) are futile, then "Bro. J. P., Jun.," would not presume to suppose for a moment that he is capable of imparting any "Information" to "A Learner" (?) on any doctrine taught in the Scriptures, or any question growing out of the original in which either the Old or New Testaments were written.

I have never claimed perfection for the new "Harp." I have before admitted that some few expressions had found their way into the book which were contrary to my sentiments and unscriptural, and in time, these will be modified. And considering the number of hymns, 1162; the number of verses, more than 5000; and its variety of subject; it is believed the candid will look upon the book with favor, and pardon its undesigned inaccuracies. When the book was compiled, I was a believer in the unconsciousness of the dead. Although I have no pecuniary interest in the "Harp," still, permit me to acknowledge, in this connection, your generous recommendation: "All things considered, we think it may be safely said, that it is the best hymn book in the English language."

"Information wanted?" Well; "the lucubrations of a certain brother of the Congregational order" are exerting an influence on many minds. Not a few, who have been for years firm believers in the non-existence of the dead, are seriously doubting the scriptural correctness of that doctrine, and some men of unquestionabl piety and good sense have renounced it. There are hundreds of humble, spiritual believers among us, who have seen only the two extreme views of this question: the prevailing orthodox sentiment, which is easily shown to be fallacious, and its ultra. The "golden mean" will be placed in their hands, and then no partial historic quotations of the faith of the primitive christians, or of the Reformers, calculated to place them in a false position; nor imperfect scriptural quotations stopping at commas; nor cant phrases, nor ridicule, will longer serve the purpose they have. Perhaps this is not the kind of "Information wanted," but from this information given, "A Learner" may be encouraged "in hope of finding some wisdom sometime."

I will close with not only "wishing my good Congregationalist, Methodist, Advent brethren all good success in their discussions of divine truth;" but also expressing my unfeigned love and fellowship for all sincere followers of Christ, whatever their denominational name, and praying that all professed believers in His speedy return may be imbued with that spirit of humility which ever betrays itself in the manner and language of the Christian "Learner."

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. S. E. Davis writes from Berlin, N. H.:—"Never did I see the goodness of God to the children of men nor the plan of redemption so plain as I have since the veil of tradition has been lifted from my mind. I now believe in immortality only through Christ. I think the Lord has begun a good work in this place. Bro. L. L. Howard has visited us three times of late. I heard more Bible truth than I ever heard preached before in all my life. His labors have been blest. My husband and one more have been converted. Others are inquiring the right way, for which I can say, 'Bless the Lord O my soul and all that is within me praise his Holy Name!' My heart's desire and prayer to God is that truth may triumph over error in this and every other place. I long for Christ's appearing and kingdom, when the earth shall be cleansed and the children all gathered into one happy family."

Sr. M. Lee writes from Urbana, O.:—"My heart overflows with gratitude to the Giver of all good, in that he has seen fit to spare the life, and, in a measure, restore the health of our much loved and devoted Bro. H. L. Hastings. My prayer has been that the Lord would raise him up to health and usefulness. We do not know how to spare such men from our ranks in these times of peril.

I believe the prayer of faith will heal the sick; and oh! my dear brethren and sisters, let us pray that God would spare the lives and health of our dear brethren who are proclaiming the truth. The harvest truly is great, and the laborers are few."

INDEPENDENCE.

How happy is he born or taught
Who serveth not another's will;
Whose armor is his honest thought,
And simple truth his highest skill;

Whose passions not his master's are;
Whose soul is still prepared for death;
Not tied unto the world with care
Of public fame or private breath;

Who God doth late and early pray
More of his grace than goods to lend,
And walks with man from day to day,
As with a brother and a friend.

This man is freed from servile bands
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall;
Lord of himself, if not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all.

The Shining Stars.

FROM THE GERMAN.

It was a cold, dark night as the aged Herman and his little son walked across the heath. They had journeyed during the whole day, and were now returning, cheerful and contented, to their native village. Dark gray clouds covered the horizon, and not a beam of cheering light shone upon their lonely path. Herman, familiar with the road, walked briskly on, leading his son by the hand; but suddenly it seemed to him as if he had gone astray.

With anxious, throbbing heart, Emilius clung to his father's hand, for he feared that they might be forced to pass the night upon the gloomy heath. But his father encouraged him, and said, "Let us go forward until we come to some hospitable cottage, where we may find shelter and food until morning dawns."

With this they hastened onward, but no friendly cottage appeared; the path grew wilder and their steps more uncertain.

But suddenly a sharp and piercing wind arose, scattering the dark clouds, and the starry heavens shone down upon the wanderers with all their shining lights.

"Heaven be praised!" said Herman; "now we shall find our way."

"And how?" inquired the boy.

"Do you not see that bright star yonder? That is Sirius, and at this season of the year it stands directly over our village. Come, we must turn off to the right, and we shall yet reach home before midnight."

Then Emilius wondered and said: "I could never have believed that we should find our way by the heavens."

And his father answered, "The wayfarer cannot do without the stars in the darkness of night; they are the guides upon his path, and when he strays from it, they will lead him back again to the right way. I will teach thee the number and course of these heavenly lights, that thou mayst journey safely on thy way, when I am no longer here to guide thee. And soon I will show thee other stars, stars which thou canst not see with thy bodily vision, but thou wilt view them in spirit, and they will lead thee safely across to thy heavenly home."

"Explain to me these mysterious words, my father," said the boy.

"Behold, my son, an inward, glorious world arises to man's view, and bright stars shine therein; they are the stars of faith. Upon the night of life they cast a bright and glowing light, and by their beams man finds that lofty, invisible world, where he beholds his home in God, his native land in everlasting love. He to whom these stars are quenched, stands in midnight gloom, wanders upon pathless ways, and strays farther and farther from the true path. But joy to the devout pilgrim who bears them in his bosom. They are the guides to which he clings, and they light him peacefully across the wished-for land."

Thus spoke the two together upon their way, and before the hour of midnight was passed, they had reached the door of their beloved cottage.—Independent.

Seeking Forgiveness.—How many times have I gone mourning through the day for some hasty outburst of anger, and dared not lift my voice to God in prayer for forgiveness and peace of mind. I would feel that I had sinned, and had no longer an interest at the throne of grace. And yet, as the day wore away, and whatever had caused those feelings of unhappiness had somewhat faded from memory, I have gone to God at last in real penitence and contrition, and confessed my sins and found mercy. But how much better would it have been, had I done then as my after experience has taught me to do—to go to God at once, and be relieved of my burden.

Systematic Beneficence.—"I think," said the Rev. John Brown of Haddington, "this having a distinct purse for the Lord is one of the most effectual means for making one rich. I have sometimes disposed of more this way than it could be thought I was capable of, and yet I never found myself poorer against the year's end."

Conservatism.—Douglas Jerrold defines a conservative as "a man who will not look at the new moon, out of respect for that ancient institution, the old one."

Men are frequently like tea—the real strength and goodness are not properly drawn out until they have been a short time in hot water.

It was a fine and true remark, that they who will abandon a friend for one error, know but little of human character, and prove that their hearts are as cold as their judgments are weak.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Poetry.

NEARER!

One sweetly solemn thought
  Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I'm nearer my home to-day
  Than I've ever been before.

Nearer my Father's house,
  Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
  Nearer the jasper sea.

Nearer the bound of life
  Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving my cross,
  Nearer wearing my crown.

Reminiscence of the Past.

No. II.

Even after the lapse of more than half a score years I can look back with pleasure to that season of unalloyed happiness and joy which I experienced subsequent to my change of heart. Instead of my soul being filled with bitter misanthropy, it overflowed with love to God and man. I boldly declared what my Savior had done for me, my resolution to fight the good fight under the blood-stained ensign of the Atonement, and earnestly warn sinners to flee from the wrath to come. It was well that I was under the watchful eye and wise counsel of my dear mother, else my fiery zeal might have gotten the better of reason, and self-righteous intolerance taken the place of humble love, watchfulness and prayer.

Although I have reason to thank God that I have been the means of doing good in several instances, yet there is one case in which a lamb was brought back to the fold through my supplications. She was my first and only convert.—

"Eternal praise and glory be to God
Who has, in kindly answer to my prayer,
Given me one soul."

The subject of the present sketch was one of the children of my father's favorite pilot, who being lost in a gale of wind, left a widow and four children unprovided for.

My mother gave the bereaved family a house free of rent, and took the second oldest child, Rose, to bring up and educate. Notwithstanding all the salutary influences that were brought to bear upon her, this beautiful child often grieved her benefactress by her waywardness, offending and repenting a dozen times a day, with such a mixture of recklessness and ingeniousness that my mother loved her despite her faults and often forbore inflicting the necessary chastisement lest she should seem unkind to the sailor's orphan.

I was but two years her senior, and our quarrels and reconciliations were innumerable; but on the whole we were pretty good friends; and when I was about to depart on my first voyage, she was the most uproarious person in the establishment. She lived at our house till she was eighteen, when the marriage of her oldest sister and the failing health of her mother rendered it necessary that she should remove to a more humble dwelling. There had been a desirable change wrought in her temper within a year or two, yet she had acquired a prouder bearing than others of her own sphere thought became her. By some she was thought haughty, by others insolent, but all admitted that she was beautiful, so much so that she was styled "Fair Rosamond" among her mates and acquaintances. To many this would have been a dangerous pre-eminence; but, although her suitors and admirers were many and of various ranks, there never was a breath of slander breathed upon her spotless name. The pride which disdained companionship of her natural class, kept at bay the moral harpies of a higher grade.

Her attention to the care of her sick mother, and her brother and sister, was unremitting, and she now materially contributed to their support, by executing fine pieces of embroidery for which she was liberally compensated by the neighboring gentry. At length her mother died, leaving to her the sole care of the little family. Several of her parent's relatives offered to take one of the children; but she would not hear of their separation, and continued her unceasing exertion until she had given her brother a commercial education, and fitted her younger sister to become a teacher. Until these dear ones had been fairly launched on the ocean of life, this noble, self-sacrificing girl refused to unite herself in marriage with any one, although more than one eligible offer had been made.

Yet one thing she lacked. Although regular in her attendance at church, she was as indifferent to the welfare of her soul as if she had never heard there was a glorious immortality to be gained, or eternal death to be avoided.

She would listen to my mother's anxious counsel because she loved and respected her; but she told others that she had not leisure just then to trouble herself about such things, nor probably would for a long time yet. Thus matters stood at my last return home.

What with my infirm state of health and her numerous duties, I saw little of Rose for some time; but learned from my mother her state of mind in regard to religion. The thought struck me, could I not be the means of bringing to the Savior that dear, obstinate but generous-hearted creature. The idea gained strength as I meditated upon the practicability of the scheme, till I seemed to hear the command to be up and doing. I told mother what I intended to essay, and with tears and blessings she bid me "God Speed."

I sauntered leisurely over to the cottage where the orphans resided, and was welcomed with affection. After many inquiries had been exchanged, I paused ere I began the task before me. I had formerly been such a light-hearted trifler that I was ashamed, and knew not how to commence the attack. I reflected a short time and at length said abruptly,—

"Rose, I was thinking what a sad thing it is to be an orphan."

She raised her head from her work, which she had resumed at my request, and replied with fast filling eyes,—

"It is indeed a sad thing, but few orphans have had such a smooth path as we, thanks to your kind mother for the greater part of it. God bless her, and long may be spare your parents to you, dear Fred."

I remarked that although gratitude to earthly benefactors was proper and becoming, yet our thanks should first be given to Him who had inclined the hearts of others to care for us, seeing that he is the Author and Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Rose threw back her curls and regarded me with a singular expression, half incredulous, half mocking. "Then it is true, the jolly tar has become serious! O dear! So we'll have no fun any more! Is that so? Have you really become a Methodist, Fred?"

"Have you any thing to say against Methodists, Rose?" I inquired.

"O no, no," she hastily replied; "but it seems rather hard for a young person to give up pleasure when there is so much to be enjoyed."

"There you are in error, dear sister," I said. "We never know what real happiness means until we experience religion—no peace till we give our hearts to God."

"Now you are as far upon the other tack, as you sailors say," cried Rose, laughing. "You don't mean to say that you are happier than you were before?"

"I do mean it, Rose," I replied.

"Why, to judge from your long face one would suppose you'd never have a hearty 'laugh again,'" cried Rose giving way to a clear ringing cachination, not unmingled with scorn. "Now I dare say you wouldn't laugh for the world."

"Answer me honestly, Rose," I replied. "Does laughter always come from a cheerful, or does it often hide an aching heart?"

"I admit that I have often laughed and seemed to enjoy myself when I was far from being happy," said the generous Rose. "But I sometimes really do enjoy the fun, although not so often as I used to, because my mind is more occupied with the world. The fact is, Fred, I cannot afford to laugh or pray any more than is necessary to keep in good terms with the world and my own conscience."

"And is it always fair weather betwixt you and your conscience, Rose?" I inquired. "No squalls, eh?"

The answer was taken up by Harriet, who replied with warmth, as she affectionately embraced her sister-mother, "Rose' conscience has nothing to accuse her with, Master Fred, for she is the kindest and best sister in the world. Conscience! There are few like her even among the Methodists, good as they think themselves."

"Verily I am in a strait betwixt two," cried Rose, laughing. "Here, on the one hand, is my friend, eager to make proselytes, who makes it appear that I am little better than one of the lost; and a partial sister on the other endows me with all the excellencies of an angel. So allowing for holy zeal on the one side and sisterly enthusiasm on the other, I shall consider myself neither better nor worse than others, with the like fair chance of heaven, and like danger of the other place!—Therefore we shall say no more on the subject. Tell us some of the news from abroad. You used to have plenty of stories about your travels. Of golden sands and mountains of ice, of coral reefs and terrible sharks. Come, brother, as I was wont to call you, I am low spirited to-day, and I want something to amuse me; besides, your old fun becomes you better than that sanctimonious face."

Her lively sallies had well nigh thrown me off my guard, for disposition to mirth has ever been my strongest besetment; still I was inexpressibly grieved at the unbecoming levity if not actual profanity of Rose. I almost despaired of doing her any good, and, with disappointment depicted in my countenance, I prepared to depart. She saw that I was annoyed, and, placing her hand caressingly upon my shoulder, said—

"Forgive me if I have pained you. I dare say you are sincere and wish me well, but religious impressions seldom remain long with the young. If at any time from three months hence, you speak to me as you have done to-day, I will listen; for, if you would convert me, you must exercise much patience."

I remember her words as distinctly as if they were spoken but yesterday, and I resolved to persevere. I had never stronger incentive to watchfulness than now. Here was a young woman full of life and beauty, careless and unconcerned about her eternal state, and it might be that if I remained faithful, she might be brought to Christ in answer to my prayer.

Again I left home and again returned after an absence of seven months. I was completely restored to health, and had never been a single moment shaken in my faith. I for a time had to withstand the jeers and mockings of my shipmates; but gradually these grew less frequent, and finally disappeared in the ship, and of a Sunday evening not a few of the seamen would assemble to hear the Word.

A sad change had come over the lovely Rose in the space of the last six months. Consumption, which feeds upon the fairest and the best, had marked her for its prey, and set its deadly seal upon her brow. I lost no time in visiting her, and saw with sorrow the ravages which the destroyer had already made. Yet, strange infatuation! the victim could, or would not believe that death inevitable had commenced the dreadful siege. It is so hard indeed to think that in a few months the dark and solitary nothingness of the grave shall take the place of the glorious light of the sun, and the ever-changing beauties of this lovely earth. It is only when our hearts are filled with the hope of immortality beyond the gloomy confines of the tomb, that we can calmly submit to the long, lonely sleep of the sepulchre.

When I inquired of Rose how she felt, the poor girl strove to assume an easy manner. She said that she had been ill for some time past—a pain occasionally and considerable weakness at times; but that she felt much better and would soon be all right again.

Poor Rose! the burning spot on either cheek, the glittering and sunken eye, the attenuated hand and faded lip told, alas! too plainly, that health would never come again. As I contemplated the lovely fabric thus crumbling to decay, I could not restrain my tears, for I loved her with a brother's love. The cheek of Rose grew pale on witnessing my emotion, and, in a hoarse voice, she asked me if I thought she was in danger. "They will not tell me candidly," she said, "but I conjure you to tell me what you think." In the best manner I could I told her my opinion, and although much moved, she bore it better than I expected. I spoke of her spiritual concerns, reminding her of the conditions she had named. She eagerly promised to give the matter her earnest attention, and I left her with strong faith that the good work was indeed begun. I was ably seconded by my mother; and one evening, when a few were assembled at the cottage, and while I prayed with a freedom never known to me before or since, the load was removed—the Spirit answered to the blood, and

"Another lamb of Jesus' flock was gathered to his fold."

Rose now could talk calmly of her approaching death, and entreated me not to leave home till all was over. I assisted to arrange her earthly affairs, and that done, she gave herself up wholly to her Savior. At times she was tempted to consider all a delusion, but her doubts were of short duration, and she grew rapidly in grace till the time of her dissolution.

The fall of the leaf had come, and Rose Fitzgerald was fast hastening to decay. She signified where she wished to be buried and asked me to write her epitaph. I promised to fulfill her request; but she wished to see what I meant to have engraved on her humble grave-stone, and to please her I showed her the following verse, which, although of little merit, seemed to give her satisfaction. It ran thus:

Underneath a Rose lies dead
  Within the silent tomb;
But it again shall raise its head
  With an immortal bloom."

"That will do," she said; "O that blessed hope of immortality! I am ready now and only await the summons of my God."

She often said that she would like to die on a Sunday, and on Saturday night she did dream that she would die at eight o'clock the following evening. All the forenoon of the Sabbath she seemed to suffer much bodily pain, and frequently cried, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" But in the evening she expressed herself free from suffering, and firm in her hope of salvation. Her little clock had been brought at her desire and set on the mantle place opposite the bed. Often her glance fell upon the dial, as if she longed for that hour which she believed would set her free. About five o'clock she wished to bid all her friends farewell while she had strength and clearness of mind. It was a solemn and deeply touching scene. No eye save hers alone, remained undimmed by tears, as in tones the most musical she bade us all adieu! To some she spoke encouragement, to others warning, to all a blessing.

A little before seven the final struggle commenced, with short periods of delirium. All knelt around the death bed of the young saint, and prayed to God to give her speedy release from suffering. Suddenly the patient seemed to rally. Her pain was entirely gone, and as the clock struck eight, her head sank gently on the pillow, and without another quiver she sweetly fell asleep.

EXAMINATION OF THE HEART.

Sabbath Eve., 9 o'clock.

What meaneth these self-reflective acts—these self-accusations—these burdened thoughts—these dissatisfied feelings which follow my religious exercises? From what source do they originate? Are they the direct darts, burning from Satan's quiver, sent to dishearten me in my efforts—to cripple my energies—to weaken my faith—to mar my peace?

Or are they the offspring of the unsanctified heart—the fruit of the carnal mind—the result of unsubdued pride—the development of selfish principles? From whence arise such thoughts as these after engaging in prayer? You prayed more to man, than God; you offered more the service of the lip, than of the heart; you manifested an outward fear, not felt in the soul; you asked, not expecting to receive; your petition was a vain and formal one; it affected no heart, it brought no response from heaven."

What produces such thoughts as these after giving public testimony? "There was no energy in your words—no power in your language—it penetrated no heart—awakened no feeling of interest—stirred no emotional feeling; it increased no faith, nor love, and awakened no alarm. It was motionless, empty, an unmeaning sound of words. Better have remained in silence upon your seat, than thus ineffectually to speak to the people."

O God! help me to understand the source from whence these suggestions come. If from the carnal mind—the unsatisfied nature,—let thy grace destroy, utterly, every vestige of such selfish principles. If from the direct assaults of Satan, give victorious faith and divine strength to overcome and triumph over them all. If pride causes the mantling blush of shame, subdue it; if Satan's burning dart sends the crimson flow, O, quench it, with faith's protecting shield! Amen.

The Love of Christ's Appearing.

Every righteous man must feel joy and pleasure in the anticipated, immediate return of his Lord. What possible event could be hailed with such overwhelming joy as the end of this sin-distracted and convulsed world, and the beginning of a new creation, in which, as christians, all hope to participate? New heavens, illuminated with an unsetting sun of ineffable glory, spangled with stars brighter far than our present sun; a new earth, surrounded with an unwonted atmosphere, filled with unfading freshness, sweetness and beauty, decorated with charms incomparably superior to Eden and its ancient paradise, animated too with the presence of nature's eternal and immortal King, and his celestial train, the eternal home of all the saints, where sin and sorrow, pain and death, are felt and feared no more; I say, who would not gladly exchange a sin emaciated face, a shattered constitution, sown thick with the seeds of death, for a spiritual and immortal frame? a shipwrecked earth, filled with unquenchable fires, convulsed with interminable agonies and covered with floods of water that have washed and drenched its deeply furrowed face with a thousand mountains and valleys, for a new earth never to be trodden by the wicked any more? In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, we are changed from mortal to immortality, and are found dwelling, not in houses of clay founded in the dust, but in a house from heaven, spiritual, incorruptible, immortal and glorious. We cast not one longing, lingering look behind. None are left we care anything about. Nature, flesh, and all earthly associations are left forever, without one single feeling that time or sense endears.

What a mysterious, delightful, ineffable moment that, in which mortality is swallowed up in life, in which we obtain beauty for ashes, joy for mourning; in which we part from sin, and sorrow, and wo, and find ourselves at home in the presence of the Lord, in the bosom of his love, surrounded with all the sons of light, with the riches and glory of the new Jerusalem temple, thronged with the great hierarchies, and Kings of all the dominions of Jesus' Empire.

Who of the christian family would not rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, that soon, very soon, all this should transpire, and that without the least of all the agonies of death. May the Lord have mercy both upon reader and writer, is the prayer of yours waiting for the promised inheritance, J. M.

The Christian's Hope.

The Christian truly has every thing to cheer him on, still on, in his earthly career. How sweet, how cheering his hope, as he wanders a pilgrim and stranger in the land promised to our father Abraham,—bearing the cross, enduring those trials consequent upon a Christian course of life,—forsaken and despised by the worldling, in whose affections mammon is worshiped, instead of his God. Despitefully used, persecuted and afflicted child of God, look up and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh! Yea, amid all the trials, sorrow and temptation, the scoffs and frowns of the world, he can look forward to that blissful time, when he will be freed from sorrow, temptation and sin; when all tears will be wiped from his eyes by God's own hand; when the wickedness of the wicked shall be done away, and there shall be no more sorrow nor sighing, and death and him which has the power of it will be destroyed.

Then shall the saints have eternal life in the kingdom of God. Then the glorious Lamb shall be the light of the saints' abode, and they will dwell with that Lamb and sing praises to his holy name forever, even forever and ever. Oh, joyful time! to those who have presented their bodies a living sacrifice on the altar of the Lord. Then will be heard, even from God's own lips,—"Gather my saints together unto me, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."

O Christian! let us sacrifice all upon the altar of the Lord! Let us prove faithful unto the end. For we are made partakers of Christ if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end. Time's last sands are running out, bearing us even to the verge of eternity. Oh, solemn thought! Oh, blissful moment! to those who have taken the Savior's yoke upon them, and have fought manfully the good fight of faith. For eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive all those things which he has promised to those who love and serve him

Impenitent friend, should one chance to cast an eye on this page,—will you not love this blessed Savior, this glorious Redeemer who is even now waiting to be gracious? I pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God, [illegible] the house shall [illegible] the door. He is the [illegible] last and only hope. [illegible]

Pilgrims, let us be faithful [illegible] watch and pray [illegible]

we do those things which are not pleasing in the sight of God. Let us be firm and steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. And let us be persuaded, as was Paul, that neither life nor death, nor principalities nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Remember what a glorious inheritance Christ has promised you. Keep in mind the pearly gates, the golden streets, the shining inhabitants of the New Jerusalem. Remember the divine admonition of the blessed Savior,—"Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Cleave closely to Jesus, for we shall be like him when we shall see him as he is. We shall see him who gave his life a ransom for us. Now we see as through a glass darkly, but then, face to face. O Savior, hasten thine appearing, that we may behold thee and dwell with thee through the countless ages of eternity, and bask in the sunshine of thy benignant countenance evermore!

"Be Ye Holy."

How important is this command to the Christian, teaching him, as it does, that repentance for sin and a sense of pardon are not the extent of what he should desire to experience; that the work in the soul is not accomplished while there is anything of sin remaining. We would, therefore, advocate this doctrine in the face of opposition, knowing it is from God. Let those oppose it who will, God always gives a half unction to those who advocate it, thereby setting his seal to the truthfulness of the assertion—"I can and ought to be holy."

But why is it that those who profess to believe this truth do not write more about it? The Crisis has more of the doctrinal than the practical in this respect; for, too often do those who write leave out the pointed truth, that a holy heart is essentially necessary to meet Jesus in peace when he comes.

Let us, brethren, strike out the roots of the old tree of sin,—build a fire among them that shall consume the last remains. But how shall we do it? Not by a theorising about how sudden a gradual change may be, a contention about names and terms, but a practical application of truth to our personal wants. This will do the soul good; (Amen,) it will feed the hungering with heavenly manna. Oh how sweet to the taste! He who eats it, wants no other food.

Let us advocate it, brethren; its reception is by simple faith!! We may talk forever about the difference between sin and constitutional imperfection, and darker counsel. Let God teach this himself. Brethren, let us be up and doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

"What Will They Say?"

If I present to them the truth of the Bible, shall I, or shall I not stop to inquire what they will say? Suppose the ancient men of God had stopped to inquire of men what they should do, what benefit should we have derived from their labor and examples? None.

What if Noah had stopped to inquire of those wicked antediluvians what he should do, or to reason to himself, what they will say. Do you think that he would ever have built that ark of Gopher wood? Most assuredly not.

Look at those three worthies. They did not stop to inquire, what will all these nobles, and princes, and mighty men of earth think, or say, when they see the whole world fall down at the sound of the music, and we three standing all alone? What will they think? They did not commune thus. Thank God! he had three standing witnesses who did not care what the king or the world said.

If the Savior had waited until the Jews were ready to receive his testimony, I think they never would have cried out so vehemently to crucify him. But he came to do the will of Him that sent him; therefore his testimony conflicted with their theory, and that enraged them.

If the Apostles had inquired, what will they say? they never would have been witnesses to the uttermost parts of the earth of His resurrection. They declared that truth plainly, notwithstanding they knew the lie of the Jews who said that his disciples stole him away.

Now, my Brn. and Srs., what shall we do? Shall we stop to inquire whether the world will receive our testimony, yea or nay, or shall we discharge every duty in the fear of God, and leave the event with him? Methinks I can hear you all say, We stand as living witnesses for God, regardless of the result with men. When duty calls, never let us inquire what they will say? What should we care what they say, this, that, or the other, if we can hear Him say in that day—"Well done!" It is enough; I ask no more.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 27, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8 : 4.

NUMBER TEN.

Those who claim that man is a double entity, think they find proof of it in the expressions, "My soul," "thy soul," "his soul," &c., which frequently occur in the Bible. Let us examine the Scriptures upon this point. Nephesh is the only word rendered soul in the Old Testament, with two exceptions, one of which is in Isa. 57 : 16, from n'sha-mah; and the other is found in Job 30 : 15, from n'de-vah. The passage in Isaiah reads, "For I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit (ruakh, breath) should fail before me, and the souls which I have made." The word n'sha-mah, here rendered souls, is properly translated by the words; "breath," "spirit," and "vital part." The other, in Job, reads, "Terrors are turned upon me; they press my soul on the wind; and my welfare passeth away as a cloud." N'de-vah is defined to mean, "my liberty," "excellence;" and the passage would have been plainer, if the translators had used either of these renderings, instead of soul.

On examination, we find the phrases, "my soul," "myself," "my life," and "me," are used interchangeably, meaning the same thing—the whole man. Let us take examples. Ps. 131 : 2. "Surely I have behaved and quieted myself, (nephesh,—margin, my soul,) as a child that is weaned of his mother; my soul is even as a weaned child."—Esther 7 : 3. "Then Esther the queen answered and said, if I have found favor in thy sight, O king, and if it please the king, let my life, (nephesh) be given me at my petition, and my people at my request."—Judges 16 : 30. "And Samson said, let me (nephesh, margin, my soul,) die with the Philistines." If this passage had been rendered my soul instead of me, then it would have taught that the soul dies, which would be in harmony with the plain teaching of the Bible. We see from these examples, and many more might be brought, that "my soul," "myself," "my life," and "me," are all from the same Hebrew word, nephesh, and may be used interchangeably.

The same is true of the phrases, "thy soul," "thy person," "thy life," and "thyself." For instance, in Ezk. 16 : 5, we read, "None eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but thou wast cast out in the open field, to the loathing of thy person (nephesh,) in the day thou wast born."—Isa. 43 : 4. "Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honorable and I have loved thee; therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life," (nephesh)—Esther 4 : 14. "Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, think not with thyself (nephesh) that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews." In these examples, we see that, "thy soul," "thy person," "thy life," and "thyself," are each from the same word, nephesh.

We also find the expressions, "her soul," "her" and "herself." In Jer. 2 : 24, we read, "A wild ass used to the wilderness, that snuffeth up the wind at her pleasure." The word here rendered her is nephesh, and is applied to this animal.—Jer. 3 : 11, "And the Lord said unto me, the backsliding Israel hath justified herself, (nephesh,) more than treacherous Judah." In Isa. 5 : 14, we read, "therfore hell (sheol) enlarged herself, (nephesh.) Had nephesh in this verse been rendered soul, it would have shown that hell itself is possessed of one, but when hell (sheol, the grave,) is personified, and her soul used in the sense of herself, all is plain.

Again we find the phrases, "his soul," "his life," "himself," and "he," translated from the same word, nephesh. It is said of Elijah in 1 Kings, 19 : 3-4, that when Jezebel threatened to kill him, "he arose and went for his life, (nephesh) and came to Beer-sheba . . . and he requested for himself, (nephesh, his soul,) that he might die."—When the Psalmist is speaking of Joseph, in Ps. 105 : 18, he says, "Whose feet they hurt with fetters: he (nephesh, margin, his soul,) was laid in irons." We here learn the true meaning of the expression, his soul; namely, the whole man, Joseph.

We come next to the expression, "Our soul," "we," and "our lives," from the words translated soul. Ps. 35 : 25. "Let them not say in their hearts, ah, so would we (nephesh, margin, our soul) have it."—1 John, 3 : 16. "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life (psukee) for us; and we ought to lay down our lives (psukee) for the brethren." In this last example, the Greek word psukee, corresponding with the Hebrew word nephesh in the Old Testament, is rendered life and lives.

We also find the expressions, "your soul," "yourselves," and "you," from the same word. Jer. 37 : 9. "Thus saith the Lord, deceive not yourselves," (nephesh, margin, your souls.)—2 Cor. 12 : 15. "And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you," (psukee, margin, your soul.) From these Scriptures, we learn that your soul, yourselves, and you, mean the same thing.

Once more. We also find in the Bible the phrases, "their souls," "they," and "themselves," each from the Hebrew word nephesh. For instance, in Job 26 : 14, we read, "They (nephesh, margin, their soul,) die in youth." If this had been rendered, "their souls die in youth," some would have read it with astonishment, but it would have been as correct as the present translation, and led people to see the true meaning of such expressions.—Isa. 47 : 14. "Behold, they shall be as stubble; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver themselves (nephesh, margin, their souls,) from the power of the flame."

From the foregoing examination, we learn that, "my soul," "myself" and "me," represent the same thing, and we can use whichever of these forms of expression that we (or our souls) like best. The same is true of "thy soul," "thy person," and "thyself;" "her soul," "her," and "herself;" "his soul," "he," and "himself;" "our soul," and "we," "your soul," "yourselves," and "you;" "their soul," "themselves," and "they."

From a careful and thorough examination of this subject, we are most fully satisfied, that the word soul is never used in the Bible to represent the conscious part of man that exists when he is dead.

For the Crisis.

Extremes.

Extremes prevail with all men. The tendency of human nature is toward this result; whether we consider it in respect to its physical, moral, or intellectual developments. If we take a man—an exhibition of the fallen state of humanity—in his animal existence, embracing the appetites, passions, habits and diseases, this is most manifestly and strikingly true, because each action in any given direction looks to, and labors to secure a repetition; and habit is only a repetition—an act done again, or condition continued. Consequently, any passion indulged, or appetite gratified, habit instituted, or disease established, the track is prepared and the race commenced to the extreme point.

The course is too often one of danger, of ruin, of death. The institutions, influences, circumstances of our life interfere, to qualify, circumvent, or finally prevent this end, for which nature is struggling with its untamed, run-away forces. An appetite craves, desire increases with compliance—demand answers supply, till death follows in the extreme, the sole result of the operation of the principle,—not at all of its existence.

Passion storms around its prison, till, bursting forth, it is unwillingly restrained within former enclosures—overleaps succeeding barriers, and rushes its possessor and follower to extreme ruin. Disease, also, holds its insidious dominion, till, by any and every means, it dethrones life, and sinks, into entire corruption.

So with habit. Its claim is established by acting, which is never relinquished while the act can be induced. There is no competition but by resistance,—no victory but by the decision of the will which precludes the action, upon any demand, whatever. Thus extremes may be prevented.

Before showing the same unchained, if not propensions, in the intellectual and moral portraiture, take an illustration. The boy amuses himself with this fellow-pet at one time altogether with kites, at another with tops; and afterward with the ball again with his singing locust, or with some other favorite play. I have noticed that all these things have their run—about once a year. Boys act in the extreme. "Men are but boys of a larger growth." Scientific knowledge, by the habit of study and investigation, at once begins to secure an extreme of interest and pleasure, often of toil and poverty. Not unfrequently one branch or department is followed to the exclusion of others, which proves that the extreme is the goal, if success is not. Philosophic inquiry will often race on till it brings up in infidelity, or monomania. Aye, even in lunacy, as in the case of Spiritualism. To become cool, calculating, reasoning, philosophical, precise, formal and staid in religion, leads to stoicism and coldness, worldliness and backsliding.

Men often go to the extreme in leaving Christ and getting all swallowed up in the world. Sad extreme! There is one beyond it—destruction—if they don't repent! On the other hand, faithfulness and devotion to the Lord will be cumulative—the acquisition will be great, in the extreme. Blessed extreme! to love him more and more, and serve him better and better. This can come only by grace, but when the inward power is turned to the right end it is well that we follow to the last extreme. To be perfect, to be men, in Christ, makes us extreme Christians.

For the Crisis.

I've Been Thinking.

How often do we hear wealthy professors complaining of the low state of religion. What is the cause? I will tell you. It costs money to keep religion alive in these days. Papers can't be published for nothing. Ministers who have families, and love them as well as you do yours, (and are very poor men, too) can't spend their time in traveling, studying, and preaching for nothing. Yes! it does cost something to sustain "pure and undefiled religion." Look at what James, the apostle, says about religion, in chap. 1: 27. I know we do not think that the apostle wants us to be so brotherly as to visit "the fatherless and widow in their affliction" for the purpose of eating up what little they have, and not give them anything. No! we know too well what Bible religion is; it costs something; and when we give those things which are necessary to the Lord's poor, our hearts are filled with gladness, knowing that "he that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord;" consequently we shall lose nothing.

Our ministering brethren are, of all others, worthy of our sympathy. They feel that "blood" will be required at their hands if they do not do their duty. They look at their families; then at the cause of God, and see a great deal to be done, and only a short time in which to do the work. They go and preach, leaving their loved ones to get along as best they can; but when they return home, nothing has been given to their families during their absence, and they have spent what little they took with them, and received nothing but "God bless you, my brother." Is this right? Compare this kind of treatment with 1 John 3 : 17, and you will see. Now don't be afraid to look at the text carefully.

Although I preach sometimes, I do not speak in reference to myself; but I know of ministers who are worthy of a liberal support, who have been obliged to leave the vineyard of the Lord, and labor with their hands in order to get an honest living.

Brethren, lend them a helping hand. Do what you can to forward the worship of God.

Home.

Home! 'tis a magic word; it fills every heart with joy. In all the changing scenes of life, wherever we roam, how fondly does the heart turn towards home! The laborer who has toiled all day seems to forget all his cares, as he meets with his family. It is there he forgets his sorrows, for glad hearts welcome him and kind voices greet him,—and they are ever ready to minister to his wants.

But how sad is that home where no smiling faces meet you, none to listen to your sorrows, none to bear your burdens, or soothe the aching heart. In sickness or in sorrow thou must be alone, unless Christ is thy friend. Sorrowing one, cast all thy care on Jesus, for he careth for you.

Ask the wanderer, as he roams in far distant lands, if there is any place like home. With a heart beating with joy he looks forward to the time that is to bring him back, and says, in a little while I shall be at home. All his trials and sorrows will seem as nothing when he reaches there.

But how cheering to the child of God is the thought of his Home. Many are the afflictions he has borne, many his sorrows and his joys; he has traversed the deserts of this world with only here and there a green spot where the waters run refreshingly, yet trusting in God he bears the cross that he may one day wear the crown; for he has read that sweet promise, that they that suffer for me shall reign with me in my home, and he looks forward with bright anticipations to the future, when he shall rest at home with his Savior. There will be no sad hearts there; voices will not lose their music, eyes their brightness, and death frowns not in that scene. Sorrow cannot enter there, neither shall there be any more pain. We shall see none wasting away with disease as we do now, day by day. The enemy's time is nearly done, he never can enter that home of joy and love. They that live in that home must be the children of God, and they that are faithful shall inherit all things.

Tried and tempted one, be faithful a little longer; Jesus is coming to take his pilgrim band home. We'll soon bid adieu to this dreary world, where all things are fading, for one that is always bright. The redeemed of the Lord will be there. We'll pluck fruit from the tree of life and eat and live forever.

Sinner, will you seek this home? Christ has prepared it for you; for you he left the bosom of his Father. He died on Calvary's cross for you, he closed his eyes in death that you might gain this happy home. Oh! will you come? Hark! the tide is receding, and soon the Savior will cease pleading. Now he waits to be gracious; he will listen to thy prayer. Pay those long promised vows to that heavenly Father, and begin this new year to the glory of God. O thou that hast healing in thy wings, and the balm of Gilead to cure the wounded heart, hasten thy return! Thou that hast prepared the pilgrim band a home, come quickly!

For the Crisis.

Address to the Young.

As there are many besides myself who have in their youthful days professed the Advent faith, I desire to say a few words to them through the Crisis.

Dear friends, you have engaged in a glorious cause. Before you enlisted, did you count the cost? Did you consider you must leave the world and your worldly minded friends? Did you realize that you were exposing yourself to the ridicule of the enemy of the cross, and to the fiery darts of Satan, which are thrown at all when they resolve to tread the path that Jesus trod? Did you consider all this, and resolve with the help of the Almighty to "fight the good fight of faith" and win eternal life? If so, it is well.

But what are you doing for the cause of Christ? Are you striving to bring one sinner to see the error of his ways, and come to Jesus, that you may have one gem in your diadem? Or, do you think that you are so young and unworthy that you can do nothing for him, and therefore leave the work to others. Do not sleep in this way. Why are you called to know the truth, if it be not that you may aid in the works of Jesus? Think not because you profess to serve the Lord, that that is all that is required of you. Oh no; for that is the very reason why you ought to work for Christ. "Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay."

Do you think that your faith will save you? "Faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone. O then, go to work to-day! See who there are among your acquaintances that know not the truth. Tell them the present message is the last one of mercy to them, and plead with them to live for Jesus. Do it humbly, and the Lord will reward you.

J. S. Tenney.

Colrain, Mass.

Loss as Gain.—A poor, simple man once said, "I have lost all my property; I have lost all my relatives; my last son is dead. I have lost my hearing and my eyesight; I am all alone, old and poor; but it makes no difference—Christ never grows old; Christ never is poor; Christ never dies, and Christ never will forsake me."

For the Crisis.

More Pickings.

Found a few who seldom hear on the great theme of real redemption through Christ—by a restitution—of the state of Paradise, and the resurrection from the dead,—even "the recovery of the possession purchased to the praise of his glory" —at South Windsor, Ct.,—and gave them just as much as I could, for the time on the second coming of Christ and the blessed hope. We all judged it a most profitable occasion.

Having visited the scattered in Hartford and some other places, I went home to a rich intellectual feast, in Bro. Matthias' discourses, at New Britain. But some one will say, we only need the moral truth and power,—none of your embellishments! Very well! Only remember the Scriptures. Their very style is a repast—a sumptuous feast to the refined and cultivated mind, while it feeds on solid truth also in their study. Only also observe that you should not complain of your dull, prosy preacher after you virtually forbid the eloquence which might interest you;—because you, in the first place, confine him to antiquated themes, and then ignore all embellishment. You would better originate your own taste, and find an interest in the things spoken by your own ministers. Then you will not have to run off to the lectures, and theatres, and also to churches where eloquent men preach, just to hear elegant style; or read beautiful tales, published by the Ledger, Mercury, or other sheets of the sort. I am defending the eloquent and earnest delivery of the truth, and nothing more. We may so improve as to enjoy a sermon much more, if it is like some of Paul's letters.

But I trust the discourses, to which I refer, were profitable and spiritual, as well as refreshing. I would go to Palestine with him, (if he ever goes) before I would suffer such bondage as some endure in this land.

My old brethren, of the scattered fold, who meet at River Point, Arkright, and the Plains, came out to hear one evening at River Point, and one at Arkright. It was certainly good to meet with them.

At Providence we had to perform funeral obsequies over a dear sister in the arms of death. I found an old sentiment revived, especially by one circumstance;—the disgust and horror of death. Our sister was lovely in life, and mourned in death. But I did not like to have death in my face, in that form, while preaching the funeral sermon. The coffin was not covered by a pall, and the sunken, wan features all constantly showing the pallor of the grave, as I saw—could hardly look without seeing through the glass of the lid,—not the "lovely appearance of death"—no, no, indeed!—'tis not in loveliness the corrupted mortal lies, but the dead—and death—as much opposed to life, as darkness to light. I said often to myself, in that discourse, "Bury the dead out of my sight." To take comfort in contemplating the dead, we need a ray of light darted from the triumph of Jesus through the sunless region of Hades upon the pupil of faith. Why the arrangement, I could not tell.

I was in my element to preach to them at Providence, because they love to hear. The season was one of profit. Here I was allowed to hear some preaching. Really, it does seem to me that I enjoy preaching better than many, but at all events, I heard some good at Providence. That subject on which the speaker (E. B.) dwelt, one evening—the subject of angels, was rich—I did not know there was such an amount of matter in it, before, and beauty too. I suggest the study of that question scripturally considered. Let it go through the Bible class! Now here is a theme which, the more it opens, the more it is grand, and beautiful. But is it useful! Yes! instruction is profitable. It enlarges the mind to know what we may know, of good, and God's work is good. Beauty is good, but people will carry the utilitarian principle to a great extreme. They cannot leave a margin for beauty or for ornament; in the natural world; but show equal folly in forsaking the useful and following the ornamental in the artificial.

I am often reminded when I hear the inquiry, what is the utility? of the man who had a lot in a beautiful cemetery, not even occupied by the dead—all enclosed as it was—sowed to turnips. That is a fact. I saw the turnips growing. Well, many are so inconsistent. A vast amount of this world is made by the Maker of all, and Architect of all, for beauty. [illegible]

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. H. Bolton.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me, although a stranger to you in the flesh,—but I trust a brother in Christ Jesus,—to say a few words through the Crisis. We are living in a time when we need much encouragement from our brothers and sisters. It is a trying time for the saints, and we have need to keep our hearts with all diligence, that we may not after all we have suffered, fail of the grace of God. I do believe the day of the Lord is near, and hasteth greatly;—and we need that preparation of soul, body and spirit, that when Christ shall be revealed in the clouds of heaven, we can lift our voices with a shout,—"Lo! this is our God, we have waited for him; and he will save us." O, may the Lord preserve us in these perilous times unto his heavenly kingdom!

We have every thing to encourage us to go on. Scripture is being fulfilled before our eyes; "Distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring." "Behold the fig tree and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand." So we know that the Lord is near, "even at the doors." And still ministers and professors cannot see that the end of all things is at hand; they have closed their eyes and ears to God's truth, and are now clinging to the more popular religion and theories.

Oh! the world is ripening for destruction. How vain, how wicked the people! I cannot help weeping when I contemplate the sudden and awful destruction that awaits the wicked. But my prayer is, that we may all be wise, and not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober, knowing that he will soon come and judge the quick and dead at his appearing, and reward every one according as his work shall be.

Let us be faithful, brothers and sisters, not having on our own righteousness, but that which is from God, that when he who is our life shall appear, we may appear with him in glory.

Yours in hope of soon seeing Jesus,

A. H. BOLTON.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. GEO. STORRS, New Britain, Ct., Jan. 16th, '58, writes:—Bro. Grant:—Glory to God! The battle goes well. When you were here, by the help of the Lord, you broke the ice, so to speak, and, by his help, we have been able to keep the hole from freezing over again, and it has been growing larger. Bro. Howell came here a week ago last Thursday, filled with faith and the Holy Ghost, and last evening, thank God, the ice not only broke up but it melted. Some that had been at sword's points, came together, and embraced each other with as much love as you ever saw two friends, that had been separated for a long time."

—:o:—

SR. P. S. BLOOD writes from Manlius:—"I have long been interested by the communications of those dear friends to the Crisis, which I have read, whose faith corresponded with my own. I am an aged lady of seventy-four, and feel that I am in the yellow leaf of time. I feel, Bro. Grant, that those more youthful and vigorous could better adorn the columns of your paper than myself, yet I know that the more feeble testimonies are not without their use, and that God can accomplish his purposes by small as well as large means. My interest has been excited on the subject of the near Advent of our Lord, ever since '42, and I have been alive to all its various proceedings. The precise time I have never harmonized with, because I believed man could not keep the Lord's time or his chronology; but our Savior has given us as definite time as we are warranted to rely upon;—'When ye see all these things come to pass, then know it is near even at the doors.' Do we not see the signs? A blessing is pronounced on those who keep their garments pure, and unspotted from the world. But, alas! where do we find them? The mass of professors are dreaming that to-morrow will be as this day, and much more abundant. Their oracles are dumb on the prophetic word, and it seems nothing will arouse them but Christ's actual appearance."

Elder Thomas Smith, Eddington, Me., has on hand the different kinds of Dr. A. M. Higgins' valuable Family Medicines, and will act as Agent for them. Brethren in Maine, desirin any of these medicines, can obtain them by sending their orders addressed as above

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

TRUE RESIGNATION.

'Twas midnight, and the moon's fair beams
Lit up a dying room;
And on the couch a flower lay,
Scarce bursting into bloom.

Beside it stood a watcher pale,
With anxious, aching heart,
She knew too well, her cherished child
In death must soon depart.

She stoops to catch the last low word
Those angel lips might speak,
And then she presses to her own
That cold and marble cheek.

But on her gentle brow is stamped
Submission to her God;
And now she kneels beside that form
To kiss the chastening rod.

Thus from her quivering lips broke forth—
"God wilt thou condescend
Through all the sorrows of this life
To be the widow's Friend?

The arm I once could lean upon
Lies mouldering in the dust,
But only sleeps to wake again
And mingle with the just.

Three lovely flowers thou gavest me,
Three gems of priceless worth;
Oh! must I now consign the last
Unto its mother earth?

With cheerful heart I lay him down,
That side by side they sleep,
Till thou shalt call them forth to dwell
Where none shall ever weep."

She rises, and prepares her child
To sleep beneath the sod;
For she hath given all she had
Unto the widow's God.

Tobacco.

No. X.

We are rejoiced to learn that many are leaving off the use of tobacco, and, without a single exception, are feeling much better than when they were indulging in its use. We hope many more will make the happy experiment, and have the sweet comfort that arises from total abstinence. None but those who have tried it, are aware of the marked change that takes place in the feelings, and the great addition to our enjoyment, when we truly eat and drink to the glory of God. Self-denial affords "great peace;" while on the other hand, self-indulgence spreads gloomy shades over our minds, and finally leaves us groping in moral darkness, filled with remorse.

Says Dr. Clay, of Manchester, England,—

"It is true, the injury on the constitution of man, by the common mode of using it, (tobacco) is not perceived at once; and it is difficult to persuade the lovers of tobacco of its bad tendency. But a series of complicated chronic disorders creep on him apace, his life becomes insupportable, and he sinks into a premature grave; but to tell his friends around his last resting-place, that tobacco had hastened the catastrophe, they would tell you of some hard iron constitution who had smoked all his life, and lived to a very old age. The very individual quoted, however, is often a walking mass of chronic disease, a magazine of filth, and a fac simile of human wretchedness, a sallow, cadaverous countenance, with scarce a ray of hope imprinted upon it. It is our duty to do all we can to prevent man from rushing to his own destruction—the laws of God require it from every one of us. Then not only shun tobacco yourselves, but instil that doctrine into others; for rest assured, should the constitution hold up even against this evil, the drinking system, to which it leads, is sure to put the last nail in the coffin."

Says Governor Sullivan,—

"Tobacco excites a demand for a strongly stimulating beverage, to supply the waste of secretions caused by its use; thus the walking tobacco consumer begins with smoking, but dies a sot."

Dr. Rush, a very distinguished physician, says,—

"That smoking and chewing render simple fluids insipid to the taste, hence the anxiety to have the strongest spirits; by this alone, brandy, which formerly was rarely used, is now the most common drink of cigar smokers."

Says Dr. Clay,—

"We are told many smoke, chew, and snuff, without being sots. There may be many, but when compared to the number of consumers, they are but very few. I dare assert, if a person tells me that he has smoked, snuffed, or chewed long, that, if he is not a drinker, he soon will be, and I dare be bound by that assertion; in ninety-five cases out of one hundred, I am right.

I have already proved this disgusting custom a source of great mortality. I cannot conceive the public would be so mad in its use, only under the impression that it is not dangerous, and may be of use for some fancied or real disease they may labor under. So insidious are the effects of this plant, and so insensible have the community been to its dangers, that very few have regarded the use of tobacco as the cause of swelling the bills of mortality. But however startling, it is nevertheless true, that vast multitudes are carried to the grave every year, by it alone."

Dr. Salmon says,—

"More people have died of apoplexy, since the use of snuff, in one year, than have died of that disease in a hundred years before."

In the language of Dr. Clay, we would say, "These habits are useless.—To the consumer no benefit results; but much disease, sorrow, and pain. It is perfectly contradictory to the manners of a gentleman—renders every person pitiably ludicrous—entails upon man bad habits, and is only taken, not for its usefulness or good qualities, but because a vitiated appetite has taken a fancy to it; and, lastly, it is called fashionable.

They are expensive habits.—A very common smoker will spend $10 or $15 per annum. An average of three or four cigars a day, amounts to $50 or $60 per annum. And all this goes for smoke and spittle. Men preach and talk of benevolence and charity, but expend more in smoking and snuffing every year than in either of the foregoing praiseworthy objects.

They are growing habits.—I have said enough to convince any man that the habit once begun, there is no limit to its extent, but with the termination of life.

It is an offensive habit.—Its vulgarity will never be denied by any reflecting person; but is it not offensive to the eye and nose to see school-boys, and almost every dirty boy in the street, sport a cigar? Poor, silly, ignorant things, they know not what they do, they ape those equally foolish of maturer growth. Ladies that are in a position to speak their minds, cordially hate it. Every good housekeeper dislikes to have their rooms impregnated with the smell of tobacco smoke. The indelicate accompaniments of smoking and chewing are an annoyance to every house. If smokers and chewers only knew the extent of their offensiveness to others, they would soon give up the practice. If they heard half the remarks made on them behind their backs, by even those whom they suppose their best friends, they would surely decline that which makes them so offensive, and so very ridiculous.

It is an injurious habit, as I have shown you in almost every sentence I have uttered on the subject; and, lastly, it is the preface to, and the excuse for drinking. It therefore becomes every parent, not only to prevent a child from practising it, but to avoid it himself. How many youths can I recollect in my time that thought themselves men, when they could master a cigar and drink a glass of brandy and water! But where are they now? Peopling the grave yard! or victims to consumptions, liver complaints, apoplexies, and such like diseases; and not a few within the walls of a lunatic asylum."

Brethren, "let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh." [PAUL.

Foreign News.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.

The royal mail steamship Europa, which left Liverpool about 2.30 P. M. of the 9th inst., arrived at her dock at this port at 9.30 this morning.

INDIA.

The semi-monthly mail from India arrived at Suez on the 1st, of January, with later dates from Calcutta and Bombay.

Gen. Havelock died on the 25th of November of dysentery, brought on by exposure and anxiety.

On the 7th of Nov., an engagement took place near Cawnpore between Gen. Windham's division and the Gwalior mutineers, in which the British troops were repulsed, with the total loss of the tents of three regiments, 3000 in number, which were burnt by the enemy. The 64th regiment is reported to have been nearly cut up in the encounter.

The Gwalior mutineers number more than 8000 men, completely organized and equipped.

Sir Colin Campbell, hearing of this disaster, quitted Lucknow for Cawnpore. On the 7th of December he came up with the Gwalior mutineers, and totally defeated them, capturing 16 guns, 26 carriages, and an immense quantity of ammunition, stores, etc., and the whole of their baggage. The British loss in this action was insignificant, only one officer being killed.

All the women and children, sick, &c., from Lucknow, had arrived in safety at Allahabad.

The official report of the defence of Lucknow is published, and shows the privations endured by the heroic garrison, and particularly by the ladies, were fearful.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Operations were resumed upon the Leviathan on the 5th inst. with success, the vessel being moved several feet. The proceedings were continued daily up to the departure of the Europa, the progress each day amounting to 8 or 10 feet. The evening before the Europa sailed, the ship had only 64 feet more to be moved.

The returns of employment in the Cotton mills of Manchester show a gratifying improvement, the number of hands working full time being largely on the increase.

The funds were generally firm throughout the week, although some depression was caused by the unfavorable news from India.

FRANCE.

Mlle. Rachel, the great tragedienne, died Jan. 3d, at her estate in Cannes. Her last professional performance were those which took place in the United States.

Great increase of confidence in commercial circles in Paris, is reported.

Considerable sensation had been created in Paris by a publication of an article in the Speculateur, in which it is asserted that a secret treaty has recently been negotiated between England and Austria. Semi-official contradictions had appeared in the government journals.

SPAIN.

The Espana of Madrid, in the course of a long article on President Buchanan's Message, expresses the opinion that the Spanish government will continue firm in its refusal to give satisfaction to the United States, in the affair of the Dorado, since no insult had been committed, and that it will energetically reject the insulting proposition relative to Cuba.

AUSTRIA.

Field Marshal Radetzky is dead. The event took place on the 5th of Jan., its immediate cause being paralysis of the lungs, after an illness of a week. The Marshal was in the 92d year of his age.

TURKEY.

Redschid Pasha, Grand Vizier, is dead, after an illness of only three days. His disease was apoplexy.

CHINA.

The steamer Adelaide with the last detachment of 500 marines on board, passed on from Singapore on the 2d of Dec., and an attack on Canton was expected to take place on her arrival.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times is positively informed that the French Ambassador to the Court of Pekin has arranged that, after the squadrons shall have taken position before Canton, a final summons shall be addressed to the Chinese Government. The accomplishment of this formality was to commence on the 16th of Nov.

A dispatch from Paris asserts that instructions have been sent to the French Admiral to prevent the French troops in China from acting in concert with the English, and that the 500 men recently sent out are in reality intended for a demonstration against Cochin China.

It is also said that Spain will certainly take part in this expedition.

Domestic Summary.

LATER FROM NICARAGUA.

NEW YORK, Jan. 22.

The Herald has by the Wabash at Havana, and the Black Warrior at this port, received news from Greytown, Nicaragua, to the 5th inst., ten days later than previous accounts. The treaty between Nicaragua and Costa Rica had been signed, and President Martinez and quite a number of superior officers of the armies of both Republics were enjoying themselves at Greytown. They had visited the Wabash and thanked Com. Paulding for dispersing the fillibusters.

The Wabash sailed on the 8th, with Col. Anderson and his companions, and reached Havana on the 15th.

FROM UTAH—RUMORED MASSACRE OF EMIGRANTS.

NEW YORK, Jan. 22.

The Herald's correspondence from the Utah expedition says that Echo Cannon is occupied by 3000 Mormons. It also states, without vouching for its accuracy, that a party of California emigrants, eighty in number, men, women and children, were, with the exception of twelve small children, inhumanly butchered by the Mormons and Indians last fall.

THE FREE STATE VICTORY IN KANSAS CONFIRMED.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 21.

The Free State party have made a clean sweep and carried every thing in Kansas. The report last night was given on the authority of correspondents; but that to-night on the official statement of the officers mentioned in the dispatch.

IMMINENCE OF WAR BETWEEN SPAIN AND MEXICO.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.

[Herald correspondence.] It is confidently stated in diplomatic circles here that war between Spain and Mexico is inevitable. The latest advices from Mr. Dodge, our minister to Spain, state that it is the generally received opinion at Madrid that Spain will shortly make a demonstration on Mexico, England and France to the contrary notwithstanding, and that active preparations to that effect are now in progress. Intimations of Santa Anna's complicity in the contemplated invasion are also mooted. The government has sent stringent orders to the Captain General of Cuba to have the Spanish naval forces in America put at once into the highest state of efficiency: on the other hand, letters received here by the last mail from Mexico a day or two since say that a negative reply to the Spanish preliminary propositions has been sent to General Almonte, the Mexican minister to England, and to Senor Laffragua, and that they are instructed by the Mexican government not to recede a single point from the just demands that Mexico has made.

LATER FROM THE UTAH EXPEDITION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.

Dispatches have been received at the War Department, from Col. Johnston, Nov. 30, which confirm the previous reports of excessive suffering on the part of the troops, and the great loss of draft animals by snow storms, cold, and starvation.

A sufficient number of oxen, though poor, had been saved to supply a part ration for six days in the week, and there was on hand bacon for one day in a week for seven months; also flour and small rations in abundance.

The storm had dealt roughly with Col. Cooke's command. He lost half his horses, besides a number of mules.

A further advance toward Salt Lake City cannot be made without a supply of such animals, to procure which Capt. Marcy has been dispatched to New Mexico, for use in the early Spring, when the army, with a volunteer force 2000 strong, will resume its march as soon as supplied with horses and mules, and there is grass on the mountains sufficient to sustain them.

Two volunteer companies had been mustered into service for nine months, and it was expected that in a few days two more would be mustered in.

The troops have borne the dangers and privations of the march with patience and cheerfulness. They are in fine health, though some of the Regiments are still suffering from frost-bite.

THE MORMON WAR.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.

[Tribune correspondence.] The California combination for carrying on the Mormon war from that side of the Mountains, has [illegible] Gen. Scott will start for California next week, with full powers from government to organize in that State an army for the invasion of Utah, if the latest advices from Salt Lake City, which he shall receive in California, are such as to warrant the prosecution of hostilities. In that case he will employ the regulars now on the Pacific side, and will doubtless call upon the Governor of California for volunteers. He expects to reach Salt Lake in June, simultaneously with Col Johnston. It is part of his plan of operations to conduct the army up the Colerado river, which is believed to be navigable for twenty miles above its junction with the Gila, and in the exact direction of Utah.

THE MARCH TO THE GRAVE IN 1857.—What a mighty procession has been moving towards the grave during the past year! At the usual estimate, since the first of January, 1857, more than thirty-one million, five hundred thousand of the world's population have gone down to the grave. Place them in long array and they will give a column of thirteen hundred to every mile of the circumference of the globe. What a spectacle as they move on, tramp, tramp, the "Dead March" giving its funeral notes as they go to the silent shades!

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

THE CARELESS WORD.

A word is ringing through my brain,
It was not meant to give me pain;
It had no tone to bid it stay,
When other things had passed away;
It had no meaning more than all
Which in an idle hour fall;
It was when first the sound I heard
A lightly uttered, careless word.

That word—O! it doth haunt me now,
In scenes of joy, in scenes of woe,
By night, by day, in sun or shade,
With the half-smile that gently played
Reproachfully, and gave the sound
Eternal power through life to wound.
There is no voice I ever heard,
So deeply fixed as that one word.

When in the laughing crowd some tone,
Like those whose joyous sound is gone,
Strikes on my ear, I shrink—for then
The careless word comes back again.
When all alone I sit and gaze
Upon the cheerful home-fire blaze,
So freshly, as when first 'twas heard,
Returns that lightly-uttered word.

When dreams bring back the days of old,
With all that wishes could not hold,
And from the feverish couch I start
To press a shadow to my heart,
Amid its beating echoes clear,
That little word I seem to hear;
In vain I say, while it is heard,
Why weep?—'twas but a foolish word.

It comes, and with it come the tears—
The hopes—the joys of former years;
Forgotten smiles—forgotten looks,
Thick as dead leaves on autumn brooks;
And all is joyless though they were
The brightest things life's spring could share;
O! would to God, I ne'er had heard
That lightly-uttered, careless word!

It was the first, the only one,
Of those which lips forever gone
Breathed in their love—which had for me
Rebuke of harshness at my glee;
And if those lips were here to say,
"Beloved, let it pass away."
Ah! then, perchance—but I have heard
The lightly-uttered, careless word!

O! ye who, meeting, sigh to part,
Whose words are treasures to some heart,
Deal gently, ere the dark days come,
When earth hath but for one a home;
Lest, musing o'er the past, like me,
They feel their hearts rung bitterly,
And, heeding not what else they heard,
Dwell weeping on a careless word!

The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. III.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

2.—The last trumpet, the saints rise, the living changed, and all translated. "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect, from the four winds; from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. 24: 31. "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish, and shall worship the Lord in the holy mount." Isa. 27: 13. "And the Lord shall be seen over them; and his arrows shall go forth as the lightning; and the Lord God shall blow with the trumpet." Zech. 9: 14. "Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep; but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible; and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption; and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15: 50, 52. "For if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again; even so, them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 14–17. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth, shall awake; some (the awakened) to everlasting life." Dan. 12: 2. "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. Come, my people, enter into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." Isa. 26: 15–21. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life." John 5: 25, 29. "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them; and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark in their forehead, or in their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again, until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death had no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. 20: 4–6. Then "he will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God shall wipe away tears from all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it." "And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. 25: 8, 9.

This will be the final harvest of the earth, when the wheat, all the good and wholesome fruits will be gathered into his barn. The Revelator says, "And I looked, and behold, a white cloud; and upon the cloud One sat, like unto the Son of Man; having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped." Rev. 14: 14–16. Thus he will send his angels and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven." Mark 13: 27.

Lonely pilgrim, cheer up; better days are before us; "weeping may endure for a night; but joy cometh in the morning." "Let your loins be girded, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves be like unto men that wait for their Lord, that when he cometh we may open to him immediately." God grant the writer, and each reader, a part in the first resurrection.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER TWO.

While weighing the subject, and determining whether I could endure the cross, and deny myself the many common privileges of other men, I could remember the message of God's Son. What did he endure for me? how did he deny himself? "For the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame." A redeemed world was in his view, as the purchase of his blood. An eternal life, a glorious kingdom, a joint-heirship to an eternal, blessed, incorruptible inheritance lies before me. Shall I not willingly forsake all, and follow Christ to obtain such joy? His love constrains me to follow him. He gave himself for me; shall I not give myself for him? I can, I ought, I will. Lord, help me to obey thee in all things; to preach thy word, "be instant in season," not to "be afraid of a man that shall die." The point was settled, though the struggle with nature was severe, for "I conferred with flesh and blood" for a long time. Are there some of my readers in this condition? Doubtless there are; you will bear me record that I only touch a few items of your feelings and thoughts. I beseech you to count well the cost, and do it quickly, settle it at once, and be not "disobedient to the heavenly vision" visiting you. "The Master hath need of" YOU; he is calling you to go to him. He will enable you to "build upon him, gold, silver, precious stone," and when the day comes to try your work by fire, you may "receive a reward," and he will say, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

But to my musings. As I passed from place to place, and met with the happy disciples of my Lord, my self-denial, crosses, home associations, were for hours well nigh forgotten; joyful in God, we spent the peaceful moments in recounting the mercies and blessings already received, or repeated with confiding faith and earnest hope, the promises of the coming kingdom. While I surveyed the congregation also, the mind expanded to the ends of the earth, to the dark portions, to "the habitations of cruelty." Who maketh us to differ? God hath done it, yet his mercy is extended to all, his gospel is free to all; I can offer Christ as a Savior to all. His love is to all and for all, and while pleading his claims, and portraying his merits, persuading sinners to accept him, I often lost all thoughts of my poor, homeless, pilgrimage condition, and seemed in the immediate society of God, Christ, angels, and the immortalized saints. Then again, as the penitent sighed for mercy, confessing his sins and turning to Christ, I was glad of my work, loved to be a sufferer with Christ, and joyed that he accounted me worthy to suffer shame for his name. But such seasons of gracious manifestation subside, and the stern reality of weak human nature appears. All is fading. Friends of Jesus desert him. Some are for Paul and some for Apollos, "puffed up for one, against another." Old brethren are cold. The wicked taunt, "Where now is thy God?" Here is a time to look to God with both ears open. "Is Christ divided?" comes from the pen of the great Apostle; "ye are all one in Christ," is again sounded in my ears from the throne of God. But you do not believe according to our declaration of faith, and we cannot have you labor with us. "We are laborers together with God," thought I. How is this, "Who was Paul, or who was Apollos," or any other of God's chosen instruments, "but ministers by whom ye believed?" Again the cry is heard, "Come over and help us." Some wish to hear. We go and tell them of Christ's love, his sacrifice, resurrection, ascension, gift of the Holy Ghost, of pardoning mercy, eternal judgment, the wages of sin. Some are penitent, and feel their need of Christ; are convicted that the Bible is the true record, and describes the sinner's doom, the way of life, the character of the righteous. But who is there to help them? A cold, formal church is there. A. B. and C., the leading members, are known to be the most worldly men in the place, using extortion, deception, and fraud, to lay up money. D. and E. oppress the poor, taking advantage of their necessities. F. G. and H. do not attend meeting only when some able man is to preach. They have the best of every thing and do not associate with the common classes; never speak to them only when they want servants. I. and J. use up six days for their business, and then look over book accounts, do small chores, ride over to the other part of the town to look out, or to close a bargain on Sunday. Mrs. N. and L. lead in the female department, and dress the most proudly of any one in town. These things are known to the unconverted. They have cursed these pious christians many times, not for their godly lives, but for their pretensions. Now they are brought to feel that they must be christians. But who shall take them by the hand and lead them in the way of faith and obedience? who will weep and suffer with them, show them the right steps to take? Who shall be nursing fathers and nursing mothers in Israel? We muse upon the subject. "He that nameth the name of Christ should be careful to depart from iniquity," and "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Greek nor Jew, bond nor free .... for ye are all one in Christ." Where are the castes of society?

For the Crisis.

"This Year Thou Shalt Die."

Of the vast multitude to whom these solemn words are applicable, according to the decree of Him in whose hand our breath is, how few are now anticipating this awful event. Some indeed, who are already the victims of fatal diseases, or condemned to suffer the penalty of violated law, are contemplating this destiny with varied emotions. But the great majority of those who are to close their eyes on all sublunary things, and whose account for eternity is to be sealed within twelve fleeting months, have no such expectation. The blooming youth; the man of business; the ambitious politician; the woman of fashion and pride, are forming plans and indulging in expectations, which, within the year, are all to be cut down by the irresistible scythe of death. How few of these, alas! are now listening to the faithful warning, appropriate to all at all times, "PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD."

Dear christian brother, in the divine decree referred to, the eye of Omniscience may see your name and mine. Let us then work while the day lasts. O how reasonable, and delightful, too, to increase our diligence in the service of our precious Redeemer, as the fleeting moments waft us to the happy termination of our weariness and toils! O may his dying and living love constrain us to more self-denial and more cheerful bearing of his cross in his holy and blessed service!

Tremendous thought! Against some of the professed teachers of the word of the Lord, the solemn words of the text may be recorded, for the same reason that they were originally announced to the false prophet; even for teaching "rebellion against the Lord." Jer. 28: 16. "He that hath my word, saith Jehovah, let him declare it faithfully." Of what value will be the popularity, the flatteries of fashionable religionists, the title of D. D. or Reverend, or the golden salary, to the man who, when "weighed in the balances" for eternity, shall be "found wanting?"

Dear reader, suppose it be an indubitable fact that death is at your door, or that your eyes shall soon see the appointed Judge of all the earth "coming in the clouds of heaven;" are you prepared? Have you, by holy penitence and faith, fled to the arms of his mercy? Have you parted with the idols of your unregeneracy for the living God, and chosen him and his holy service for your joy and eternal inheritance? Is your hope of final inheritance with God, justified by daily sacred communion with him, and by that practical love and benevolence to your fellow men, without which your pretence of love to your unseen Maker is a mockery? 1 John 4: 20.

If, indeed, by the rich grace of God in his dear Son, we are among his true followers, we may rejoice that our mortal days are so rapidly passing.

"They'll waft us sooner o'er
This life's tempestuous sea;
Soon shall we reach the peaceful shore
Of blest Eternity."

From Bro. Wm. McCullock.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say a word through the Crisis to the Brn. of the East.

We are still urging our way on toward that heavenly country, hoping ere long to gain the everlasting kingdom, where the wicked will cease from troubling and the weary be at rest. We rejoice in hope of the glory of God which, we trust, is soon to be revealed. We often think of the preaching that we have heard when it was accompanied with the Spirit of God, and compare it with the preaching that we now hear. We then ask ourselves the question, Shall we ever hear the gospel of the kingdom and reign of Christ preached on these vast prairies?

When we take up the Crisis, we look over the appointments to see if there are any branching out into new fields; but almost in vain do we look for it. Now, dear Brn., I do not wish to be fault finding, but from what little experience I have had, I am certain that great good might be accomplished by opening new fields of labor. I find that the people called Campbellites are rapidly gaining in this section of country; and why is it? It is because they enter new fields and labor assiduously in presenting their views; and, permit me to say, as it regards Bible truth they are far in advance of the nominal churches. And have we not as much truth as they? Can we not sacrifice as much as they? If we have the truth,—and it is by a belief of the truth that men are to be saved, and by a rejection of the same that men are to be damned,—is it not all-important that as many as can should have the truth presented to them for their reception or rejection; for we often hear it said among the watchmen, it takes as much ripening to prepare the wicked for harvest as it does the righteous.

Dear Brn., would not the good Lord have some of you come this way and break the bread of life to the perishing? Ask God, and move right, that his name may be glorified. If this broken communication shall come to the notice of Brn. M. Chandler, P. B. Morgan, W. Pratt, or any of our western Brn. in the Lord, let them remember that my house is a pilgrim's home. Do not forget that I live in Lamoille Township, Bureau Co., Ill.; fifteen miles from Mendota R. R. station west; twelve miles from Arlington R. R. station north; ten miles from Amboy R. R. station south-west.

We are alone in the faith of a soon coming Savior, except a brother and sister-in-law, who live near by. We think that good might be done. We are poor as to this world's goods, but somewhat rich in faith, praise the Lord.

Your Bro. in hope of life and immortality through Christ,

WM. McCULLOCK.

BRO. GRANT:—Having been very much interested in the articles that have appeared of late in the Crisis on the use of tobacco, and believing it to be, to say the least, an unchristian practice, I send you the following, from a paper published in our city, hoping and praying that God will send home truth to the heart that we who profess to be followers of Christ may be followers indeed. O my brethren, be like Christ. Let us purify ourselves even as he is pure.

E. ABBEY.

HORACE MANN ON TOBACCO.—At the Ohio State Teachers' Association, held at Columbus in December last, a committee, of which Hon. Horace Mann was chairman, was appointed to recommend some action with the view of suppressing the practice of profane swearing and the habits of using liquor and tobacco in the schools and colleges.

The report is a long one and a strong one, and contains many spicy paragraphs. We extract a few specimens in relation to one attribute of this trinity of evil:

"Tobacco users bequeath weakened brains, irritable nerves, and other forms of physical degeneracy, to their children. The factitious pleasures of the parent inflict real pains upon his offspring. The indulgences of the one must be atoned for by the sufferings of the other—the innocent expiating the offences of the guilty. Nor, in regard to these personal and hereditary injuries to the mind, would the committee stand merely upon the principle laid down by the physician, who, when asked if tobacco injured the brain, replied promptly in the negative; 'for,' said he, 'people who have brains never touch it.'

Tobacco users are always filthy, and we read of an infinitely desirable kingdom into which no unclean thing can ever enter.

Tobacco users are always unjust toward others. They pollute the atmosphere which other men desire to breathe, and have a right to breathe, in its purity. A smoker or chewer may have a right to a limited circle of the atmosphere around his own person, but he has no right to stench the air for a rod around him and half a mile behind him. He has no right to attempt a geographical reproduction of river and lake by the artificial pools and streams he makes in a steamboat and car.

A tobacco user is the common enemy of decency and good taste. His mouth and teeth, which should be the cleanest, he makes the foulest part of him. When one sees a plug of nasty, coarse, live-colored tobacco, he pities the mouth it is destined to enter; but when one sees the mouth he pities the tobacco."

SPEAK GENTLY.

Speak gently to the erring ones;
May not some kindly word
Reclaim the wandering back to truth,
And bring them to the Lord?

Our hearts are prone to wander here,
We often go from truth astray;
Let us not then in anger chide,
But gently point to virtue's way.

Oh, gently speak! there's much of grief,
In many sad hearts broken,
Which often might be comforted,
If gentle words were spoken.

Then gently speak, let each of us
That say our Savior's coming's near,
Speak all our words in charity;
Let love control each action here.

Choice Selections.

Winter Evenings---Where Spend Them---At Home.

The light at home! how bright it beams
When evening shades around us fall;
And from the lattice far it gleams,
To love and rest, and comfort all.
When wearied with the toils of day,
And strife for glory, gold and fame,
How sweet to seek the quiet way,
Where loving lips will lisp our name
Around the light of home!

But how shall we spend the winter evenings? In usefulness to be sure. Spend them as you shall wish you had when closing your eyes on all things earthly. Spend them in doing good, receiving good every moment. Every evening should be redeemed as gold seven times purified. Every inch of each golden moment should be grasped, husbanded. Never allow a single moment to pass in trifling or dissipation, in sinful amusements, at the theatre, the opera, the ball-room, the card-table, the pleasure party, or in idle chit-chat.

"Wasted!
Precious pearl of time, moments rich as diamonds!
One by one they come uncounted; one by one afar they floated!
One by one! till myriads sped far away to join the dead."

Flee the bar-room, the gay saloon, the lounger's corner, as the plague, the serpent's bite, the adder's sting. "Look not upon the wine when it is red." "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."

"Speak not of the mirth of the giddy crowd,
In the halls of revelry found."

Be keepers at home, save when at the sanctuary, meetings for prayer, praise, or testimony, or on social visits—visits of mercy, truth, and salvation. Provide yourselves with good books, papers, periodicals, works on history, the sciences, theology, holiness to the Lord. Of all the spots that heaven has blest, the dearest place is home.

"The light of home! How still and sweet
It peeps from yonder cottage door—
The weary laborer to greet—
When the rough toils of day are o'er;
Sad is the soul that does not know
The blessing that the beams impart,
The cheerful hopes and joys that flow,
And lighten up the heaviest heart,
Around the light of home."

Read, meditate, pray, sing psalms; study and treasure useful knowledge; go about doing good; visit the poor, the sick, the afflicted, the widows and the orphans; improve your minds, cultivate your hearts, your affections—a taste for good things, virtuous things, holy things; grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; prepare for death, judgment and eternity. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand." What good things soever your hands find to do, do them with your might. "Fear God and keep his commandments, for that is the whole duty of man." For "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil."—Golden Rule.

Influence of Song.

Most of us have experienced the luxury of tears when listening to an old ballad. We know an old man, who, having lived a long career of vice and crime, was at length banished from the country; and who, while undergoing his banishment amidst the wilds and jungles of a distant land, heard in the summer eventide a sweet voice, singing in his own language the very song which had lulled him to his infant slumber, when he knew crime by name, and only knew it to abhor. It had been sung, too, by the cradle of an infant sister, one who had died young; the mother, too, was no more.

But the song—the old song had not lost its influence over him yet. Back came trooping the old memories which had so long slumbered down there in the unconsumed depths of his heart; the mother and the father: the husband gathering; the old school-house; the time-worn church, half hidden by the old yew trees, where he had heard the Bible read, all came back upon him as fresh as if it were yesterday; and overpowered by his feelings, he gave vent to them in a flood of tears. And then the old man grew calm, and his latter days were his best days; and when the term of his punishment had expired, he came back to his father's land, and there in that old village grave-yard, amid whose grassy hillocks he had played and gamboled, and where the mother and the little ones were sleeping, he lay down his weary limbs and sank peacefully away into a common grave. —Eliza Cook's Journal.

Dr. Judson's Burmese Testament.

The story of the preservation of this precious work, related by Mrs. Judson, might adorn the page of romance. It was taken to Ava in manuscript; and when Mr. Judson was thrown into prison, was secretly sewed up in a cushion too hard and unsightly to tempt the cupidity even of his jailors, and used by him as a pillow.—When, at the close of seven months, he and his fellow sufferers were so rudely cast into the inner prison, the old pillow fell to the share of one of the keepers, but finding it probably too hard for his use, he threw it back, and it came once more into its owner's hands. It was again lost when he was driven to Oung-pen-la; and, being stripped by one of the attendants of the mat which was tied around it, the roll of hard cotton was flung back into prison. Here it was found by Moung Ing, who took it home as a memorial of his teachers, without suspecting its priceless contents. Several months after, the manuscript, which now makes a part of the Burmese Bible, was found within, uninjured.

The Child's Gospel.

A very little girl had been early taken to church, and taught to behave reverently there. She was told that public worship had been appointed by God, and that she must attend seriously to its several parts, till she should be able to comprehend them. So she would fix her eyes attentively on the preacher, and listen to all he said, though able to understand but little.

But once a smile of joy was observed to pass over her expressive face. Her eyes grew bright and her lips parted as if to speak. She had been repaid for her docile listening. In the midst of his discourse, the Minister had repeated the Savior's invitation—"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

She had learned this passage by heart in her lisping infancy; but in the voice of the clergyman, whom she revered, it came to her with force and authority. It was like an old friend in a new garment—the shining garment of heaven.

Hastening home to her mother, who had been detained by indisposition from attending the public services of the Sabbath, she threw her arms around her neck, exclaiming with great animation, "O mamma, dear mamma, I have heard to-day the child's gospel."

TERMS OF UBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

For the Crisis.

"COME, FOLLOW ME."

Though my way be dark and dreary,
Savior, I will follow thee,
Though my heart seems oftimes sinking
'Neath the waves of sorrow's sea;
Needful grace thou wilt impart,
'Till I see thee as thou art.

When the cares of earth are strewing
Trials o'er my path of life,
May this hope within me glowing,
Bear me onward 'mid the strife;
'Till my soul shall be possest
Of thy peaceful, heavenly rest.

Perfect Being—friend in sadness.
Guide thou me—I'll trust in thee;
Thou wilt teach me faith and gladness,
Bid all cares and sorrows flee:
Every pang thou wilt remove,
Bear me in thine arms of love.

When these fleeting, transitory
Scenes of earth are passed away;

The Present Distress of Nations and what Others think About the Signs.

Francis Wayland, D. D., in a sermon preached Oct. 11th, 1857, in speaking of the financial trouble calls it an "universal and unexampled distress," and says:

"If you ask the signs of the times of those whose sagacity is rarely at a fault, and whose means of knowledge is most to be relied on, they tell you that they see no light. Private accounts are even more distressing than the public report. City after city succombs and the rest stand on the verge of suspension. Men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming. It seems like the deep, choking stillness which precedes the earthquake, when the ground begins to tremble beneath our feet, and every one is looking in dismay for the catastrophe which is to overwhelm the labor of centuries in one indiscriminate ruin.

Mrs. Harriet B. Stowe, in an article on Heb. 12: 26-27, in the Independent of Nov. 12, 1856, thus thrillingly writes:—

"How can we look for peace? Peace! One might as well stand when a storm was rising, when clouds were rolling up from every quarter of the horizon, lightnings darting, thundess muttering, and fierce winds lashing the storm into fury, and talk of peace. These are the times spoken of by Christ, when there shall be distress of nations, the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking for the things that are coming on the earth. His voice once shook the earth, but now hath he promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also the heaven. In these shakings earthly hopes fly like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor, earthly joys like the withered leaves. Earthly reliance is as stubble. Things firmest set, trees that have grappled with the storms for years, towers that are hoary with the moss of centuries, institutions hallowed with ages of reverence, all must go crashing down together;—but, thank God, something will remain. The tempest removes the things that can be shaken, that the things that cannot be shaken may remain. * * *

And when the earth is desolated and rocked with earthquakes, it is that the new heavens and new earth may arise from the former things."

Rev. John Bray, Baptist clergyman of Virginia, in a sermon on Matt. 16: 3, remarking on "these strange, fast, and wonderful times," said:

"That God is fast using the fast men and fast times is true as that he used Haman to build a gallows on which to hang himself. As the unbelievers helped Noah to build the Ark, so the men of this fast age are building up the country to prepare for the millenium, or the second coming of Christ. You don't believe it.—Well, pile in the wood, put on the steam, and drive on the end; for you are all doing it whether you believe it or not.

Now what is Sir Charles Seymour doing in China and what are the English troops and Sepoys doing in India? They are building up the fire, they are putting on the wood, they are getting up the steam, to drive the car of God through the world. They are opening up the nations, opening up the people, opening up the world, for the second coming of Christ. Just as soon as you know that the gospel is preached in all the world to every people, just then you may expect the second coming of Jesus Christ."

The Puritan Recorder of Nov. 1857' in an article headed "Distress of Nations," says,—"Christ foretold that preparatory to his coming there should be 'upon the earth, distress of nations with perplexity.' He has not clearly defined what coming of his is to be thus preceded, but if distress of nations is one of the precursers of a brighter day, we have now the means of quickening our hopes for its advancement." Then after stating that "the presence of God's hand upon many of the nations of the world is now heavy," that "our own nation is having a remarkable experience," that "in the midst of an abundance an actual famine of bread staring us in the face," that "the financial crisis is such that the commerce of the world feels the stroke in every limb," and adverting to the great European and Asiatic wars, says:—

"Here then we have upon earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring and men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth. When God's judgments are abroad in the earth it is a time for the inhabitants thereof to learn righteousness."

Robert Pollok over thirty years ago thus graphically describes the present times, in giving the precursers of the blessed millenium.

Pencilings by the Way.

Have been interested in the following remarks from the pen of a popular English minister.

"Evidences without Christ are like the unlit candles, which afford no light; like fig-trees with leaves only, devoid of fruit; like purses without gold, and like barns without wheat; they have great capabilities of comfort, but without Jesus, they are emptiness itself.

Evidences are conduit-pipes—they are sometimes the channel of living water, but if the supply from the fountain-head be cut off from them, their waters utterly fail. That man will die of thirst who has no better spring to health than an empty pitcher of evidences.

Ishmael would soon have perished in the wilderness, if his only hope had been in the bottle which his mother brought with her from the tent of Abraham; and assuredly without direct supplies from the gracious hands of the Lord Jesus, the saints would soon be in an ill plight.—Unless the God of our graces be ever at the root of them, they will prove like Jonah's goard, which withered away when he was most in need of it. . . . An absent Savior and joyous confidence, are seldom to be spoken of together. We know, however, that some professors can maintain a confident carriage when the presence of the Lord is withholden; they are as content without him as with him, and are as happy under his frown, as when in the sunshine of his smile.

Between the outward appearance of strong faith and strong delusion, there is frequently so little difference that the presumptuous boaster is often as highly esteemed as the assured believer; nevertheless in their inner nature there is an essential distinction. Faith believes on Jesus when his comfortable presence is not vouchsafed, but it does not render the soul indifferent to the sweetness of his society. Faith says, "I believe him when I do not feel his love manifest toward me, but my very persuasion of his faithfulness makes me part of the light of his countenance; but vain presumption exclaims, "Away with evidences and manifestations, I am a vessel of mercy, and therefore I am secure; why should I trouble myself about grace or graces? I have made up my mind that all is right, and I will not break my slumbers, whoever may seek to alarm me.'

Happy the man whose faith can see in the thick darkness and whose soul can live in the year of drought; but that man is not far from a curse who slights the fellowship of the Lord and esteems his smile to be a vain thing. It is an ill sign if any of us are in a contented state, when we are forsaken by the Lord; it is not faith but wicked indifference which makes us careless concerning communion with him. * * *

A pious man once said—'Often when in prayer I feel as if I held between my hands the fatherly heart of God, and the bloody hand of Jesus; for I remind the of one his divine love and fatherly mercies, and I grasp the other by his promise, and strive to hold him fast and say, 'I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.' But when left by the Lord, such blessedness of access is impossible, there is no answer of peace, no token for good, no message of love. The ladder is there, but no angels are ascending and descending upon it; the key of prayer is in the hand, but it turns uselessly in the lock. Prayer without the Lord's presence is like a bow without a string or an arrow without a head."

Most heartily does my heart respond to the foregoing sentiments, and I never can feel at ease unless I have the know-so in my soul, even the direct witness of the Spirit of Truth.

I cannot depend for a moment on any external evidences, unless accompanied with the inward testimony. I cannot desire comfort from past manifestations of the Savior's love, without a present consciousness of acceptance. I want even to possess the life-giving principle—the power as well as the "form of godliness."

"And they took Knowledge of Them that they had Been with Jesus."

Here we have a living example of those that were not ashamed of the testimony of the Lord. Peter and John had been preaching the resurrection to the people, showing that only through Christ they would receive immortality and eternal life, when those cold hearted elders and scribes asked them, by what name do ye do this?

Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, then answered; "Ye rulers of the people and elders of Israel; if we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by means he is made whole; be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazerath, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole." And as Peter continues to talk to them in his bold, fearless manner, not fearing the face of man, he tells them there is no other name under heaven nor among men whereby we must be saved. They were surprised when they saw their boldness and perceiving they were unlettered men. Nor do I suppose this was the only reason, for it was said of Jesus on one occasion, that his word was with power, and while they talked their words found a place in their hearts, causing them to take knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.

Let us now see how near we are like God's witnesses. We have professed faith in Christ. Now comes the trial, whether we will confess him or not; For, says Christ, on a certain occasion, he that confesseth me before men, him will I confess before my Father and the holy angels. If we are ashamed, then he will disown us or be ashamed of us. But in what does confessing Christ consist? 1. Not only in having a form of godliness, but having the power thereof. 2. Seeking to imitate Christ in all our life, both public and private. 3. Seeking to cultivate the spirit of love and meekness, so that, like Jesus, we may do good to those around us.—4. Loving our neighbor as ourselves. Visiting the sick, the widow and the fatherless in their distress, and so keep ourselves unspotted from the world. To be filled with the Spirit, and willing to be led by it so that we shall honor God in our bodies and spirits which are his.

We can confess Christ by imitating these examples, and the weakest of the flock can confess him so that the world can take knowledge of them.

How often the little ones of the flock are neglected. Let us take care of them, for it were better a millstone were hanged about our necks and we cast into the sea, than to offend one of these little ones, says Christ.

We may have knowledge so that we may understand all mystery, and have faith so that he may remove mountains; and if we have not charity we are nothing more than sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. O for a faith that works by love and purifies the heart!

Jesus Christ came into the world and set us the example; and every believer, yes, and every unbeliever, may read and know what a christian is, and know when they see christianity in his professed followers. When we look to Jesus we find in him every thing that is good, meek and lowly in heart; a friend of suffering humanity, whose whole life was bent upon doing good. And shall not we try to be like him? Thus the world will take knowledge of us that we have learned of him. Here the enemy of our souls is constantly throwing his charms, to lead us away; but let us not be overcome by them, for there is no safety out of Christ.

Bro., Sr., our trials are almost over; let us then live so the world will take knowledge of us, thrt we have been with Jesus; and when he comes to gather his waiting ones, we will hope to be found of him in peace.

Will Jesus Ever Come?

In the age in which we live, there is one class which believe that Christ is never coming. There is another class which have been looking, but have grown weary with looking, and are now saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as hey were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Pet. 3: 4. Another class have been looking and expecting the return of their Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to raise the dead and give eternal life to all who love him and his appearing and kingdom. Take the word of God, and it reads,—(Heb. 9: 28,) "Unto them that look for Him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Also in Acts 1: 11; "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." And in John 14: 2, 3;—"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also."

I think that I have got proof enough to show that Jesus will come again to this world. And am I ready to meet my Jesus? am I ready to stand at the bar of God? am I ready to receive the crown of life that is laid up for me? O Lord, give me grace to stand in these last days of peril! O Lord, help me to look into my own heart and see if there is any thing wrong in it! I do want to be saved in the kingdom, with my brethren and sisters. I love them here, and oh, the thought of a separation from them in the kingdom to come! I mean by the grace of God helping me to be in that land of rest. May I be ready to meet the Just One when he shall come.

We are fast hastening to the judgment. Every thing around us tells in thunder tones of the soon return of our blessed Lord. Many of the saints sleep in the silent grave, waiting for that day to dawn; others have been toiling in this world through the cares and temptations by which they are surrounded, but are still looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Cheer up, my brother, who is sounding the gospel through the land! Cheer up, my sister, who has gone into a far distant land, warning sinners to flee from the wrath to come. The land is nearing, where sorrow and sighing will not be known; where the briny tear will not fill the eye, but God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more pain, no more death, for the former things have all passed away.—Righteousness shall dwell there, and peace shall sit upon every brow. Thank the Lord for all the blessed promises he has left us! Lord, help me to feel that they are sure!

Jesus is coming to save his people; to save those poor colored brethren at the South, who are bound down by the oppressor's hand. Thank the Lord, they will be free soon! And O backslider, (if one should read this,) what are you doing? What is your doom? Why did you turn from the Lord? What was the first cause of your leaving the Lord? Think of the position you are in; stop and think once how you stand in the way of some sinner. Think how many are following you to destruction. O turn to the Lord once more! Love and serve him; walk in the path of duty again, for the Lord says in his word that the backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways. Prov. 14: 14. And again he says, "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee; know therefore and see that it is an evil thing and bitter that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord God of Hosts." Jer. 2: I pray you to turn to the Lord and love him, and be ready for his coming and kingdom.

O sinner! where are you? What excuse have you for not serving the Lord? Have you not had the means of grace extended unto you? Has not the servant of God faithfully warned you to prepare to meet your God in peace? Has not the Spirit of God striven with you in by-gone days, and has it not convinced you of a coming judgment? Haste, and get ready! for soon the last note of warning will be heard. What will you do? Will you forsake sin and the vain amusements and follies of this world? Will you bid farewell to every thing that is sinful, and embrace the truth as it is in the word of God? or will you sin away the day of grace and be lost at last? Think of the love that Jesus had for lost man. Think how he hung on the cross and shed his blood for you.

O come, sinner, come to Jesus, and be saved in the kingdom; for he is coming, and what will you do when the last sign is hung out in the heavens? What will you do when the last loud trumpet sounds to wake the sleeping dead? Sinner! what will you do when the heavens depart as a scroll, when it is rolled together, and the Son of Man is revealed? O sinner, for that great day prepare, prepare! for he is coming. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Amen.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER THREE.

Our road is among the thorns of the "hedges," and pits, sloughs, and beasts of the "highways" for here are the sinners for whom blood has been offered, and to them are we sent with the "word of life." They despise the cross of Christ. Some of them laugh at his people; others are respectful, thoughtful. We labor for their reconciliation to God. Some yield and turn to Christ, find forgiveness, and go on their way rejoicing, for a time. At length an evil minded one rises up to pervert the gospel of Christ, or to calumniate his faithful ministers. These little ones are caused to stumble, the flock is scattered. What shall I think? "One sinner destroyeth much good," and another voice follows, "It were better for that man that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he cast into the depth of the sea." We pass on, and anon find a few humble souls rejoicing in God, glad to see us. We are at home almost; all is happiness and peace. Why is this? Have their ships returned them great revenue? their trade increased their goods, their lands produced a double crop? None of these. Why then this holiness? Oh, they believe in Jesus with a working faith; it works by love, purifies the heart and overcomes the world. They are praising God that their names are "written in heaven," and that there they "have an enduring substance."

Calling on a poor woman with a large family of children, and inquiring of her respecting her interest in Christ, found she had many years before been converted and had been active in religion with some of those happy ones; but she had moved into a proud village and lost her religious associations, and her hope also; did not attend meeting; doubted whether she had not been mistaken about there being any such thing as Christianity. She had been in the place two years, and no minister had visited her. She could not go to meeting without being a laughing stock; she had no such clothing as others wore to meeting, nor would her conscience allow her to wear such. She saw the Christians (?) pass her house with all the gaudy trappings that money and art could furnish. She saw the ministers pass with their splendid cane and glove-covered hands in the hottest of weather, with airs which bespoke that they felt themselves to be more than men. She did not care to hear them preach,—a view of them was enough. She did not want her children to go where such pride was manifested, lest they become proud also.

These were some of her remarks. Is she not right? thought I. She has good common-sense, and a tolerable idea of Christianity, certainly. Could I apologise for the ministers? Could I smooth over the matter of these silk-wound and gold-bound disciples. No, no. The case was clear; the woman would have good cause to class me with them if I did so, I mused aloud. "These are not ensamples of the flock of Christ. The servant is not above his master, nor the disciple above his Lord. God has marked these tender-fingered, full-fed men who walk in a vain show. They are but stubble, and the day of the Lord shall burn them up. Real Chrisians should learn the difference. What is the chaff to the wheat! The voice of the Lord sounds. Wo to them that are at ease in Zion."

I thought again. Do ministers remember when they walk in the street, and talk in the way, the eyes of the multitude are upon them, as well as the eye of God? Do they reflect that all frivolous action,

"COME, FOLLOW ME."

Though my way be dark and dreary,
Savior, I will follow thee,
Though my heart seems oftimes sinking
'Neath the waves of sorrow's sea;
Needful grace thou wilt impart,
'Till I see thee as thou art.

When the cares of earth are strewing
Trials o'er my path of life,
May this hope within me glowing,
Bear me onward 'mid the strife;
'Till my soul shall be possest
Of thy peaceful, heavenly rest.

Perfect Being—friend in sadness.
Guide thou me—I'll trust in thee;
Thou wilt teach me faith and gladness,
Bid all cares and sorrows flee:
Every pang thou wilt remove,
Bear me in thine arms of love.

When these fleeting, transitory
Scenes of earth are passed away;
Crowned with everlasting glory,
Nations all shall own thy sway;
Love redeeming chanting then,—
Let me in that anthem join.

Here we have a living example of those that were not ashamed of the testimony of the Lord. Peter and John had been preaching the resurrection to the people, showing that only through Christ they would receive immortality and eternal life, when those cold hearted elders and scribes asked them, by what name do ye do this?

Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, then answered; "Ye rulers of the people and elders of Israel; if we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by means he is made whole; be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazerath, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole." And as Peter continues to talk to them in his bold, fearless manner, not fearing the face of man, he tells them there is no other name under heaven nor among men whereby we must be saved. They were surprised when they saw their boldness and perceiving they were unlettered men. Nor do I suppose this was the only reason, for it was said of Jesus on one occasion, that his word was with power, and while they talked their words found a place in their hearts, causing them to take knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.

Let us now see how near we are like God's witnesses. We have professed faith in Christ. Now comes the trial, whether we will confess him or not; For, says Christ, on a certain occasion, he that confesseth me before men, him will I confess before my Father and the holy angels. If we are ashamed, then he will disown us or be ashamed of us. But in what does confessing Christ consist? 1. Not only in having a form of godliness, but having the power thereof. 2. Seeking to imitate Christ in all our life, both public and private. 3. Seeking to cultivate the spirit of love and meekness, so that, like Jesus, we may do good to those around us.—4. Loving our neighbor as ourselves. Visiting the sick, the widow and the fatherless in their distress, and so keep ourselves unspotted from the world. To be filled with the Spirit, and willing to be led by it so that we shall honor God in our bodies and spirits which are his.

We can confess Christ by imitating these examples, and the weakest of the flock can confess him so that the world can take knowledge of them.

How often the little ones of the flock are neglected. Let us take care of them, for it were better a millstone were hanged about our necks and we cast into the sea, than to offend one of these little ones, says Christ.

We may have knowledge so that we may understand all mystery, and have faith so that he may remove mountains; and if we have not charity we are nothing more than sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. O for a faith that works by love and purifies the heart!

Jesus Christ came into the world and set us the example; and every believer, yes, and every unbeliever, may read and know what a christian is, and know when they see christianity in his professed followers. When we look to Jesus we find in him every thing that is good, meek and lowly in heart; a friend of suffering humanity, whose whole life was bent upon doing good. And shall not we try to be like him? Thus the world will take knowledge of us that we have learned of him. Here the enemy of our souls is constantly throwing his charms, to lead us away; but let us not be overcome by them, for there is no safety out of Christ.

Bro., Sr., our trials are almost over; let us then live so the world will take knowledge of us, thrt we have been with Jesus; and when he comes to gather his waiting ones, we will hope to be found of him in peace.

Will Jesus Ever Come?

In the age in which we live, there is one class which believe that Christ is never coming. There is another class which have been looking, but have grown weary with looking, and are now saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as hey were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Pet. 3: 4. Another class have been looking and expecting the return of their Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to raise the dead and give eternal life to all who love him and his appearing and kingdom. Take the word of God, and it reads,—(Heb. 9: 28,) "Unto them that look for Him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Also in Acts 1: 11; "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." And in John 14: 2, 3;—"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also."

I think that I have got proof enough to show that Jesus will come again to this world. And am I ready to meet my Jesus? am I ready to stand at the bar of God? am I ready to receive the crown of life that is laid up for me? O Lord, give me grace to stand in these last days of peril! O Lord, help me to look into my own heart and see if there is any thing wrong in it! I do want to be saved in the kingdom, with my brethren and sisters. I love them here, and oh, the thought of a separation from them in the kingdom to come! I mean by the grace of God helping me to be in that land of rest. May I be ready to meet the Just One when he shall come.

We are fast hastening to the judgment. Every thing around us tells in thunder tones of the soon return of our blessed Lord. Many of the saints sleep in the silent grave, waiting for that day to dawn; others have been toiling in this world through the cares and temptations by which they are surrounded, but are still looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Cheer up, my brother, who is sounding the gospel through the land! Cheer up, my sister, who has gone into a far distant land, warning sinners to flee from the wrath to come. The land is nearing, where sorrow and sighing will not be known; where the briny tear will not fill the eye, but God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more pain, no more death, for the former things have all passed away.—Righteousness shall dwell there, and peace shall sit upon every brow. Thank the Lord for all the blessed promises he has left us! Lord, help me to feel that they are sure!

Jesus is coming to save his people; to save those poor colored brethren at the South, who are bound down by the oppressor's hand. Thank the Lord, they will be free soon! And O backslider, (if one should read this,) what are you doing? What is your doom? Why did you turn from the Lord? What was the first cause of your leaving the Lord? Think of the position you are in; stop and think once how you stand in the way of some sinner. Think how many are following you to destruction. O turn to the Lord once more! Love and serve him; walk in the path of duty again, for the Lord says in his word that the backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways. Prov. 14: 14. And again he says, "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee; know therefore and see that it is an evil thing and bitter that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord God of Hosts." Jer. 2: I pray you to turn to the Lord and love him, and be ready for his coming and kingdom.

O sinner! where are you? What excuse have you for not serving the Lord? Have you not had the means of grace extended unto you? Has not the servant of God faithfully warned you to prepare to meet your God in peace? Has not the Spirit of God striven with you in by-gone days, and has it not convinced you of a coming judgment? Haste, and get ready! for soon the last note of warning will be heard. What will you do? Will you forsake sin and the vain amusements and follies of this world? Will you bid farewell to every thing that is sinful, and embrace the truth as it is in the word of God? or will you sin away the day of grace and be lost at last? Think of the love that Jesus had for lost man. Think how he hung on the cross and shed his blood for you.

O come, sinner, come to Jesus, and be saved in the kingdom; for he is coming, and what will you do when the last sign is hung out in the heavens? What will you do when the last loud trumpet sounds to wake the sleeping dead? Sinner! what will you do when the heavens depart as a scroll, when it is rolled together, and the Son of Man is revealed? O sinner, for that great day prepare, prepare! for he is coming. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Amen.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER THREE.

Our road is among the thorns of the "hedges," and pits, sloughs, and beasts of the "highways;" for here are the sinners for whom blood has been offered, and to them are we sent with the "word of life." They despise the cross of Christ. Some of them laugh at his people; others are respectful, thoughtful. We labor for their reconciliation to God. Some yield and turn to Christ, find forgiveness, and go on their way rejoicing, for a time. At length an evil minded one rises up to pervert the gospel of Christ, or to calumniate his faithful ministers. These little ones are caused to stumble, the flock is scattered. What shall I think? "One sinner destroyeth much good," and another voice follows, "It were better for that man that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he cast into the depth of the sea." We pass on, and anon find a few humble souls rejoicing in God, glad to see us. We are at home almost; all is happiness and peace. Why is this? Have their ships returned them great revenue? their trade increased their goods, their lands produced a double crop? None of these. Why then this holiness? Oh, they believe in Jesus with a working faith; it works by love, purifies the heart and overcomes the world. They are praising God that their names are "written in heaven," and that there they "have an enduring substance.'

Calling on a poor woman with a large family of children, and inquiring of her respecting her interest in Christ, found she had many years before been converted and had been active in religion with some of those happy ones; but she had moved into a proud village and lost her religious associations, and her hope also; did not attend meeting; doubted whether she had not been mistaken about there being any such thing as Christianity. She had been in the place two years, and no minister had visited her. She could not go to meeting without being a laughing stock; she had no such clothing as others wore to meeting, nor would her conscience allow her to wear such. She saw the Christians (?) pass her house with all the gaudy trappings that money and art could furnish. She saw the ministers pass with their splendid cane and glove-covered hands in the hottest of weather, with airs which bespoke that they felt themselves to be more than man. She did not care to hear them preach,—a view of them was enough. She did not want her children to go where such pride was manifested, lest they become proud also.

These were some of her remarks. Is she not right? thought I. She has good common-sense, and a tolerable idea of Christianity, certainly. Could I apologise for the ministers? Could I smooth over the matter of these silk-wound and gold-bound disciples. No, no. The case was clear; the woman would have good cause to class me with them if I did so, I mused aloud. "These are not ensamples of the flock of Christ. The servant is not above his master, nor the disciple above his Lord. God has marked these tender-fingered, full-fed men who walk in a vain show. They are but stubble, and the day of the Lord shall burn them up. Real Chrisians should learn the difference. What is the chaff to the wheat! The voice of the Lord sounds. Wo to them that are at ease in Zion."

I thought again. Do ministers remember when they walk in the street, and talk in the way, the eyes of the multitude, are upon them, as well as the eye of God? Do they reflect that all frivolous action, needless dress, &c., are marked by the thoughtful and set down as so much against their profession? Do these sparkling, glittering, mincing Christians, who spend one two or three hundred dollars a year for dress, who carry gold enough on their persons, in rings and chains, to buy a barrel of flour, a cord of wood, and a bag of potatoes, know that the poorer class, with better sense, despise such religion and disdain the idea of associating Christianity with it? that they mock their prayers and ridicule their exhortations without feeling opposed to Christianity? I have seen much of this where I was not known as a preacher; for there are but few plain spoken enough to tell out their views of religious men and conduct to the class they condemn.

I passed to other parts, and met with the humble, plain, devoted disciples of Jesus; different families were working for a reform in the place (for there were sinners among them,) and God was working with them. The house of worship was filled with anxious, penitent ones, who listened to the preaching and wept with deep emotion. I mused upon the cause of this. They were "clean who bore the vessels of the Lord;" humility marked their course. They "preached the word," with the Holy Spirit. The church-members lived Christ, walked in Christ, and the people knew it. They did not try to laugh it off. No, the exhortations went to the hearts of men, and they cried out, "What shall we do to be saved?" Thus sinners "fell down acknowledging that God was with his people of a truth." Oh, then, there is a difference between living, naked, heartwork Christianity, and stupid, wound and clasped gold-labeled, smooth-tongued "our religion." Yea, there is a difference; and as I mused, I prayed, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me," that I may rightly represent thy cause, and successfully preach thy word.

For the Crisis.

"Homeward Bound."

Yes, fellow Christian, we are not staying here, but going home; pilgrims and strangers tarrying but a night, and soon the welcome summons will come, "Arise, and depart, for this is not your rest." And O, may we be prepared at all times for the day that brings our promised rest. Glory to God for the Christian's hope! and that ever I, a poor unworthy worm of the dust, have been made partaker of that glorious hope.

The worldling dreams not of the blessed realities of the Christian's home. They imagine those sweet anticipations of future blessedness merely the fancy of the wild enthusiast, doomed always to disappointment. But our hope is built on the oath of God, who cannot lie; and though heaven and earth pass away, his word cannot pass till all be fulfilled. And while the world seek only riches and pleasures of time, which soon must pass away, we seek incorruptible crowns, and a home in the land promised to Abraham, the father of the faithful. And shall I ever gain a possession in that heavenly Canaan? Will these weary feet ever press the golden streets of Mount Zion? Shall these eyes, from which oft flows the penitential tear, behold with joy the Son of God?

Ah, pilgrim, methinks there will be shouting when we get there. Now we wait, and watch, and toil; now we sigh for the morning, and though the night seems long, yet "the morn cometh" which has been the cry for thousands of years. And the promise is good to-day; the morning surely cometh, and that very, very soon. Then faint not, weary pilgrim, when we are so near home. Gird on the armor, and if defeated in a former conflict, wage anew the warfare against sin and Satan, knowing that soon these foes will be destroyed.

Dear brethren and sisters, I hope to meet you in the promised land. Often when I read the appointments for the dear brethren to meet in conference and campmeetings, I think how I should like to be there. But I have read of a Conference, soon to be commenced, and though I don't know exactly when, I make calculations, God helping me, to be there. The poor can go to that meeting, and distance and worldly cares will keep none away. Praise the Lord! The whole family of the redeemed of all ages will be there; Christ will preside, and it never will close, thank God. There will be no sickness, sorrow nor parting there; but happiness and love will prevail; and who don't want to be there? Who does not wish to share the glory of the Christian's home? All those who obey God here will be there.

"Out on an ocean all boundless we ride,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound;
Tossed on the waves of a rough restless tide,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound;
Far from the safe, quiet harbor we've rode,
Seeking our Father's celestial abode,
Promise of which on us each he bestowed;
We're homeward bound, homeward bound."

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER ELEVEN.

After examining various scriptures relating to the origin, history, and destiny of man, we now come to the plain question, is man mortal or immortal? Does his conscious existence cease at death, or does he continue to live between death and the resurrection, and onward forever?

These are questions of deepest moment to this generation. Important and widespread results will follow the affirmative or negative on this subject. The time has fully come when this theme should have a candid and thorough examination by all lovers of truth. If man has already immortality, he does not need to seek for it; but if he is mortal, then the question arises at once, is there any way of obtaining immortality? If so, how? Let us inquire of Paul. He says in Rom. 2: 6–7, that God "will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Can any one suppose that the Apostle would tell us to seek for that already in our possession? We see from this scripture how we are to obtain it. He sets it before us as a prize to be gained "by patient continuance in well doing." Suppose we continue in wicked doing, what will be the consequence? Paul answers this question plainly in Rom. 6: 23,—"The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." This sets the truth in clear light. The gift, consequent upon "patient continuance in well doing," is life; and the punishment for the opposite course in death.

We can find no place in the Bible where it is intimated that man possesses the attribute of immortality in this present state of existence; but Paul tells us when those will get it, who have practised continued well doing. 1 Cor. 15: 52–55. "The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory. O death where is thy sting? O grave, (hades or hell,) where is thy victory?" In this scripture, we learn that "this mortal must put on immortality." We have been taught, that at death the soul puts the body off, and at the resurrection, it re-enters the body; or in other words, puts it on again. But Paul says, "this mortal" shall put on, and as the soul is said to put off the body, and put it on again, and as the part that does this is mortal, it proves that the soul is mortal. We see no way to avoid this conclusion, if we follow the teaching of popular theology. But when we adhere to the Bible, and let it mean what it says on doctrinal points, all is plain.

Man is either mortal or immortal. When we say man, we mean man, not the house in which he lives, which we are told is his body; but the conscious, accountable being, who is to be rewarded or punished. If man is immortal, then he can never die, and we cannot believe for one moment, that the Holy Spirit would move the Apostle to urge us to seek for what we already possess. Absurdity stands upon the very face of such an idea. If man, properly speaking, is an immortal soul living in a body for a few years, "just as a man lives in a house," as a popular writer remarks, and then moves away to heaven, or "hell torments" at death,—why have a judgment day afterwards, when he is to be called out of happiness or misery, to see if he was put in his proper place? According to the Bible, man is not rewarded nor punished till after the seventh angel sounds. See Rev. 11: 15, 18.

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. . . . And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy (margin, corrupt) the earth."

This scripture shows most plainly that men do not go to their reward, or punishment at death, neither are they judged till after the seventh angel sounds. Does he sound every time there is a death? If so, the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's as often as one dies; and he also rewards the prophets, saints, and the small and great that fear his name; and besides all this destroys them which corrupt the earth. The Bible makes it plain, beyond all controversy, that men do not go to their reward or punishment at death.

If man is immortal, why is it that we cannot find the doctrine taught somewhere in the Bible, in its sixty-six books, and about fifty authors? Why have they all overlooked this subject, and taught us so plainly that when a man dies, "in that very day his thoughts perish." If every thing in the Bible which relates to the immortality of man was stricken from its pages, no change would be made in any passage except in Gen. 3: 4, where Satan says to our first parents, "ye shall not surely die." If man does not die, why do we find the Bible question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" It is absurd to talk about living again, if man does not die. And besides, what need of a resurrection, if men are not dead? We think those who believe in the constitutional, or natural immortality of man, and that men go to their reward or punishment at death, are quite consistent, when they deny the resurrection of the physical organism, called in Bible language, man; but we most firmly believe, as Paul says, that if there is no resurrection of the dead, "then they that have fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED."

Our Visit to Connecticut.

We have good news to tell our readers concerning the work of the Lord in this State. We left Boston Jan. 5th, and met Bro. Mathewson at Collinsville, where the Lord has been pleased to bless his labors in a most signal manner. He baptized nine that day, and was to baptize several more the following Friday. We preached there two evenings, and about twenty rose for prayers, and some were converted. The last night we heard from our Bro., we learned that about forty desired the prayers of christians. Some professors of religion oppose, but the Lord seems to have fully set his hand to the work. We hope to hear a full report from them soon.

Bakerville. In this place, the residence of Bro. Mathewson, the Lord has been pleased to bless the labors of our brother, and several have found peace, and become established in the hope of the gospel, notwithstanding they have had to struggle against most bitter opposition from those who profess to be the followers of Christ. Bro. M—— baptized two the day we were there. We learn the work is still onward.

We spent a short time in Winsted, and found them rising in the cause of the Lord. We also heard good tidings from Newfield, where several have been baptized recently, by Bro. M——.

We are happy to learn that pure religion is being revived in New Britain. Bro. Howell is laboring there, and is encouraged by the most happy results. Truly, "the Lord is merciful." Sr. Howell has been quite out of health for some months, but is now getting better. It was much feared by her friends, at one time, that she would soon be laid in the grave, but now their hopes are brightened.

We spent Friday and Saturday evenings, and the second Lord's day in Jan., in Hartford, with Bro. Crowell's charge, and enjoyed the interview with that church. One has recently found peace in Jesus, and there is a good prospect that others will soon follow the example.

Bridgeport. Monday evening, Jan. 11th, we commenced meetings at their pleasant "Brick Chapel," and continued through the week, and over the Lord's day, and closed up very pleasantly with the sacrament of the Lord's supper. This church has passed through many discouraging trials, but we left there much encouraged, and several who did not enjoy religion, expressed their determination to become the followers of Christ.

On our way to Danielsonville, we spent Monday night, Jan. 18th, with Bro. Pierson, in Hartford, and had a very pleasant interview during the day with Bro. J. Howell.

Danielsonville. The interest in this place is continually rising, and several have found peace in believing. A large number are under conviction. From ten to twenty rise for prayers every night. Lord's day, Jan. 24th, we had a love feast in the morning, and heard sixty-eight testimonies in fifty minutes. It was a heavenly time. At noon sixteen happy souls were buried with Christ in baptism and several more intend to follow their example next Friday afternoon. Although we have a large hall, yet many are obliged to go away, not being able to find even a place to stand up. Many professors of religion, and all the ministers of the place, stand aloof, and say very bitter things against us. May the Lord have mercy and "forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

Letter from Bro. H. L. Hastings.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I have for some time intended to write a few lines to the Crisis, informing you of my state. I have been sick—my friends thought me quite sick; some thought I would not recover, and probably hundreds with less disease than I had, have gone down to the grave. I had a severe cough and an attack of lung fever. From this I partially recovered,—then relapsed, had lung fever again, and was confined to my house seventeen days. Through the mercy of God, the kindness and care of my dear wife and other friends, the prayers of God's people, and the skill of an excellent Homeopathic physician, (Dr. Sumner, who doctored me for nothing, as he previously has my family,—may God bless him and pay him for it,) I am measurably recovered.

It was exceedingly trying to be laid aside for a day from labor. I had not been kept from preaching by sickness two consecutive Sundays before since I began to labor in the Lord's cause. Still I could trust in him, feeling that he did all things well. I did not feel inclined to regret that I had given my life to the work of God, even though for the work of Christ I might be nigh unto death. I had the usual amount of restless suffering, and was not without "comforters" like Job's of old.

Still I rejoiced in afflictions. Especially when the brethren abroad began to send me letters of kindly sympathy, I was more encouraged than in days of health,—yes, and better provided for, too, by brethren far away, and some whose faces I had never seen. God bless you, dear ones. Some of your letters are unanswered yet, but you are remembered at a throne of grace. Shall we meet by and by? I hope so, on Mount Zion.

When I was recovering from my sickness, and was able to sit in my chair, I thought that as I might not be able to preach more at present, if at all, I would finish a little work that I had commenced long ago; and so have that preaching to the world. So I wrote day after day till it was finished. Its title is "The Great Controversy between God and man,—its Origin, Progress and Termination." It states the beginning of the controversy with man's revolt from God, and sketches the history of the course of events until the world shall be at peace with God once more.

A little more than two weeks ago I left home, and preaching some as I was able, I made my way to New York; where I now am, printing the book.

It will probably make a volume of about 200 pages, neatly bound in cloth, will not exceed 63 cts., postage paid;—it may be a little less; perhaps 50 cts.

Now I have not the money to pay for the printing, or stereotyping, or binding of the book. I did think once I would not get in debt any more, but it seems to be about all I can do now to print a little and preach a little, and so keep along.

Now who wants a book? I wish all that want it would send immediately. Who wants 12, or 20, or 50? If such persons will send at once I will make them a satisfactory discount where they take a quantity. Who will send $1, $5, $10, or $20 for books immediately? If several can do so I can pay my printer, and I will send them the books as soon as they are done, and as cheap as they can well be afforded. I hope to have it out before the middle of February. Let me hear from all who want it. Any who can sell and pay soon may send in their orders. Till the fifteenth of February direct to H. L. Hastings, care of J. J. Reed, 16 Spruce St., New York City.

After that my address will be Rochester, N. Y. If any brethren want any religious books, Hebrew or Greek Testaments, Bibles, Lexicons, &c. &c., I will get them for them while here and send to them if they will forward the money. Pray for me.

In haste, your Bro., H. L. H.

Debt and Grace.

BY C. F. HUDSON.

Says the Christian Advocate and Journal of the above work:—"This is unquestionably the most candid and the most able work yet produced in our theological literature against the doctrine of eternal suffering. It would be needless here to attempt an analysis or an answer to its arguments, for it is so extensive and erudite withal, that such a critique could befit only the pages of a quarterly; suffice it to say, he reviews the various 'Theodices' in relation to the existence of evil, and especially of eternal evil, as implied by the doctrine of hell; he asserts the doctrine of annihilation of the wicked, enters with critical exegesis into the usual Scripture proofs of the eternity of punishment [suffering,] and details the opinions of the Church fathers on the subject. The book cannot fail to make a stir among theologians, and we hope to see it elaborately answered in our critical periodicals."

How Cheap Can We Live?

A sort of modern Diogones in Massachusetts, a Mr. Thoreau, has been amusing himself and astonishing his neighbors, by trying the experiment of how cheaply a man can live who discards all the superfluities of life. Having procured an axe, he went down to the shores of Wolden Pond, where he built for himself a hut of hewn logs, and which he occupied for two years, supporting himself chiefly on fruits of the earth raised by his own hands. During eight months of this period he kept an account of his expenses, which amounted to sixty dollars, including twenty-nine paid for his house. He recently published a volume, giving a narrative of his experience. The book abounds in shrewd remarks, and is written in a graceful style, furnishing evidence that the somewhat cynical author has improved his time. He wages war in this volume against the extravagance and luxury of the age, and though perhaps he carries his animosity too far, he hits some hard blows. His extraordinary conduct, in secluding himself from civilization, and living a la hermite in the woods, has induced many persons to think him crack-brained; but he is, we suspect, any thing but a fool, and at worst is only one of those eccentrics of whom New England produces so many.

We would not recommend his practice, or even endorse all his opinions; but he is right in saying that too many men make themselves slaves to mere sensual gratifications. The one puffs away a fortune in real Havanas. The one swallows it in the guise of champagne. Another puts it on the backs of his wives and daughters in finery, or sinks it in a costly house and fine furniture which he is afraid to use. A fourth, even more silly, suffers a few fast idle horses to eat it up in oats. Or they work, like broken down hacks in a mill, day in and day out through a long life, to supply these or other factitious wants. All this, too, is at the expense of the higher part of their nature. They starve the mind to pamper the body. They reduce the intellect, the heart, the soul itself to the base condition of a bondman to the flesh. They leave themselves no leisure to study or reflect. Instead of gaining broader views as they advance in life, their ideas become narrower, until at last, they are mere drudges, and have no thought above what they shall eat and drink, or wherein they shall be clothed. It would be infinitely better for the happiness of the individual, as well as for the progress of the human race, if men cared less for sensuous gratifications, and discarded some of the superfluities, the pursuit of which makes them slaves through life.

We are aware that much nonsense has been written about the enervating effects of luxury. But, in spite of the exaggerations which have been thrown around the subject, it is incontestible that a too exclusive devotion to the elegancies of life emasculates men and nations. A people, abandoned to the gratification of the senses, is no longer capable of great sacrifices for country, liberty, or any thing but luxury. It is perhaps a good thing that we have a Diogones among us. His caustic strictures may shame those whom more serious remonstrances fail to effect, and even the eccentricity of his hermit life, by fixing attention on his crusade against extravagance, may prove to be wisdom in the end.—Ex.

Congregational Singing.

Some of our readers know how earnestly, for years, we have plead for congregational singing—singing simultaneously, in the Spirit; singing and making melody in our hearts to the Lord, in opposition to the modern fashionable choir singing, accompanied with instrumental music. Confirmatory of our view we give below a specimen from Spurgeon, the modern Whitfield.

The prayer being concluded, Mr. Spurgeon gave out the well known hymn beginning—

"Before Jehovah's awful throne."

He read it through, having first announced the tune would be the "Old hundred," and then read each verse separately before it was sung. It is scarcely possible to give any idea of the sublime effect produced by these ten thousand voices as they swelled the massive harmonies of the grand tune with a fulness of breath rarely heard.

"We'll crowd thy gates with thankful songs,
High as the heavens our voices raise;
And earth, with her ten thousand tongues,
Shall fill thy courts with sounding praise."

Most magnificent was the shout of praise that now went up. Not a voice was mute save where occasionally some one's nerves were overpowered by the massive rolling chorus that rose on every side. Never did we so realize what congregational singing might become. It was an uplifting of voice and heart such as one can hope to hear only a few times in the course of life.

Much of this grand effect was no doubt owing to the majesty of the tune itself—much to the fact that all the congregation knew it—and perhaps not a little to the practice of reading each verse before it was sung, a practice we have always thought a very reasonable one, especially among the poor and those who cannot read.

Let any one attend the Union Prayer Meetings at the Old Dutch Church, corner of Fulton and Williams streets, (New York,) which are continued with unabated interest, daily, and hear the singing, the united voices bursting forth from grateful hearts, and will he not be convinced that congregational singing is the singing?

"Lord, how delightful 'tis to see
A whole assembly worship thee!"

—Golden Rule.

[Selected for the Crisis.]

Always Finding Fault.

There are certain people who cannot live without finding fault. No matter what subject, or person, comes up in the course of conversation, they start some frivolous objection, or make some censorious remark. Instead of trying to be in charity with their neighbors, they take malicious pleasure in speaking evil about them. They obstinately shut their eyes to good qualities; while they employ microscopes to discover and magnify little ones; and afterwards they torture language to exagerate what they have seen, so as to depreciate as much as possible. They do not, however, always speak out boldly. But they deal in inuendoes, in hints, and in ominous shakes of the head. Instead of frankly assailing in front, they assasinate behind the back. Practically, they persuade others that all men are so evil, that there is not even a chance of reform. Even in acts incontestibly good, they pretend to find latent selfishness. They spend their lives in defiling human nature, like the foul Yahoos whom the satirist has depicted. To believe them, there are none virtuous but themselves; all the rest of mankind being knaves, brutes or devils.

The proverbial fault-finder little thinks that, in censuring so maliciously and indiscriminately, he is only painting his own portrait. It is a secret consciousness of his own demerits, a gnawing rage at the superiority of others, which is the real cause of his want of charity, the principal inducement to his abuse. His own heart is the mirror from which he de scribes mankind. The best men have been those invariably who spoke the most kindly of their race. The great type of all manhood, whose perfect humanity is the admiration even of Pagans and Atheists, ever spoke in benignat terms, having charity even for "publicans and sinners."—It is to his precept that we owe the great doctrine of human brotherhood. In the idea of the fallen Lucifer, we have, on the contrary the incarnation of malice, hate, slander, ill-will and evil-speaking. As the one is said to have come to bring "peace and good-will to men," so the other first defiled the fair creation with strife, and sowed "war among the hosts of heaven." We never hear a professed fault-finder, but our thoughts recur to his type. We never listen to the beneficent language of one who is in charity with his race, without feeling that he is advancing more and more to the "perfect man."

Walking.—Fowler says:—A short and quick step indicates a brisk and active, but rather contracted mind, whereas those who take long steps generally have long heads. Those who scuff or draw their feet, drag and drawl everything; while those who walk a springing, bounding step, abound in a mental snap and spring. Those whose walk is mincing, affected and artificial, rarely, if ever, accomplish much; whereas those who walk naturally, are just what they appear to be, and put on nothing for outside show."

Courtesy.—Courtesy is a distinguished feature of civilized society. It is the most beautiful evidence of the refining power which a higher development exerts over our race. By courtesy we mean that behavior of man towards man, which one would ask for himself. It is but part of the mode of carrying out the Christian precept, which lies at the basis of harmony and order among men: "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you." That this precept is divine, as is all moral truth, is proved by our common appreciation of its fitness and beauty. Do what we may in life, the wheels of society can never run smoothly and well when the spirit of courtesy does not actuate the deeds and thoughts of man in his intercourse with man.—Ex.

Tongues and Translations.—When the Gospel was first preached to all nations, it was necessary to give a diversity of tongues; a tongue for each nation; and this was done by the Divine Power. But in this second promulgation, as it were, of the Gospel, the work will probably be carried on by a diversity of translations, a diversity of Scriptures—a translation for each nation. Instead of the gift of tongues, God, by his providence, is giving to mankind a gift of Scriptures."—Claudius Buchanan.

Dr. Johnson wisely said, "He who waits to do a great deal of good at once will never do anything.

Health Department.

Tobacco.

No. XI.

When we consider how much the good Lord has done for us, it is reasonable that we should do all to his glory; indeed, we are taught in the Scriptures that we should have this object in view even when we eat and drink. Then it certainly follows that we can eat and drink nothing to the glory of God, that is injurious to our constitutions. It is the duty of every man to preserve his health as far as possible. Those who have not made the experiment have very little idea of the comfort of those who really eat and drink to the glory of God, avoiding the use of tea, coffee, tobacco and all other injurious and intoxicating substances. After the system is cleansed from all these impurities, one feels like a new creature.

Dr. Thomas Lacock says, in an article published in the London Medical Gazette, "The action of the heart and lungs is impaired by the influence of the narcotic (tobacco) on the nervous system, and a morbid state of the larynx, trachea, and lungs, results from the direct action of the smoke. . . . . On the brain the action of tobacco smoking is sedative. It appears to diminish the rapidity of cerebral action, and check the flow of ideas through the mind. This, I think, is a certain result."

Says Dr Alcott, when speaking of the effects of water upon the blood,—"Not a gill of the three gallons circulating within us—no, not a spoonful—but is even poisoned with it. Who does not know that tobacco contains a most deadly poison—a poison so deadly that two or three drops of it will kill, instantaneously, almost any small animal?"

John Quincy Adams remarks in a letter to Dr. Cox,—"In my early youth I was addicted to the use of tobacco in two of its mysteries—smoking and chewing. I was warned by a medical friend of the pernicious operation of this habit upon the stomach and nerves; and the advice of the physician was fortified by the results of my own experience. More than thirty years have passed away since I deliberately renounced the use of tobacco in all its forms, and although the resolution was not carried into execution without a struggle of vitiated nature, I never yielded its impulses; and in the space of three or four months of self-denial, they lost their stimulating power, and I have never since felt it as a privation.

I have often wished that every individual of the human race afflicted with this artificial passion could prevail upon himself to try but for three months the experiment which I have made! sure that it would turn every tobacco-land into a wheat-field, and add five years of longevity to the average of human life."

Testimony of E C. Delavan, Esq:—

"I have some slight knowledge of the effect of this poisonous and disgusting weed. When about twelve years old, on seeing gentlemen use tobacco, I was anxious to become a gentleman too, and that as soon as possible. So I purchased a yard of what is called the pigtail, and commenced chewing it as I walked, or rather strutted through the streets of Albany. I had not walked over a mile before I became so deadly sick that I crept under a shed, where I remained several hours before I regained strength to return home. I made a subsequent attempt to become a gentleman on cigars, but was equally unsuccessful.

I look upon the use of tobacco in health, exactly in the same light, in a moral point of view, as I do the use of alcoholic poisons. And I have no more doubt that even what is called the moderate use of tobacco shortens life, than I have that the moderate use of rum shortens life."

We ask again, can we use this poisonous drug to the glory of God? If we cannot, what is our duty? We leave the reader to answer the question in the fear of the Lord, and the coming judgment.

The Clergy on Tobacco.—The New York Evening Post remarks:

"Hall's Journal of Health mentions what it calls an 'instructive and alarming fact' in relation to the Wall street forger recently sent to the Penitentiary. It was proven on the trial that he was never seen down town without having a cigar in his mouth; that he was never well. On entering the prison, smoking was at once and absolutely prohibited, by an inflexible rule. In three months he gained fifteen pounds in flesh and his general health was improved in proportion.

Speaking of tobacco, we cannot refrain from alluding to its ravages among the clergy, who smoke and chew to an extent little suspected by their auditors. Indeed, an intelligent friend in that sacred calling, informs us that not less than twenty of his ministerial associates are habitual chewers. He has no doubt that this kind of ruminating is seriously injurious to the cloth. A highly esteemed Presbyterian clergyman, in Virginia, recently committed suicide, from a state of nervous irritation caused by the excessive use of tobacco.

Th Council of State of Berne, Switzerland, in consequence of the deleterious effects of this narcotic on the human frame, have recently resolved to prohibit the use of it to all 'unconfirmed young men; the religious rite of confirmation is there administered at sixteen. This, we apprehend, will tend more to the growth of the church than the discouragement of tobacco."

Domestic Summary.

DAGUERREOTYPES BY LIGHTNING.

A country-woman has recently arrived in Paris from the department of Seine-at-Marne, who should be presented to the Academy of Sciences. This woman was a short time since watching a cow in an open field, when a violent storm arose. She took refuge under a tree, which, at the instant, was struck by lightning; the cow was killed and she was felled to the earth senseless, where she was soon after found, the storm having ceased with the flash that felled her. Upon removing her clothing, the exact image of the cow killed by her side was found distinctly impressed upon her bosom.

This curious phenomenon is not without precedent. Dr. Franklin mentions the case of a man who was standing in the door of a house in a thunder storm, and who was looking at the tree directly before him; when it was struck by lightning. On the man's breast was left a perfect daguerreotype of the tree.

In 1842 a magistrate and a miller's boy were struck by lightning near a poplar tree in one of the provinces of France; and on the breast of each were found spots exactly resembling the leaves of the poplar.

At a meeting of the French Academy of Sciences, Jan. 25th, 1857, it was stated that a woman of Lugano, seated at a window during a storm, was suddenly shaken by some invisible power. She experienced no inconvenience from this, but afterward discovered that a blossom apparently torn from a tree by a lightning stroke, was completely imaged upon one of her limbs, and it remained there till her death.

In September, 1825, the brigantine Il Buon-Serro was anchored in the Amiro Bay at the entrance of the Adriatic Sea, where she was struck by lightning. In obedience to a superstition, the Ionian sailors had attached a horse-shoe to the mizzen mast as a charm against evil. When the vessel was struck, a sailor who was seated by this mast was instantly killed. There were no marks or bruises upon his person, but the horse-shoe was perfectly pictured upon his back.

A Spanish brigantine was once struck in the Rade de Zante. Five sailors were at the prow, three of them awake and two of them sleeping. One of them was killed, and upon undressing him, the figures 44, plain and well formed, were found under his left breast. His comrades declared that they were not there before his death, but their original was found in the rigging of the vessel. But the most singular facts connected with this affair, are set forth in the report of the physician, Dicapulo, who says: "After undressing the young sailor, we found a band of linen tied about his body, in which were gold pieces and two parcels done up in paper. The one on the right side contained a letter from Spain, three guineas and two half guineas; the other, a letter, four guineas, a half-guinea, and two smaller pieces. Neither the paper, the pieces, nor the linen presented the least appearance of fire. But upon his right shoulder were six distinct circles, which preserved the natural color, and appeared as though traced upon the black skin. These circles, which all touched at one point, were of three different sizes, and exactly corresponded with the gold pieces in the right side of his belt.—Cal. State Sentinel.

The Weather at the South.—Green peas and new potatoes are abundant in the vicinity of New Orleans. On some plantations the orange trees are putting forth their blossoms, and in others are yielding an abundance of fruit. The Picayune acknowledges the receipt of a mess of ripe strawberries grown in the open air, without the aid of glass. A letter from Florida says: "Peach trees are in full bloom, and all kinds of trees are out like May. People are very busy gardening." In Mobile roses and all kinds of flowers are in full bloom.

The Season.—This is truly a remarkable season. Vide the following from the Providence Journal:

"A butterfly emerged from his chrysalis at the Marine Hospital, yesterday, and seemed greatly surprised that no better preparation had been made for him, in the way of leaves and flowers. His beautiful wings of green and gold were folded in disgust, and he seemed inclined to go back and wait till the fields and gardens correspond better with the temperature."

And the following from the New Bedford Mercury:

"We hear that the May-flower is in bloom in this neighborhood. In Plymouth woods these beautiful flowers were in full perfection last week."

The Newburyport Herald acknowledges the receipt of a beautiful boquet of flowers from a lady in that city, who gathered them in open air from her garden on the 21st inst. There were garden pinks and calandine in full grown leaf and as fresh as in June, with variegated pansies in bloom.—Journal.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

I WANT TO LIVE ALWAY.

A TRANSPOSITION.

I want to live alway—yet not here below,
In this sin-stricken world of sorrow and woe;
I long to depart, and with Christ to appear,
Bearing his image—to his throne ever near:
Onward! still onward in the path he once trod,
And all holy prophets and martyrs of God,
I would hasten my steps toward heaven my home;—
From thence happy spirits invite me to come.

I want to live alway—I ask there to stay,
Where no clouds of storm rises dark o'er the way,—
No waves of affliction are dashing around,
But joy, peace and quiet forever abound.
Where Hope will not paint her bright bow in the air,
So quickly to fade in the night of despair;
For its joyful fruition will ne'er pass away,
But shine on forever in unclouded day.

I want to live alway—where there is no sin,
No sorrow without—no corruption within,
No artful temptation, my soul to enchain,
Against which I strive, though sometimes in vain;
Where there are no doubts, and no harassing fears;
No parting with loved ones, no fast falling tears;
No pains to distress, no sad mournful song;
No funeral bier is seen passing along.

I want to live alway—yet dread not the tomb,
For Jesus hath lain there and banished the gloom;
Then surely I fear not to pillow my head
Securely to slumber on that lowly bed:
For truly I learn that a morning of light,
With sunshine of glory will follow the night;
Then quickly from sleep shall my body arise,
To greet with hosannas my Lord in the skies.

I want to live alway—to dwell with my God,
On the earth when renewed, the saints blest abode—
With delight would I roam o'er the bright hills and plains,
Where Jesus in glory eternally reigns.
With heart all exultant I would hasten to greet
The enraptured host who bow at his feet,
And join in the song that triumphant doth rise,
With shouts sweetly blending and mounting the skies.

Hark! what strain of sweet melody falls on the ear!
'Tis the note of the harpers who on Zion appear;
While resplendent with glory our eye doth behold
"The King in his beauty" by prophets foretold!
The angelic hosts his name are adoring;
O, had I the pinions, I now would be soaring
To mingle my song, in his praise to unite,
And live on forever in that world of delight!

Obituary.

Died, in Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 10, Mrs. Belinda, widow of the late Mr. Richard Sides, aged forty-seven years.

Sister Sides embraced the religion of Jesus twenty-eight years ago, at York, Me., in a glorious reformation under the labors of Elders Peter Young, Elijah Shaw, and others; some of whom have fallen asleep, and part of whom remain to this present.

She was baptized soon after her conversion, and Portsmouth being her place of residence, she more particularly cast in her lot with the people of God there. Religion adorned her life, while she adorned her profession. She was a woman of affliction, was called to part with her husband several years since, and recently with an only daughter, while she suffered much from infirmity. She was looking for the speedy coming of the Lord, and died in hope of seeing Jesus, leaving an only son, an orphan, to mourn, yet trusting in the God of "the fatherless." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, Jan. 27.

The screw steamship Kangaroo, from Liverpool at 10 A. M., Jan. 13th, arrived here at half past 8 o'clock this evening.

FRANCE.

There is no political news of importance. It is stated that the consumption of tobacco in France has increased so rapidly, that the Imperial Manufactories can scarcely supply the demand, and that the revenue from the sales of the present year is expected to reach 100,000,000 francs.

Two high functionaries of the French commissariat are about to be put on their trial before a tribunal in the south of France for embezzling 300,000 francs out of the stores for the Crimea.

The small pox is raging in Adana. In the town of that name 3000 children have been carried off. The Bishop of Sis has sent two American priests well skilled in medicine to Adana, and their arrival has produced a good effect among the inhabitants.

A French physician has been sent to the East to study a new and very fatal type of the small pox which is raging at present in the Turkish provinces of Asia Minor.

NAPLES.

Every succeeding dispatch from Naples increases the estimate of the loss of life caused by the series of frightful earthquakes which have ravaged so large a portion of the kingdom. An official report, not made public, states that above 30,000 people have been killed and 250,000 rendered homeless. Fever and starvation are now afflicting the districts which have been visited by this great calamity, and the inhabitants of the capital are horror stricken at the accounts which they receive thence. Great is the indignation at the supineness or incapacity of the government. One writer says that there is, in fact, no government, and he adds "That society holds together at all in the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies is a stranger miracle than any which the Roman Church can produce.

RUSSIA.

The newspapers of St. Petersburg mention a project for effecting a telegraphic communication with America, through Siberia, with a short submarine cable across Behring's Straits.

ENGLAND.

The launch of the Leviathan continued to progress satisfactorily. It was hoped that in a few more days the vessel would be down to low water mark, when the process of unpacking the cradles would commence, and the full spring tides at the end of January will float her. The progress of the vessel during the last two days was over 30 feet.

PRUSSIA.

The Prince of Prussia had determined to visit England to assist at his son's marriage to the Princess Royal.

Great preparations were making in England for the event, and also at Berlin, for the entry of the royal pair into that city.

MADAGASCAR.

Intelligence has been received of a continued persecution of the Christians in Madagascar. Thirteen persons have been put to death while many more had been subjected to torture and a number reduced to slavery.

INDIA.

Additional telegraph advices of the Indian news, taken out by the Europa, have been received from Malta. The dates are Calcutta, Dec. 11th, Bombay 18th.

The death of Sir Henry Havelock is confirmed.

On the 14th of Nov., Sir Colin Campbell evacuated Lucknow in the presence of the whole force of Oude. He retired to Cawnpore.

The correspondent of the Times thus speaks of the actions with the Gwalior Mutineers:—Gen. Windham, on the 26th of Nov., attacked part of the Gwalior Mutineers near Cawnpore and defeated them. The next day he was surprised—lost all his tents, and had to retire into his intrenchments, from which, however, he made a successful sortie upon the enemy. The 64th and 18th regiments were much cut up. Sir Colin Campbell heard the firing from the Oude side, and came up and drove the enemy from his position in Cawnpore.

On the 7th of Dec., the Commander-in-Chief attacked the Gwalior men, fourteen thousand strong. The victory was decisive. The enemy was pursued for 14 miles along the Calpee road—lost all his cannon except eight—all his carts—all his amunition and all his baggage.

Another despatch from Sir Colin Campbell says that the Gwalior fugitives were subsequently fallen in with by Gen. Grant as they were beginning to cross the Ganges, and that after some sharp firing, fifteen guns, with all their stores, amunition, &c., were captured. Gen. Grant was slightly wounded, but he lost no men, although the loss of the enemy was about one hundred.

The Times considers the Gwalior Contingent for all practical purposes annihilated.

The Bengal 34th and 73d regiments had mutinied, thus extinguishing the native Bengal army. Two companies of the 73d were cut up by the sailors at Dacca. There were 2400 European troops in the Bengal Presidency.

The steamship Great Britain, with 1000 cavalry, had reached Bombay.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Halifax, Jan. 28.

Steamship Canada, from Liverpool, 16th inst., arrived here this morning.

FRANCE.

A despacth to the Times, evening of the 14th, says that the Emperor Napoleon was fired at while entering the Italian Opera in the Rue Lepellier, at half-past nine o'clock that evening. Some persons in the street were wounded. The Emperor showed himself to the people at the doors of the Opera. The house received him with enthusiastic cheering. He remained till the end of the Opera, and on his return home at midnight he was hailed by the enthusiastic cheers of an immense multitude who were waiting in the streets.

The Moniteur of, the 15th inst. says, on their Majesties arriving at the Opera, three explosions coming from hollow projectiles were heard. A considerable number of persons who were stationed before the theatre, including some soldiers of the escort, were wounded. Two of them were mortally wounded. The hat of the Emperor was pierced by a projectile, and Gen. Roquet, Aid-de-Camp of the Emperor, was slightly wounded in the neck. Two footmen were also wounded, and one of the horses in the Emperor's carriage was killed and the carriage broken by projectiles. The latest dispatches say that sixty persons were wounded and three killed by three shells which were thrown at the Emperor's carriage. The conspirators are Italians, and many arrests have been made. The Emperor and Empress suffered nothing from the event, and on the following day they attended solemn Mass, accompanied by the Ministers of State.

ITALY.

Mazzini has published an article of eight columns in the Italia del Popolo, addressed to the men of action, and telling them that to conspire is not a right, but a duty.

The Atlantic Telegraph.—New York, Jan. 31.—A letter from George Seward, Esq., Secretary of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, dated at London, Jan. 15th, says:

"Our arrangements here for the completion of the work we have in hand are progressing satisfactorily, and I trust and believe that our next attempt will be crowned with success. The machinery is being overhauled, under the direction of British and American-engineers, and experiments will be carefully tried before sailing next time, with a view to meet every known or anticipated difficulty.

The English Government has again granted us the use of ships, and the manufacture of new cable to supply the place of that which was lost is going on satisfactorily."

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

General Conference.

Providence permitting we purpose to hold another General Conference, at Chapman Hall, Boston, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening March 16th, at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

In behalf of the church,

ON THE DEATH OF LITTLE JOHNNIE.

He's gone! how quick the little sufferer went!
How quick fled hope, and quick came deep lament!
The little lisping prattler's voice is still,
And that sad thought will often cause a chill.

But he is gone to wait the judgment morn;
Left our sad hearts his absence here to mourn;
And when we see his little clothes,—his toy,
How quick to mind they bring our little boy!

And is this all—the last sad end o him?
Is there no resurrection morn, to bring
The little sleeper up from the dark tomb,
No waking up from his sound sleep to come?

Ah! yes, be sure will hear the trumpet sound,
That long, loud burst, encircling earth around!
And forth he'll come, fresh from the opening tomb,
A little plant for Eden there to bloom.

But why all this? why cause our hearts to bleed?
Why so soon taken! why, what was the need?
He'd done no evil, but much good he had—
He oft had cheered our hearts and made them glad.

Then why the haste? why not left to cheer us still?
Was there some need our hearts with pain to fill?
Could not a later day have done as well,
And spared our hearts awhile this pain to feel?

'Tis hard, we know, for you to feel the rod;
But O, "be still, and know that He is God."
He knows your strength, he knows how much you'll bear—
He knows how much is good—the rest he'll spare.

Then O, to Him with feeling hearts submit;
For then, be sure, you'll find a sweet support;
And then you'll feel to say, "Thy will be done,"
And be prepared to meet your little one.

The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. IV.

BY B. F. HILDRETH.

3.—The Kingdom set up; the judgment; saints acquitted and wicked doomed.

The Son of Man receives his Kingdom before the great battle; for we are assured that, "In the days of these kings, (represented by the ten toes of the image,) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2: 44. And it is not only set up, but it is also given to the Son of Man, at the time of his appearing; for when "He came with the clouds of heaven," "there was given unto him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom; that all people, nations and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away; and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. 7: 14. "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. And the nations were angry; and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward to thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 14–18.

This is in harmony with Paul's declaration, that the Lord Jesus Christ shall "judge the quick and dead, at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1, 2. The giving of the kingdom and the judgment must therefore be instant upon the translation of the saints; at which time they will be glorified. But as "the indignation is not overpast" till after the condemnation and destruction of the wicked, they must remain in their chambers, though they may occupy thrones according to Rev. 20: 4, and the vision of Daniel.

"I beheld, till tne thrones were cast down, (or placed: i. e., set, to be occupied by those that shall be found worthy,) and the Ancient of Days did sit; whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool. His throne was like a fiery flame and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Dan. 7: 9, 10.

In the apocalyptic vision John saw the throne of Judgment; which probably alludes to the same scenes as those of Daniel. "And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (or hades) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged, every man according to their works." Rev. 20: 11, 12.

I have supposed that this was the judgment of the wicked; not only because it was recorded as though subsequent to the loosing of Satan; but because "the dead were judged," as though none but the wicked dead could be included. But a recent review of the subject leads me to think it the same judgment seen by Daniel: for if the earth is made new at the beginning of the thousand years, it would not be said to flee away from the face of Him who had just made it, and all things new; for the "new earth shall remain." Isa. 66: 22. I have no doubt that John recorded the truth, according to the mind of the Spirit; but I should despair of ever learning its import, if I took each of the events to be fulfilled in the order in which they are written; for the seventh chapter presents the glorified ones in white robes; the twelfth, the church in the wilderness; the nineteenth, the marriage of the Lamb; and the twentieth, the first resurrection. So that it seems clear that the judgment here presented is the same as that of Daniel.

"I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of Days came; and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Dan. 7: 21, 22. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations; . . . and he shall set the sheep on his right hand." . . . "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. . . . . Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels. . . . And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal." Matt. 25: 31–34. God grant us each an abundant entrance there.

Correspondence.

From Eld. J. Wilson.

BRO. GRANT:—I heard a man preach recently, from the text—"The wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. He said, in this place death did not mean to die and be buried in the grave, but it was spiritual death. He went on and described the eternal miseries of the wicked without mercy, feeling, or affection, and, to me, as destitute of justice.

It is certain God cannot execute such eternal misery, while he has no pleasure in the death of the wicked.

What is Immortality? Let our Lord answer. The Sadducees brought the case of a woman who had seven husbands, denying the resurrection. He says; "They which . . . obtain . . . the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke 20: 3 6. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21: 2. Now apply this to the wicked, to give them eternal life in misery, and you make them as happy as St. Paul in glory.

Now we will look for Immortality in the Bible account of creation. God made Adam of the dust, and "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Then man is the soul. Now he must be tested by his obedience. A tree of knowledge was restricted; if he eat of it he must go back to dust again. Now was he mortal or immortal? I answer, neither. If he had been immortal, he could not have died if he had eaten all the fruit on the tree, for immortality was God's veto against death. If he had been mortal, he must have died if he had never touched the ree. for mortality must die. So we see neither of these would have been a test. He was upright, and his life was given to him on condition if he obeyed he was to live forever, if he disobeyed he was to be mortal, and surely die. He did eat the forbidden fruit and was judged of God and sentenced by him to dust, without the least intimation that he should ever live again. Is not common sense blunted for a rational being to believe that two mortal parents should produce offspring, any part of which should be immortal? Reason and Bible both forbid it.

Matt. 18: 11, says, "The Son of man is come to save that which was lost;" that is, the life of Adam's race. "For without the shedding of blood there could be no remission," and he must give his life away. Hos. 13: 44,—"He will ransom them from the grave." Matt. 20: 28,—"The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to give his life a ransom for many." Heb. 2: 14–18,—"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people; for that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Gal. 4: 45,—"When the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."

This confirms the argument that Jesus Christ was mortal, and made under the law of mortality given when God guarded the tree of life against Adam's approach. Mary was a mortal woman, and could not produce an immortal Savior. Mortality was what Christ came to save from.

O that I could see my brethren and sisters, as I have done in days that are past! But I must submit to old Age and its infirmities. My love to my christian friends is not at all abated. I have received several letters from distant brethren, which has kindled anew the flame of love. I cannot express my feelings any better than by relating the experience of a little girl I baptized near Plattsburg, N. Y., forty years ago. She expressed a great weight of conviction, and to get relief she would go away alone to read and pray. When she found relief she was filled with so much love to Jesus in reading her Testament, when she came to the word Jesus, she would kiss his name on the book. She was only eight years old.

Seeing the name of a christian friend on letters, has had a similar effect on me. Let me see your names, brethren, if I cannot see your persons. Your old pilgrim friend and brother, waiting for the consolation of Israel,

BRO. GRANT:—Having had my mind somewhat exercised for the last few days on the state of things in the religious world, I have felt desirous to communicate some of my thoughts to the friends of Jesus through the Crisis.

I have felt deeply humbled before the Lord and a secret trembling over the words—"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us of entering into rest, any of us should seem to come short of it. Then it is possible to have a strong belief in, and an apparent manifest zeal for, the coming of the Lord, and at the same time not know the Lord experimentally, nor his great salvation. So it seems by what is transpiring around us; and if God is not speaking as with an audible voice to the Advent body in particular, I for one am greatly mistaken. And f the question should be asked, why? might not the answer be—Because of its riches; its self-sufficiency; its pride; its increase of creature goodness and self-righteousness; its exaltation of poor, fallen man and the exclusion of a PRESENT CHRIST revealed to the heart of the believer by the power of the holy Spirit through the word. Thus Christ is robbed of his glory, souls are deceived, and one after another stumble and fall and are broken in pieces.

Surely, if any day called for deep humiliation and humbling before the Lord it is this. Who knows but he has already began to slay his people and intends ere long to call his people by another name? Things look solemn; but God is surely sifting his people and laying stumbling blocks in the way of others; and soon it may be said, "He that is filthy let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous let him be righteous still."

Beloved, hold fast that thou hast, that no man take thy crown, neither fear the reproach which will NOW be heaped upon thee. Hitherto thou hast only been traveling through a terrible wilderness, nor think to gain thy Canaan rest without becoming a FIGHTER, TOO; for the wild beasts of the field now long restrained begin to growl upon thee. But fear not, for the little flock of kids and the great army thick as grasshoppers have yet to stand in battle array; therefore, gird up the loins of thy mind, be sober and hope to the end, and, depend upon it, thy God will not be behind hand with the promised grace.

Says one, who feels his own weakness, poverty and foolishness, what shall I do, for I know not how to take one step aright or live right? Would there were more of just such characters. These are the very ones Jesus is after, and these only. "For I am not sent but to the LOST sheep of the house of Israel," and no matter whether they are Jew sheep, or Gentile sheep, there is but ONE FOLD, and all penned in together constitute the WHOLE HOUSE of Israel.

We read somewhere in the word that the wise man's eyes are in his head—it's not my head, of course, nor my brother's head; if so, they would be short-sighted. Thank God, we can find a better head than either, for, says the apostle in writing to that part of the mystical body found in Corinth, "The head of every man is found in Christ." Of course he did not mean every man in the world, for by far the greater part have another head, whence all their worldly wisdom is derived; wherefore we conclude he meant every man who had been by the spirit baptized into that body so as to become part and parcel of it, and by virtue of that Spirit's union, that engrafting process, become partaker of the benefits which must necessarily follow from a vital union with such a Head. Therefore, ye SENSIBLY LOST ONES, remember that all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are in thy Head—Christ; and he is honored when thou bringest to him thine emptiness, and poverty, and foolishness, and sorrows, and bids thee depart in peace.

Here alone is the christian's security, in knowing and feeling our own emptiness and insufficiency, and by faith living at, and drawing supplies from, the fountain of Christ's fullness. "For it hath pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell. Then it must be a blessed place for empty sinners to resort unto, for such are filled, while the rich are sent empty away.

O ye despairing, desponding, heart-broken ones, lift up your heads! He whom ye seek is no upbraider, no heavy burden-binder; no, no; this part belongs to the task-masters who require the full toil of brick, but give no straw to make them with.

How unlike the blessed Jesus who says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are HEAVY LADEN and I will give you rest." Yes, GIVE it, not sell it, for it is without money and without price. Then lay down thy axe and hammer nor think to work thy passage through, for here hosts have stumbled and fell because they sought it not by faith, but, as it were, by the works of the law. You lost your way by the first Adam, and there is no way back but by the second Adam. You may run to the law for comfort, but Moses is too faithful to shew you any mercy. The more you try to satisfy him, the more rigid will he become. Pay me that thou owest is all his cry, and until thou findest a hiding-place in the smitten rock, thy surety, he will be close upon thy heels, and when thou art safely lodged in the arms of thy Savior thou mayest say,—

"This is the way I long have sought,
And mourned because I found it not;
My grief and burden long have been,
Because I was not saved from sin.

The more I strove against its power,
I sinned and stumbled but the more,
Till late I heard my Savior say,
Come hither soul, I am the way."

IT is holiness we want above every thing else; holy principles, holy ministers, holy discipline, holy tempers, holy sermons and prayers, holy habits and conduct. Nothing will compensate for this. If the churches are not advancing in holiness, we cannot be surprised that there are few conversions—little spiritual life.—GUYER.

A MAN may go idle to hell, but he that will go to heaven must be busy.

From Bro. C. H. Morgan.

BRO. GRANT:—Having just received a letter from sister Brazee (the widow of our esteemed brother H. Brazee, of Kent, Ct.,) I thought I would pen a line for the Crisis notwithstanding his death has before been mentioned.

He has many friends who will rejoice to hear of his faithfulness in the cause of his Master during the past few years of his life. In his last letter to me, a few months since, he said; "I am hardly able to write. God will not trust me with property or health. I have been unable to labor for a long time, and though afflicted and almost forsaken by those I considered friends, still I am not cast down. God is with me."

You, brother, who did not always exercise that charity which "never faileth," do you feel this assurance? His life was one of sore trial and severe temptation, but he overcame all. He felt, Blessed is the man who endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life," &c. James 1: 11. Who that knew him does not remember his prevailing power in prayer? Who has not seen the penitential tear trickle down the sinners cheek during his soul-stirring exhortation?—Heaven grant, my brethren, we may remember the dying words of that child of God. As a circle of weeping friends stood around his couch, the dying Christian raised his eyes to theirs and said, Weep not; be faithful." He knew and felt the consolation such a life affords one in this most trying hour.

Be faithful! This will insure us eternal life beyond the valley and shadow of death, and cause us to shout victory over death and the tomb. 'Tis this that will bring us up to a life of immortality with our departed brother, and give us an inheritance in that land where sickness, separation and death come not; where "adiues and farewells are sounds unknown." Then, my brethren, whatever may be our lot in life, let us remember the last words of this expiring brother, and in all things be faithful.

Yours, &c.,
C. H. MORGAN.

PREPARATION.

AIR.—"'Tis Midnight Hour."

Behold he comes! the Righteous One!
His glory bright e'en now we see!
Oh heed his word, thou erring son,
Of frail mortality!
Oh listen to his pleading voice,
Leave all thy toys, oh quickly come!
And with God's waiting ones rejoice,
In view of that bright home.

Oh come and live—thy sins break off;
The Spirit calls—the Bride says "Come,"
And Mercy, though insulted oft,
In earnest cries—"Come home!"
The fountain freely flows for thee;
Thy prayers he'll hear, thy sins forgive;
His smiling face look up and see—
'Tis only just—"believe!"

A frowning world, oh leave behind!
And press along till thou shalt see
The lovely Benefactor kind,
Who died for thee and me.
He's gone, but says he'll come again,
And with him bring the loved and lost.
O Jesus, come! thy reign begin,
And rescue all the just.

Do It Smilingly.

Put on a cheerful, smiling face always; everywhere, in every place, at home and abroad—in the post office, the store, the merchant's shop, the doctor's office; in the car, the stage, the steamboat; in the house, by the wayside; whatever you are doing, teaching, buying, selling, giving, receiving, or refusing, put on a cheerful, heavenly, smiling face. Its just as well, better, far better, more pleasant, agreeable, profitable, than otherwise. A man, woman, or child, with a cheerful, good-natured, benevolent, open-hearted, smiling face, looks better, feels better, is better, a great deal. Every body is better every way than when wearing a frown; a rough, coarse, morose exterior; a cold, chilly, freezing, selfish abruptness. A smiling, cheerful, heavenly countenance is like the perfume of roses, the sweet spices of Arabia.

It costs no more to do every thing just right, in a peaceful, pleasant, harmonious, gospel, kind, courteous, affable, smiling way than otherwise.

Friends, will you try it?

"It is not much the world can give,
With all its subtle art;
And gems and gold are not the things
To satisfy the heart;
But O! if those who cluster round
The altar and the earth,
Have gentle words and loving smiles,
How beautiful is earth!'

—Golden Rule.

Hospitality in the House of God.

Every church, says an exchange paper, that would prosper, must show proper attention to strangers. It should be seen that they are promptly and courteously provided with seats, and made to feel that they have a cordial welcome there. Kind looks should greet them as they come, and follow them as they go. Should they come again, let them meet with the same reception. And should they become constant worshipers there, let them be sought out and visited, not merely by the pastor, but by members of the church and society. Whether rich or poor, they should not be overlooked or neglected. They have claims as strangers, irrespective of all outward distinction. Let us see that they have prompt attention.

Let a man bring the matter home to himself. Suppose you are in a strange place. You go to the house of God on the Sabbath, but are treated as a stranger in the fullest sense of the word. You are not spoken to—you are not seated. We venture the assertion that when you go home it will be to attend some other meeting, if there is one near, and if there is no other, you will be quite inclined to stay at home.

THE HUMBLE HOME.—Are you not surprised to find how independent of money peace of conscience is, and how much happiness can be condensed into the humblest home? A cottage will not hold the bulky furniture and sumptuous accommodation of a mansion, but if God be there, a cottage will hold as much happiness as might stock a palace.—Rev. C. Hamilton.

THERE is nearly as much ability requisite to know how to make use of good advice, as to know how to act for one's self. The man of genius thinks for himself; his opinions are sometimes contrary to those commonly received; he therefore shocks the vanity of the greater number. To offend nobody, we should have no ideas but those of the world; as man is then without genius and without enemies.

For the Children.

How we Act; Not how we Look.

BY G. G.

"Oh Tommy, what a funny little woman!—come and see!" cried Harry Wilde, as he stood at the window of his father's house in a pleasant English town. Tommy ran to the window and looked out, and laughed louder than his brother. It was indeed a funny sight to see. In the midst of a pelting rain, through mud and running water, there waddled along the queerest, quaintest little roly-poly figure you can imagine. It was a dwarf woman, who, though no taller than a child of seven or eight years, wore an enormous bonnet, and carried an overgrown umbrella. Her clothes were tucked up about her in a queer way, and altogether she was a very laugh-at-able little creature. As she passed, she looked up, and such an odd face as she had! The nose was large and long, as though it had kept on growing after the other features gave out. Indeed it was so big that the eyes had got into a way of looking at it constantly, which did not improve their beauty. The hair was bushy, and of a lively red, but the mouth was quite sweet and good-humored, and the little crossed eyes had a merry, kindly twinkle in them.

"Well," said Harry, "if I were such an absurd looking body as that, I wouldn't show myself—I'd hide by day, and only come out by night, like an owl—wouldn't you, Tommy?"

"Yes," said the little boy, and then asked—"Did God make her, Harry?"

"Why, yes, he made what there is of her, and then I suppose he concluded it wasn't worth while to go on with her!"

"Harry! Harry!" cried the mother of the little boys—"you must not talk so; it is wicked. That poor little dwarf may be of much use in the world, and do a great deal of good, if she has a kind heart; and she looks as though she had."

"I should like to know of what use such a poor wee thing can be," said Harry, shrugging his shoulders.

"God knows," said Mrs. Wilde, "and he did not make her in vain."

The next day was Christmas. The rain was over, and it was clear and cold.

"Hurrah!" cried Harry from the window, "here's our wee bit woman again. Her hair is as fiery as ever. I wonder the rain didn't put it out. She might warm her hands in it, if it weren't for carrying that big basket."

Mrs. Wilde looked out. The dwarf was trudging slowly along, bearing a heavy basket. The good lady was seized with a strong desire to know more about the strange little creature—so she hurried to her room, put on a bonnet and cloak, and went out and followed after her, quietly She had to go a long way before her curiosity was satisfied—but at last she saw the dwarf enter a miserable house in the suburbs of the town. Mrs. Wilde stole up to a window, and ventured to look in. She saw the dwarf surrounded by a crowd of shouting children, to whom she was giving Christmas-cake, toys and clothes from her basket. She saw her give food and medicine to a poor woman, who lay on a bed in a corner. She heard her say—"Have the coals come?" and the woman answer—"Yes, and the blankets—God bless you!" She saw her take up the baby, feed it, and play with it—so big a baby, that Mrs. Wilde thought it ought to take turns in tending with the good little dwarf. Then the lady turned away in tears, and went home. When she told Harry what she had seen, he blushed deeply, and Tommy said:—

"God knew better than brother, what the funny little woman was good for didn't he?"—Little Pilgrim.

A PRAYER.

Oh! thrust from out mine inmost heart
Each selfish passion, Lord;
In others' woes I bear a part,
For thus instructs thy word.

Give me a heart that's true and kind,
That will forgive all foes;
The cords of Love around it bind,
Ne'er heaved by passion's throes.

Help me to strive for others' peace,
Nor for my own alone;
Assured that this will make my bliss,
And keep me near my home.

And when my days on earth are o'er,
And I life's race have run,
Oh may I reach fair Canaan's shore,
Where sorrows never come!

The New Birth.

BY J. COUCH.

It will doubtless be considered on all hands, that the terms "born" and "begotten," used in the Scriptures in relation to the new birth, are used in a metaphorical sense, and not to express a literal fact. Inorder to understand the proper use of metaphors, it is first important clearly to apprehend the facts taken in the figure to illustrate spiritual truth.

We therefore, now inquire, what circumstances are evidently used in these figures as illustrative of Divine truth?

In respect to the term "begotten." What points of resemblance are presented by inspiration to shadow forth a certain change in the character of man? The essential point of difference between the figure and the truth taught is this: as the father is the source from which the child receives his nature and essential physical characteristics, and also the agent by whom that nature is conveyed to his offspring; so is God the source from which believers in Christ receive their spiritual and christian characters, and likewise the all-powerful Agent by whom those holy elements of the Divine nature are conveyed to the soul. In some instances, however, human beings are spoken of as instrumentalities or subagents under God, in effecting the change of the natural heart into the moral image of God.

In respect to the term "born." What point of analogy exists between natural and spiritual birth? The prominent features of resemblance are these:

1. As the physical nature of the child is first developed in action at his natural birth, so is the moral character of the christian first developed in the spiritual birth.

2. As the natural birth is labor and travail to bring a new member into the family and to add another name to the family record, so there is spiritual labor and travail on the part of the church, to add a new member to the christian family, whose names shall be recorded in the book of life. Paul expresses this very clearly in the following:

"My little children of whom I travail in birth again, until Christ be formed in you. Gal. 4: 18.

The apostle addresses the Galatians as children, or members of the christian family; and as such they had been engaged in the service of Christ but had apostatised; hence he says, "Ye did run well, who did hinder you?" They had been initiated into the family of Christ at their conversion, or new birth; but having lost his moral image they were no longer recognized as living members of the Christian family; hence Paul says, "I travail in birth AGAIN," which evidently means that he was laboring a second time to bring them into a condition from which they had fallen; and as he was laboring to restore the moral image of Christ which they had lost by ceasing to run the christian race; and as he terms this travailing in birth again, it is quite certain that they must have previously passed through the change called birth, and that that birth could not have been a resurrection, but conversion.

This subject is further illustrated in this same connection by the use of an allegory, in which Abraham is represented as having two sons; one by a bond-woman, the other by a free-woman. The one, being born after the flesh, bore resemblance to the physical character of Abraham; the other, being born by promise, (that is, a promise was given before his birth, that he should be the spiritual representative of Abraham bore resemblance to spiritual character of Abraham. And as Paul declares that one persecuted the other, he could not have referred to a condition prior to birth, but necessarily subject to it: and as Paul further declares, "even so it is now," he must have intended to represent the condition of those who had passed the change denominated the birth of the Spirit. In Peter's first epistle he thus describes the character of the christian:

"Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." Chap. 11: 22.

And then in verse 23 says: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever;" which shows that those characteristics were possessed in consequence of their "being born again." In verses 24th and 25th he shows the contrast between that which is produced by natural, and that which is born by spiritual generation. He then says; "Wherefore, (that is, in consideration of the facts just stated,) laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new-born babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby."

Is it not evident that the apostle addresses the same persons when he says, "as new-born babes," as when he says, "seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth?" And does he not show that their souls were purified because they had been born again? Which proves conclusively that to be born again brings us to the same condition as the babe newly born, when it subsists on milk. For it would be in the highest degree absurd to suppose that the apostle, in the same connection, addressing the same brothren, surrounded by the same circumstances, and in the same condition, should illustrate that condition by representing them both as unborn and as newly born, both as in embryo, when they could not receive milk, and as babes to be nutured by milk.

In the use of symbols and metaphors, God always presents the most striking and appropriate to be found in the whole system of nature. And what emblem in the whole system of the material universe could be found more beautiful and illustrative to represent the transition through which the sinner passes in turning from sin to holiness, than the birth of a child? As the child at its birth is ushered into a new state of existence; initiated into a new circle of society; coming upon a new stage of action, upon which his untried powers and faculties are to be brought into requisition; the muscles, organs and energies to be invigorated by action; the whole system to be nurtured and developed by healthy nutriment, until the child arrives to the "perfect stature of a man," so, at conversion, the child of God is ushered into a state of spiritual existence entirely new; initiated into a circle of christian society, with whom he was never before associated; his moral powers and faculties are put in requisition in the service of God; his spiritual frame is to be sustained and invigorated by the food which nourishes unto eternal life; until, by the growth and development of the christian graces, the child arrives at the stature of a perfect man in Christ. Thus the apostle says;

"For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk, is unskillful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." Heb. 5: 12-14.

In this passage Paul reproves his brethren for not making that advancement in the christian life which the gospel requires; and clearly indicates that there should have been a growth from ths condition of "BABES" to that of mature age, and from a state of weakness requiring milk, to that of strength requiring strong meat. Parallel to this, Paul, in 1 Cor. 3: 2, says:

"And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able."

Many suppose because some authors render the word used in 1 Pet. 23, "begotten" instead of "born," that therefore Peter intended to represent a condition prior to birth. But this would not answer the case so far as argument is concerned; for Peter evidently expresses the idea that his brethren possessed pure hearts in consequence of being begotten of the word of God. But would this imply that they were in the embriotic state? Certainly not. Suppose I w s to say of a certain child that he is possessed of much acuteness of mind, having been begotten by a father of high intellectual endowments. Should I refer to the capacities of the child anterior to its birth, or, to the development of those faculties after birth? But, to put this question beyond controversy, we will hear inspiration upon the point. Heb. 11: 17,—

"By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son."

Was Isaac in the embriotic tent when he was offered, because he was not represented as being begotten by Adraham? The words "born" and "begotten" are frequently used in Scripture as interchangeable terms; that is, as significant of one and the same thing:

"And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." Col. 1: 18.

"God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." Acts 13: 33.

It is evident that in these passages, the terms "born" and "begotten" refer to one and the same thing; viz: the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

Confession.

As our salvation depends upon confessing the truth, I wish to inform the children of the great blessing I have received in attending a revival among our Methodist brethren in Wales. Returning from a tour among the mountains, I learned that the Methodists were holding meetings every night, and many had turned from sin and satan to God and truth. I attended the meetings for about one week, and said but little, lest I might injure or retard the good influence that was most apparent in our village. I found the Gospel was getting very large within me, but I kept it like fire in my bones till the preacher spoke about baptism. He thought perhaps some would like to be sprinkled, and some immersed; and wished them to satisfy their own consciences in the matter, without even striving to instruct them upon the subject.

Here, I confess, the Gospel overpowered me, and I began to let it off, though very carefully. Bro. P—— wished me to be short as possible, and Bro. B——, the preacher in charge, found all the time there was on both sides of his watch, over and over again. But I at length succeeded in stopping it. In a few evenings more I was just as full as before. They invited me into their desk to pray, but I got no relief; and as the revival had begun to abate, I asked the minister for the privilege of speaking on the Restitution, for I must let off this gospel somewhere. He said that he should be glad to hear me, but there was no opening.

I then told my wife that I could endure it no longer. I must go somewhere. And though quite unwell, I started without any appointment, to go, like Abraham, I knew not where. I thought of stopping at Springfield; but no opening there. I came on to Westfield—spent the Sabbath with brethren there. Had a very good time, but the gospel was still very large for me to carry. I came on to a place called Lonetown. Here, though an entire stranger, I thought I might dispose of some of it. I began at the first part of the village to tell my story, and gave them to understand that if any one would take me in, I would stop and preach that night.

One says, "I guess they will keep you over there," and another "over there," till I had got almost through the place. I concluded I would make one more attempt, and then pass on. I called at the door, told my errand and asked if I could stop with them. "Yes," was the reply, "as well as not." This text of scripture—"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers," had been enlarging their accommodations very much that same day.

I went into the school, notified the meeting, and a few came to their chapel to hear. Here I was constrained to be careful, and found but little relief. I concluded to go on, notwithstanding their earnest entreaties for my stay.

I came to this place two weeks ago last Wednesday, and here, high up in the mountain, I thought perhaps nobody would get drowned if I let all off. Soon the whole fountain was opened, and streams like liquid fire rolled down the valleys. Men, women and children, with horse teams and oxen, came up to learn the cause. It did not stop for rivers; up it went into the adjacent hills, till there was a complete rush to hear. By and by they began to drink; the life-giving stream was thronged, and such testimonies, from scores, of its healing power, can only be appreciated by those that have heard them. Others are coming, and still they come. And now, after letting it run almost three weeks, night and day, I find this blessed gospel of life only through Christ, "bigger and bigger," though I feel much more comfortable than when attending the Methodist revival.

Now, brethren, once more to the highways and hedges, and our work is done. I have here spread out the table of vision for the first time since the passing of time, and I must confess "there is a glory in it."

Joy—Work!

With the hearty greetings of old and tried friends of the cause and kingdom of our Lord, I am, in part, repaid for the sacrifices and toils of the absence. Is it not one source of joy to the poor pilgrims that kindred hearts of the whole struggle hail us in city and country as companions of toil and victory—for the victory is as sure as the war,—nor is it a light consolation that we find old disciples faithful, when we, after years of separate labor, mingle in a common service, and blend our souls in holy and united love at the altar divine! Thus it was with me in Boston.

The comments upon my labors still further on the tour, will be expressed in the form of a recommendation. This will be well taken, because I am known in my manner and patience with brethren, who may chance to differ from me in doctrine. And if persons see this who are advised by what I say, let them remember that we are friends, and the thing will be well understood.

Have a Bible class; one, two or three a week; and then when the preacher is ahead of you, or not up with you, tell him of it alone, not before the congregation? It does not look well—does it, brother? Moreover, would it not be altogether better to persuade a brother who is a preacher or exhorter, who holds a doctrine different from the minister, to present his views by appointment, and not take a position which would seem to be correcting the speaker before the congregation? Does not that appear singular to many people in the church, while the preacher may care nothing about it, personally?

"If the Lord tells him to come and see me, I hope he will come." Thus said a sister sick with consumption. Had not heard of her sickness before,—went "in that same hour." Not simply because I felt impressed to, but because it was duty, before determined. She will soon fall a prey to that fell disease. She had heard that I sometimes felt impressed to speak or pray. True! True, also, that I never hesitate because I do not feel impressed. It appeared, however, that God did direct in the scriptures, prayers, and song of that occasion.

Glad am I, that we can turn in the darkest hours of adversity to the strong hold, as "prisoners of hope." But our hope is not in the present. See the disease and weakness of our nature! See dear brethren and sisters falling under the power of the enemy, one after another! What is the hope—the firm support of the soul? Thus the suffering, dying believer has the joy of hope, as she already begins to pass to her peaceful slumber.

I will believe we had an instructive and profitable season with the friends at Peace Dale, R. I.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER FOUR.

How shall we choose words to convey to our readers the thoughts which rise up while laboring and traveling through the lanes and streets of this great city?

In one house we find great outlays for adorning the apartments with the most costly and elegant furniture, pictures and ornaments. Clothing of the finest texture, of the highest cost, is worn by the inmates. Ornaments of gold, stone, pearls, diamonds, of chains, bracelets, mufflers, tablets, headbands, ear-rings, rings, changeable suits of apparel, &c.; excess and extravagance mark all that is witnessed.

The responsible acting agents are professed followers of the meek and humble Jesus. What evidence do they give that they are Christians? Oh, they have been baptized, they have united with the church. They love to attend on preaching, sometimes. They are ready to pay the church expenses, and feel interested for the cause, and are anxious to see sinners converted. But can I feel that the love of Christ dictated this array which meets my eye in all dir ctions? Does the spirit of Christ tolerate the continuance of it, if it was arranged prior to conversion? But they are sometimes free to converse on religion, and desirous to know all about the prosperity of the cause. Yet the spirit of Christ, or some other spirit, calls up to our mind, "He that will be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Is there self-denial here? Is the cross here? It may be seen suspended to some golden chain dangling about the neck of some one, or prefixed to ornaments about the house. Is this the meaning of our Lord?

But again, "Abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul;" but the above are fruits of the flesh, "idolatry, the lust of the eye and the pride of life." It is "superfluity of naughtiness," which we are called upon to lay by. How can we feel the full, free, heavenly communion of soul with such persons?

We have just come from a poor looking house at the lower end of the same street; it is rather rudely finished, its occupants have nothing around them to show them wealthy in this world's goods. Disease has fastened upon the father of the family, depriving him of his usual income from industry. The greatest prudence is manifested; economy has long been practiced; and it has become a law of their life. But now charity must furnish the actual necessities of life. They are humble followers of Christ, they love his cross and have long borne it. Gratitude has long been manifested in all the mercies bestowed on them. Cheerfulness sits on the care-worn countenances of those trusting followers of the Lamb. They suffer, but do not murmur. They are in great straits, but God opens the way for them still to live for Christ, they talk Christ, they love his cause and have in days past spent their substance to advance his cause, denied themselves of the ornaments and luxuries of life to add to the mite for the treasury of the Lord. They blessed the poor, comforted the desponding, taught the young disciples, pointed the sinner to Christ; for such ones resorted thither for counsel and prayer.

When with this family, we felt something like "being at the house of our Master's brethren;" union was perfect, prayer was sweet, and something would steal into the mind like this, "Blessed is that people whose God is the Lord." "Blessed are the undefiled in the way." "When pride cometh, then cometh shame, but with the lowly is wisdom. The integrity of the upright shall guide them, but the perverseness of the transgressors shall destroy them. Riches profit not in the day of wrath, but righteousness delivereth from death."

In another instance we call on a professed follower of Jesus. He lives in a palace worth $20,000, with furniture and equipage to compare; drives, or rather has driven for him, a team and carriage worth $1000; his table is filled with the dainties of the market. He is a prosperous manufacturer, and has many men in his employ; some of them are brethren in the same church, or recognized as members of Christ's church at least; their families are large, their wages do not supply their necessities. Times change; labor is cheaper; food and fuel higher; men offer to work for low wages, because their liabilities are less. The owner is shrewd, takes advantage of the times, and though very pious withal, always at church on Sunday, and pays the greatest ministerial tax, he dismisses his brother from labor, or asks him to work for less pay. These things are being constantly enacted, on a larger or smaller scale, in various ways. How can we forget that he "who seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion against him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

Christianity is a leveling system,—not to give one man a right to command the property of another, but to unite the hearts of each to provide for the other's necessities.

For the Crisis.

To "Carrie."

The Crisis has just been glanced over, and as we have bowed around the family altar this evening, "one prayer" has been offered in your behalf, by two who "are agreed to ask" the blessing of God upon "an erring, wayward sister."

And as you seem to desire it, I venture "one word of advice." You once started to serve God, seven years ago. Ah! those were happy days. Was it here when Bro. P——, who has now fallen asleep, poured out "rivers of living water" to the thirsty souls? Well, you have wandered,—and sometimes almost despair. Yet your heart yearns for the peace you once enjoyed.

Carrie, take those yearnings for the peace of God,—those hungerings and thirstings after righteousness as a certain sign that God has not forgotten you nor forsaken you.

"Return, O wanderer, return,
And seek an injured Father's face,
Those warm desires that in thee burn,
Where kindled by reclaiming grace."

God loves you. Can you believe it? Can you doubt it, since he gave his Son to die for you? He loves you, not because you are good, but because he is good. You may be a wayward child, but his heart years over you. Now, Carrie, love him. O let your heart rise up in thankfulness to him for the love already bestowed, and then you shall no more of its heights and depths—its lengths and breadths!

"But I am a sinner." Well, Christ is a Savior. "But I am a great sinner." True, and Christ is a great Savior. O Carrie, though you may have grieved the Savior's heart, he still remains your friend. Remember, in seeking Christ you do not come to seek an enemy, but a dear and loving friend.

Remember that starving son, who, weary and ragged, dragged himself homeward. While he was yet a great way off, (just where you are,) his father met him and kissed him, and clothed him and honored him, and said, "My son was dead and is alive—was lost and is found." Carrie, turn your face homeward, and there shall be joy in heaven over your return. Angels wait to minister to you as salvation's heir. God bless you, I pray.

Please read Rom. 10: 1–10, to learn duty; confess with your mouth the Lord Jesus; and believe in your heart God hath raised him from the dead and you shall be saved. Are you ready to stand out before the world and witness this "good confession?" Can you brave earth's scorn? Will you be a soldier? Will you fight the good fight of faith? Know then, Carrie, there are those even in R—— who yearn for the salvation and deliverance of such as thee,—those who would "strengthen the things that remain that are ready to die."

Shall we fight together the battles of the Lord? Shall we meet here, or shall we meet on Mount Zion? I hope to see you there. God bless you forever and ever. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." O trust wholly in him! Give up your heart to be controlled by his love.

If you come on a Friday evening to Union St., and follow the east side of it till you reach the last house north of Monroe St., you will find a few christians who meet by divine permission to pray for such as you, whether known, or unknown to them. They have prayed much for God's blessing on this city: there is a vacant chair there for you, and others for your friends, and hearts and hands open to receive you. If you can call at any time, do so and inquire for HATTIE.

The Contrast.

Behold yonder white-robed, palm-bearing multitude before the throne of God! "What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?"

"These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." These are they who once were strangers on the earth, seeking refuge in dens and caves, having no certain dwelling place. Now, the renewed earth, glowing in the beauty of Eden, shall be their everlasting home.

Once they were despised and set at nought by the world; counted as the off-scouring and refuse of all things. Now, the Lord of glory honors them, calls them his jewels, his special treasure, his chosen people.

Once they were destitute of worldly possessions; like their Master having no place to lay their head; wandering in poverty, suffering with hunger and thirst ofttimes. Now, they shall inherit all things; never again shall they hunger or thirst; they shall pluck fruit from the boughs of the undying Tree; they shall quaff the crystal waters of the river of life.

Once their names were cast out as evil among men; they were denied the companionship of the proud children of earth. Now, they associate with the holy of all ages; the angel hosts disdain not to share their society; the King of kings, the mighty Sovereign of heaven and earth, comes forth to meet them; bids them welcome to the home his love has provided; wipes all their tears away; confesses them his friends before his celestial retinue; makes them to share in his glory, and sit on his throne.

In the glowing language of the Hebrew Seer, they receive "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." A crown of surpassing radiance encircles each brow; immortality is stamped on every feature; every voice unites in the triumphant song—"Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

How the music of earth grates on the ear, when by faith we catch the strains of that immortal choir! How the glory of this world sinks into nothingness, when the vision rests for a moment on the refulgent glories of the everlasting kingdom.

Oh for a home in that happy land—an association with that blood-washed throng! Let me have the cross, the suffering, the reproach; but let me have the crown, the triumph, the eternal weight of glory!

I would be numbered with the pilgrims here,
Their suffering and their trials I would share;
Then with them I would stand with beaming brow,
When He, the Mighty One, the heavens shall bow.

Beyond that scene, beyond earth's gloomy night,
I would among them dwell, in cloudless light;
I would King Jesus in his glory see,
And worship at his throne, who died for me. MARIA.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 10, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER TWELVE.

Having examined, again and again, every passage in the Bible that speaks of the spirit, soul, man, die, death, and dead, we cannot find a single verse that teaches the doctrine that man lives in a conscious state between death and the resurrection. We must firmly believe with Paul, that all that have died have "perished," unless there is a resurrection of the dead. Our only hope of a future existence, if we die, depends upon our being born again from the grave.

In answer to the question at the head of our articles on this subject, we remark, a living man is an organized being, made "of the dust of the ground," having "the breath of life" in his nostrils, which breath is common to all living creatures; without which no one of them can live. At death, this "breath of life" departs from them, but is not, never was, nor will be, the conscious part, but only that which sets the machinery in motion. This breath is the same in the philosopher and the idiot; the human and the animal race; the infant and the old man; but when it leaves, "they die and return to their dust."

This is very properly called the spirit, or "breath of life." No soul can live without it. The human and animal machinery stops as certainly when the breath of life is removed from the nostrils, as the engine does, when the steam ceases to act upon the piston. When this "breath of life" is removed, we stop thinking, or as David expresses it, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. The word here rendered breath is the same in the original as the one rendered spirit in Eccl. 12: 7. "Then shall the dust (the man) return to the dust as it was, and the spirit (or breath,) shall return unto God who gave it." The word ruakh, here rendered spirit, is found four hundred and three times in the Old Testament; and the corresponding Greek word, pneuma, is found in the New Testament three hundred and eighty-six times, but is not once rendered soul in either the Old or New Testament; hence we can no longer say that, when "the spirit returns to God, the soul, or man has gone." If this spirit, or breath of life is the man, the accountable being, then we ask, what is meant by the word soul? Is that the man too? But the Lord calls that man which he formed of the dust of the ground; and also calls him, after he received "the breath of life," a living soul, being, animal, or man, but never, an immortal soul. He calls every living creature, "a living soul." The wise man declares, that all men and animals are made "of the dust, and all turn to dust again;" and he also says, "as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath," (ruakh.) This is in complete harmony with the account of the creation.—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground;" "and out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air." Gen. 2: 7. 19. The question may be asked, "If man and the beasts were all made "of dust," and all have the same "breath of life," and all die alike, wherein then consists the difference between them?" This question, we purpose to answer in our next.

It appears clear that the difference is not in "the breath of life" which returns to God at death; for if this breath is the man, and the good go to heaven, then all go there, not only good and bad men, but the beasts also; for "all go unto one place." But if the animals go to the grave, and return to dust, then men go to the same place; which is what the wise man declares; and he tells us positively that there is "no knowledge" where they go. We have yet to learn from the Bible, physiology, philosophy, facts, or common sense, that a dead man, or any part of him is conscious between death and the resurrection.

Man is either mortal or immortal; i. e., he must either die, or live forever. If man dies, he is not immortal. Mr. Webster defines immortal,—"Having no principle of alteration or corruption; exempt from death; having life or being that shall never end." Let us turn to the Bible and see if this definition is applicable to man. In Job 4: 17, we read, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" This passage shows that in Job's time man was thought to be mortal. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." Gen. 5: 5. Who died in this case? Was it the house, or body, Adam lived in, or the man himself—the thinking, rational, accountable being? It must have been the guilty one, and can any one suppose for a moment that the Lord punished the house or prison with death, and let the prisoner go free, having more liberty than he ever before enjoyed? If Adam died as the Scriptures declare, then Satan is proved a liar; but if Adam was immortal, as many believe, then the truth is on the side of Satan, for he declared in opposition to the Lord, that man should not die; or in other words, that he was immortal; but we think the subsequent history of man proves the truth of the Scripture, which declares "he is a liar, and the father of it." As Adam was mortal, it follows as a sequence that all his children were mortal, for no fountain can rise above its source. If we can prove that one man is mortal the whole argument is gained, for we are all alike in this attribute. Says the Lord to Moses in Exodus 4: 19, "Go return into Egypt; for all the men are dead which sought thy life." Would the Lord have said this if they had been alive? If so, we cannot depend upon what he says. Again, the Lord says to Joshua, "Moses my servant is dead." Joshua 1: 2. Is it possible the Lord would say Moses was dead, when he was alive in heaven, or any other place? Why did Moses die? Because of his trespass at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh. Then on account of his trespass he went to glory before Joshua! Does this look consistent? Those who claim man does not go to his full reward at death, hold that the good are much better off in the intermediate state than when here on the earth; hence Moses was quite a gainer on account of his trespass. If Joshua had only trespassed at the same time, he might have gone to Paradise with Moses, but for his obedience he had to stay longer and pass through many trials escaped by Moses! It is hard for us to believe such theology.

Again, in John 11: 14, we read, "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." We believe our Savior told the truth, and if he did, Lazarus was not alive when our Lord made that declaration.

We have now the testimony of our Creator and his Son that man is mortal, and is not this sufficient?

Danielsonville, Ct.

In our last we gave some facts connected with the interesting revival now in progress in this place. We have not seen a more glorious work for the last six years. The Spirit of the Lord is truly returning unto the people with power. Men who had lost all confidence in christianity are now happy in the love of God, taking an active part in his service. Lord's day, Jan. 24th, sixteen were baptized, and on the following Friday, sixteen more, and many others stand ready to improve the next opportunity. Our meetings closed on Friday evening, Jan. 29th, when about one hundred sat down to the table of the Lord, in remembrance of the sufferings and the sacrifice of our dear Savior. It was a scene upon which we shall love to reflect. We parted, firmly resolved, by the help of the Lord, to meet again in the coming kingdom. The preaching of the destruction of the wicked was made very effective in reaching several who were very far from the Lord,—who had been driven away from every thing good, because they could not believe in, nor love a God who would torment men eternally; exerting, as Mr. Benson says, "all his divine attributes" to make them as wretched as the capacity of their nature will admit." When the people saw the truth as laid down in the Bible, they felt, and could truly say, "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance."

The church in Danielsonville have concluded to erect a chapel, and hope to have it ready for dedication about the first of April. May the Lord bless and prosper them.

Remember,

We cannot publish the Crisis without funds. Several have paid nothing for the volume now nearly closed, and quite a number have not paid any thing for the last year. Questions.

FROM BRO. J. D. BROWN.

1. "If the first clause of 2 Cor. 6: 14 refers to marrying unbelievers, does not the last clause of ver. 14, including the 15th and 16th verses, give reasons why such marriages should not take place?"

Ans.—We think so.

2. Does not the 17th verse require those so married to come out from those unbelievers, and be separate, in order that the Lord may receive them and be their Father?"

Ans.—This passage cannot refer to persons after marriage, for Paul says in 1 Cor. 7: 12–13,—

"If my brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him."

We have understood that this scripture was applicable to *un*married christians, and all other connections with the world. If this does not apply as we have intimated, then of course it must refer exclusively to church relations.

For the Crisis.

"Information Wanted."

The pursuit of knowledge is ever attended with difficulties, while the acquisition and propagation of error is a matter of comparative ease. Misapprehensions are common, and misrepresentations frequent. Few can be sufficiently impartial to state correctly any views which they do not endorse, and many are unwilling to present their true position with satisfactory definitions.

In the humble capacity of "A Learner," for which position my age and ignorance have most eminently qualified me, I requested through the Crisis an exact statement of the opinion held by a certain "portion of Adventists" concerning the location and condition of persons who are dead. As, for instance, whether the righteous go up to heaven or down to sheol? whether they are in the New Jerusalem above, or in some Paradise beneath? whether there is any work, device, or knowledge in sheol where they go? &c., &c.

And as there was a Bro. who had "taken a critical review of the whole subject," I should have been happy to have been instructed by him or some one else on the point. I did not request a lengthy statement of the arguments on the points in question, these on the various sides are within my reach, but the view itself; WHAT IS IT?

In reply I am informed that if the lucubrations of a certain Congregational brother backed by the criticisms of one of the best scholars now living (Prof. Whiting) are futile, then our Bro. who has "taken a critical view of the whole subject" would not presume for a moment that he is capable of imparting any "information to "a learner" on any doctrine taught in the Scriptures.

Now really I am disappointed. I think a great deal of Prof. W——; but I am not at all aware that our Congregational brother's position is "backed" by his criticisms. I have seen but two recent criticisms from him on the subject, the first one proving conclusively, (what I wondered that any one would ever doubt, namely,) that the righteous were not the ones who were to dwell in devouring fire and in everlasting burnings. Isa. 33: 13–16.— And the second, showing clearly, what no one disputed, that a great many uninspired men punctuated and translated Luke 23: 43, in accordance with the popular opinion, that Christ and the thief went to Paradise that day that they were crucified,—but failing, however, if I mistake not, to notice the undeniable facts that the Greek Testament was written without any punctuation, and remained so for centuries; that there is no proof of the existence of any regular and complete system of New Testament interpunction, before tenth, or at the earliest the ninth century, when the church was full of purgatorial fooleries;—that nearly or quite every edition of the Greek Testament has variations of punctuation, intentional or unintentional;—that almost all critical commentators alter the punctuation if they can thereby improve the sense of a passage;—and that Griesbach, in his critical Greek Testament based on numerous manuscripts, indicates that there were in them varieties of puctuation on this very passage; some copies placing the point after the word "to-day," and others placing it before it. Had the learned Professor been called on for evidence of this kind, he could no doubt have given it.

But these two criticisms have little or nothing to do with the points in question, Where are the dead in the opinion of certain "Adventists?" Now if I am correctly informed, Prof. W. and our Congregational brother DID NOT AGREE on this question a while ago. Prof. W. then, I am informed, believed that men when they died went to heaven—they were with Christ, &c. But our Congregational brother believed them to be in sheol or hades, which according to all scripture, tradition and all other evidence is a subterraneous locality. This very question, "In which place are the dead?" was, I believe, propounded once by a Bro. M—— in the presence of our Congregational Bro. and the learned Professor, and their opinions were found to be at least as far asunder as heaven is from hell, (hades).

Now as I have no evidence that they agree, save in the fact of human consciousness in death: as our Congregational brother gives up nothing pertaining to the matter, and as the learned Prof. is not a man to be "carried about by every wind of doctrine," I do not see how they can both agree concerning the condition of the dead. So our Bro. should not be disheartened; even if his efforts are "futile;" "a critical review of the subject" might enable one to state definitely the position held by certain Adventists, and this is the "Information wanted,"—and an inaccurate statement of this matter in the columns of the Crisis is what our brother seems to fear and object to.

I only wish to have the point made plain. Is it that when men die they go to be with Christ? Is it that when children are offered to idols they go up to heaven and turn not merely to angels but to CHERUBS? Is it that dead men's ghosts are "made perfect" in "the heavenly Jerusalem" with the angels, and Christ, and God? Or is it that they are in sheol, or hades, within speaking distance of the torment of the damned? Is it that Christ went and held a protracted meeting "in prison with the antedeluvians' spirits when he was dead? or how is it? What is the "golden mean?" Can it be that one extreme is death—is an eternal sleep;—the other extreme is death—is no sleep at all, while the golden mean teaches that the saints "sleep in Jesus" till God raises them from the dead? Is this the golden mean? I wait for information.

Who will instruct me? I am yet a learner, and hope to "find wisdom sometime." May the Lord direct me.

As I would "come behind" my dear Bro. P. "in no good thing," I would express first, my unfeigned love and fellowship for him personally, and also my satisfaction at his courteous and christian bearing, superior I fear to any thing which my uncouth, careless nature will attain to. Second, I would express my fellowship for all sincere followers of Christ, "whatever their denominational name," and third, my especial fellowship for those without any "denominational name" who follow the Lord and have no creed but the Bible, no leader but Christ, and no name but Christian. I pray that we may be kept in the love of God and in the unity of the Spirit,—and that we may seek to know the truth; concerning which I am still A LEARNER.

For the Crisis.

Paul's Salary.

O yes, forsooth; you might as well say at once, that you want a man to preach for your especial benefit, for nothing, and find himself. Is this reasonable? And could you go ten rods to hear him without being hired? Away with such a spirit! But I fear it will not go out "but by prayer and fasting." Poor ministers of Christ! what will become of their families? Poor, did I say? Yes, poor, they ought to be poor; for their Master had not where to lay his head, and why should they? But there, they have most of them families, for which they must provide, or "deny the faith" and be "worse than the infidel." And can they do it and preach the gospel for nothing? The gospel must be preached, and all those whom God has endowed with suitable gifts and grace, and called to his work, must do it. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

This is the commission; and every one whom God has qualified has got to do it. He feels, as Paul, that a necessity is laid upon him! yea, a woe to himself "if he preach not the gospel." Why? Because "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe." But how can they leave their families to suffer this cold winter, unless something is done to sustain them? It will not do for the ministers to go into their shops and labor there to support their families; and let sinners perish for lack of the knowledge of the gospel. No, no; we must all do according as God has prospered us; must give according to what we have, and not according to what we have not.

But let us inquire, what was Paul's salary? Why, he had "no certain dwelling place;" "without were fightings, within were fears." Was this all? No; besides, he had the care of all the churches upon him; and no wonder he exclaimed, "Who is sufficient for all these things?" Truly, if ever one, (beside his Master,) got labor in abundance for his pains, it was Paul. But he had no family to call his attention from the work; and certainly if this had been the case they must have suffered, or he must leave and take care of them.

Now, Brn. and Sts., bearers of the cross of Christ, you do not, I know you cannot, want a man to labor for you for naught, because such a disposition is not to be found in a minister of Christ. Paul says, "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them to do you service." And do you want your minister to do so, too? The man or woman who can do this, and withhold that which is as much due to the preacher, as your wages would be to you should you work for another man, is selfish and mean; i. e., if he have ability and cannot enjoy any more religion than he lives out.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire." It is written, "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes no doubt this is written; that he that ploweth should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope." How appropriate was his language when he said,—"If we have sown unto spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things . . . Do ye not know that they which minister

Carrie, take those yearnings for the peace of God,—those hungerings and thirstings after righteousness as a certain sign that God has not forgotten you nor forsaken you.

"Return, O wanderer, return,
And seek an injured Father's face,
Those warm desires that in thee burn,
Where kindled by reclaiming grace."

God loves you. Can you believe it? Can you doubt it, since he gave his Son to die for you? He loves you, not because you are good, but because he is good. You may be a wayward child, but his heart years over you. Now, Carrie, love him. O let your heart rise up in thankfulness to him for the love already bestowed, and then you shall no more of its heights and depths,—its lengths and breadths!

"But I am a sinner." Well, Christ is a Savior. "But I am a great sinner." True, and Christ is a great Savior. O Carrie, though you may have grieved the Savior's heart, he still remains your friend. Remember, in seeking Christ you do not come to seek an enemy, but a dear and loving friend.

Remember that starving son, who, weary and ragged, dragged himself homeward. While he was yet a great way off, (just where you are,) his father met him and kissed him, and clothed him and honored him, and said, "My son was dead and is alive—was lost and is found." Carrie, turn your face homeward, and there shall be joy in heaven over your return. Angels wait to minister to you as salvation's heir. God bless you, I pray.

Please read Rom. 10: 1–10, to learn duty; confess with your mouth the Lord Jesus; and believe in your heart God hath raised him from the dead and you shall be saved. Are you ready to stand out before the world and witness this "good confession?" Can you brave earth's scorn? Will you be a soldier? Will you fight the good fight of faith? Know then, Carrie, there are those even in R—— who yearn for the salvation and deliverance of such as thee,—those who would "strengthen the things that remain that are ready to die."

Shall we fight together the battles of the Lord? Shall we meet here, or shall we meet on Mount Zion? I hope to see you there. God bless you forever and ever. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." O trust wholly in him! Give up your heart to be controlled by his love.

If you come on a Friday evening to Union St., and follow the east side of it till you reach the last house north of Monroe St., you will find a few christians who meet by divine permission to pray for such as you, whether known, or unknown to them. They have prayed much for God's blessing on this city: there is a vacant chair there for you, and others for your friends, and hearts and hands open to receive you. If you can call at any time, do so and inquire for HATTIE.

The Contrast.

Behold yonder white-robed, palm-bearing multitude before the throne of God! "What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?"

"These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." These are they who once were strangers on the earth, seeking refuge in dens and caves, having no certain dwelling place. Now, the renewed earth, glowing in the beauty of Eden, shall be their everlasting home.

Once they were despised and set at nought by the world; counted as the offscouring and refuse of all things. Now, the Lord of glory honors them, calls them his jewels, his special treasure, his chosen people.

Once they were destitute of worldly possessions; like their Master having no place to lay their head; wandering in poverty, suffering with hunger and thirst ofttimes. Now, they shall inherit all things; never again shall they hunger or thirst; they shall pluck fruit from the boughs of the undying Tree; they shall quaff the crystal waters of the river of life.

Once their names were cast out as evil among men; they were denied the companionship of the proud children of earth. Now, they associate with the holy of all ages; the angel hosts disdain not to share their society; the King of kings, the mighty Sovereign of heaven and earth, comes forth to meet them; bids them welcome to the home his love has provided; wipes all their tears away; confesses them his friends before his celestial retinue; makes them to share in his glory, and sit on his throne.

In the glowing language of the Hebrew Seer, they receive "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." A crown of surpassing radiance encircles each brow; immortality is stamped on every feature; every voice unites in the triumphant song—"Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

How the music of earth grates on the ear, when by faith we catch the strains of that immortal choir! How the glory of this world sinks into nothingness, when the vision rests for a moment on the refulgent glories of the everlasting kingdom.

Oh for a home in that happy land—an association with that blood-washed throng! Let me have the cross, the suffering, the reproach; but let me have the crown, the triumph, the eternal weight of glory!

I would be numbered with the pilgrims here,
Their suffering and their trials I would share;
Then with them I would stand with beaming brow,
When He, the Mighty One, the heavens shall bow.

Beyond that scene, beyond earth's gloomy night,
I would among them dwell, in cloudless light;
I would King Jesus in his glory see,
And worship at his throne, who died for me. MARIA.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 10, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER TWELVE.

Having examined, again and again, every passage in the Bible that speaks of the spirit, soul, man, die, death, and dead, we cannot find a single verse that teaches the doctrine that man lives in a conscious state between death and the resurrection. We must firmly believe with Paul, that all that have died have "perished," unless there is a resurrection of the dead. Our only hope of a future existence, if we die, depends upon our being born again from the grave.

In answer to the question at the head of our articles on this subject, we remark, a living man is an organized being, made "of the dust of the ground," having "the breath of life" in his nostrils, which breath is common to all living creatures; without which no one of them can live. At death, this "breath of life" departs from them, but is not, never was, nor will be, the conscious part, but only that which sets the machinery in motion. This breath is the same in the philosopher and the idiot; the human and the animal race; the infant and the old man; but when it leaves, "they die and return to their dust."

This is very properly called the spirit, or "breath of life." No soul can live without it. The human and animal machinery stops as certainly when the breath of life is removed from the nostrils, as the engine does, when the steam ceases to act upon the piston. When this "breath of life" is removed, we stop thinking, or as David expresses it, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. The word here rendered breath is the same in the original as the one rendered spirit in Eccl. 12: 7. "Then shall the dust (the man) return to the dust as it was, and the spirit (or breath,) shall return unto God who gave it." The word ruakh, here rendered spirit, is found four hundred and three times in the Old Testament; and the corresponding Greek word, pneuma, is found in the New Testament three hundred and eighty-six times, but is not once rendered soul in either the Old or New Testament; hence we can no longer say that, when "the spirit returns to God, the soul, or man has gone." If this spirit, or breath of life is the man, the accountable being, then we ask, what is meant by the word soul? Is that the man too? But the Lord calls that man which he formed of the dust of the ground; and also calls him, after he received "the breath of life," a living soul, being, animal, or man, but never, an immortal soul. He calls every living creature, "a living soul." The wise man declares, that all men and animals are made "of the dust, and all turn to dust again;" and he also says, "as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath," (ruakh.) This is in complete harmony with the account of the creation.—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground;" "and out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air." Gen. 2: 7. 19. The question may be asked, "If man and the beasts were all made "of dust," and all have the same "breath of life," and all die alike, wherein then, consists the difference between them?" This question, we purpose to answer in our next.

It appears clear that the difference is not in "the breath of life" which returns to God at death; for if this breath is the man, and the good go to heaven, then all go there, not only good and bad men, but the beasts also; for "all go unto one place." But if the animals go to the grave, and return to dust, then men go to the same place; which is what the wise man declares; and he tells us positively that there is "no knowledge" where they go. We have yet to learn from the Bible, physiology, philosophy, facts, or common sense, that a dead man, or any part of him is conscious between death and the resurrection.

Man is either mortal or immortal; i. e., he must either die, or live forever. If man dies, he is not immortal. Mr. Webster defines immortal,—"Having no principle of alteration or corruption; exempt from death; having life or being that shall never end." Let us turn to the Bible and see if this definition is applicable to man. In Job 4: 17, we read, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" This passage shows that in Job's time man was thought to be mortal. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." Gen. 5: 5. Who died in this case? Was it the house, or body, Adam lived in, or the man himself—the thinking, rational, accountable being? It must have been the guilty one, and can any one suppose for a moment that the Lord punished the house or prison with death, and let the prisoner go free, having more liberty than he ever before enjoyed? If Adam died as the Scriptures declare, then Satan is proved a liar; but if Adam was immortal, as many believe, then the truth is on the side of Satan, for he declared in opposition to the Lord, that man should not die; or in other words, that he was immortal; but we think the subsequent history of man proves the truth of the Scripture, which declares, "he is a liar, and the father of it." As Adam was mortal, it follows as a sequence that all his children were mortal, for no fountain can rise above its source. If we can prove that one man is mortal the whole argument is gained, for we are all alike in this attribute. Says the Lord to Moses in Exodus 4: 19, "Go return into Egypt; for all the men are dead which sought thy life." Would the Lord have said this if they had been alive? If so, we cannot depend upon what he says. Again, the Lord says to Joshua, "Moses my servant is dead." Joshua 1: 2. Is it possible the Lord would say Moses was dead, when he was alive in heaven, or any other place? Why did Moses die? Because of his trespass at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh. Then on account of his trespass he went to glory before Joshua! Does this look consistent? Those who claim man does not go to his full reward at death, hold that the good are much better off in the intermediate state than when here on the earth; hence Moses was quite a gainer on account of his trespass. If Joshua had only trespassed at the same time, he might have gone to Paradise with Moses, but for his obedience he had to stay longer and pass through many trials escaped by Moses! It is hard for us to believe such theology.

Again, in John 11: 14, we read, "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." We believe our Savior told the truth, and if he did, Lazarus was not alive when our Lord made that declaration.

We have now the testimony of our Creator and his Son that man is mortal, and is not this sufficient?

Ans.—This passage cannot refer to persons after marriage, for Paul says in 1 Cor. 7: 12–13,—

"If my brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him."

We have understood that this scripture was applicable to *un*married christians, and all other connections with the world. If this does not apply as we have intimated, then of course it must refer exclusively to church relations.

For the Crisis.

"Information Wanted."

The pursuit of knowledge is ever attended with difficulties, while the acquisition and propagation of error is a matter of comparative ease. Misapprehensions are common, and misrepresentations frequent. Few can be sufficiently impartial to state correctly any views which they do not endorse, and many are unwilling to present their true position with satisfactory definitions.

In the humble capacity of "A Learner," for which position my age and ignorance have most eminently qualified me, I requested through the Crisis an exact statement of the opinion held by a certain "portion of Adventists" concerning the location and condition of persons who are dead. As, for instance, whether the righteous go up to heaven or down to sheol? whether they are in the New Jerusalem above, or in some Paradise beneath? whether there is any work, device, or knowledge in sheol where they go? &c., &c.

And as there was a Bro. who had "taken a critical review of the whole subject," I should have been happy to have been instructed by him or some one else on the point. I did not request a lengthy statement of the arguments on the points in question, these on the various sides are within my reach, but the view itself; WHAT IS IT?

In reply I am informed that if the lucubrations of a certain Congregational brother backed by the criticisms of one of the best scholars now living (Prof. Whiting) are futile, then our Bro. who has "taken a critical view of the whole subject" would not presume for a moment that he is capable of imparting any "information to "a learner" on any doctrine taught in the Scriptures.

Now really I am disappointed. I think a great deal of Prof. W——; but I am not at all aware that our Congregational brother's position is "backed" by his criticisms. I have seen but two recent criticisms from him on the subject, the first one proving conclusively, (what I wondered that any one would ever doubt, namely,) that the righteous were not the ones who were to dwell in devouring fire and in everlasting burnings. Isa. 33: 13–16.—And the second, showing clearly, what no one disputed, that a great many uninspired men punctuated and translated Luke 23: 43, in accordance with the popular opinion, that Christ and the thief went to Paradise that day that they were crucified,—but failing, however, if I mistake not, to notice the undeniable facts that the Greek Testament was written without any punctuation, and remained so for centuries; that there is no proof of the existence of any regular and complete system of New Testament interpunction, before tenth, or at the earliest the ninth century, when the church was full of purgatorial fooleries;—that nearly or quite every edition of the Greek Testament has variations of punctuation, intentional or unintentional;—that almost all critical commentators alter the punctuation if they can thereby improve the sense of a passage;—and that Griesbach, in his critical Greek Testament based on numerous manuscripts, indicates that there were in them varieties of puctuation on this very passage; some copies placing the point after the word "to-day," and others placing it before it. Had the learned Professor been called on for evidence of this kind, he could no doubt have given it.

But these two criticisms have little or nothing to do with the points in question, Where are the dead in the opinion of certain "Adventists?" Now if I am correctly informed, Prof. W. and our Congregational brother DID NOT AGREE on this question a while ago. Prof. W. then, I am informed, believed that men when they died went to heaven—they were with Christ, &c. But our Congregational brother believed them to be in sheol or hades, which according to all scripture, tradition and all other evidence is a subterraneous locality. This very question, "In which place are the dead?" was, I believe, propounded once by a Bro. M—— in the presence of our Congregational Bro. and the learned Professor, and their opinions were found to be at least as far asunder as heaven is from hell, (hades).

Now as I have no evidence that they agree, save in the fact of human consciousness in death: as our Congregational brother gives up nothing pertaining to the matter, and as the learned Prof. is not a man to be "carried about by every wind of doctrine," I do not see how they can both agree concerning the condition of the dead. So our Bro. should not be disheartened; even if his efforts are "futile;" "a critical review of the subject" might enable one to state definitely the position held by certain Adventists, and this is the "Information wanted,"—and an inaccurate statement of this matter in the columns of the Crisis is what our brother seems to fear and object to.

I only wish to have the point made plain. Is it that when men die they go to be with Christ? Is it that when children are offered to idols they go up to heaven and turn not merely to angels but to CHERUBS? Is it that dead men's ghosts are "made perfect" in "the heavenly Jerusalem" with the angels, and Christ, and God? Or is it that they are in sheol, or hades, within speaking distance of the torment of the damned? Is it that Christ went and held a protracted meeting "in prison with the antediluvians' spirits when he was dead? or how is it? What is the "golden mean?" Can it be that one extreme is death—is an eternal sleep;—the other extreme is death—is no sleep at all, while the golden mean teaches that the saints "sleep in Jesus" till God raises them from the dead? Is this the golden mean? I wait for information.

Who will instruct me? I am yet a learner, and hope to "find wisdom sometime." May the Lord direct me.

As I would "come behind" my dear Bro. P. "in no good thing," I would express first, my unfeigned love and fellowship for him personally, and also my satisfaction at his courteous and christian bearing, superior I fear to any thing which my uncouth, careless nature will attain to. Second, I would express my fellowship for all sincere followers of Christ, "whatever their denominational name," and third, my especial fellowship for those without any "denominational name" who follow the Lord and have no creed but the Bible, no leader but Christ, and no name but Christian. I pray that we may be kept in the love of God and in the unity of the Spirit,—and that we may seek to know the truth; concerning which I am still A LEARNER.

Paul's Salary.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Did you ever hear of Paul's salary? Yes. Well, so have I; and with it such hints as the following: "We want a man to preach for us, that is not a man of the world, nor its fashions, nor mammon: but one who loves the truth and will be content with the salary that Paul had.'

O yes, forsooth; you might as well say at once, that you want a man to preach for your especial benefit, for nothing, and find himself. Is this reasonable? And could you go ten rods to hear him without being hired? Away with such a spirit! But I fear it will not go out "but by prayer and fasting." Poor ministers of Christ! what will become of their families? Poor, did I say? Yes, poor, they ought to be poor; for their Master had not where to lay his head, and why should they? But there, they have most of them families, for which they must provide, or "deny the faith" and be "worse than the infidel." And can they do it and preach the gospel for nothing? The gospel must be preached, and all those whom God has endowed with suitable gifts and grace, and called to his work, must do it. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

This is the commission; and every one whom God has qualified has got to do it. He feels, as Paul, that a necessity is laid upon him! yea, a woe to himself "if he preach not the gospel." Why? Because "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe." But how can they leave their families to suffer this cold winter, unless something is done to sustain them? It will not do for the ministers to go into their shops and labor there to support their families; and let sinners perish for lack of the knowledge of the gospel. No, no; we must all do according as God has prospered us; must give according to what we have, and not according to what we have not.

But let us inquire, what was Paul's salary? Why, he had "no certain dwelling place;" "without were fightings, within were fears." Was this all? No; besides, he had the care of all the churches upon him; and no wonder he exclaimed, "Who is sufficient for all these things?" Truly, if ever one, (beside his Master,) got labor in abundance for his pains, it was Paul. But he had no family to call his attention from the work; and certainly if this had been the case they must have suffered, or he must leave and take care of them.

Now, Brn. and Srs., bearers of the cross of Christ, you do not, I know you cannot, want a man to labor for you for naught, because such a disposition is not to be found in a minister of Christ. Paul says, "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them to do you service." And do you want your minister to do so, too? The man or woman who can do this, and withhold that which is as much due to the preacher, as your wages would be to you should you work for another man, is selfish and mean; i. e, if he have ability and cannot enjoy any more religion than he lives out.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire." It is written, "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes no doubt this is written; that he that ploweth should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope." How appropriate was his language when he said,—"If we have sown unto spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things . . . ! Do ye not know that they which minister unto holy things, live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." O, how can you ask God to send forth more laborers into his vineyard, while those already in the field are so poorly sustained? "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth;" and "there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty."

I know some who do much to sustain the cause of Christ; but they would be very unwilling to have their names made public; for their motto is, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth;" for they seek not the praise of men. I have been led to make these remarks from having been made acquainted with the family of a minister, who has been in the field many years, whose health is not very good, his wife's still worse; and they have not been sustained as they should be.

[To be Concluded.]

For the Crisis.

My Reasons for not Voting.

1. I am for King Jesus. "We cannot serve two masters."

2. The world is growing worse and worse, instead of better.

3. The Lord's kingdom is not of this world; hence, his subjects should not fight, (even politically).

4. Furthermore, the Lord commands his followers to come out from the world; (that is, as I understand, the spirit and practice of the world).

5. The whole political mass is at length to be carried away, like the chaff of the summer's threshing floor.

6. Our Lord and Master was not a politician. He never attended a political caucus!

7. Neither did the apostles of our Lord ever engage in politics.

8. Jesus Christ came to set us (his disciples) an example, that we should follow his steps.

9. Find a meek, devoted christian, who loves the praise of God, and not that of men, (for "the friendship of this world is at enmity with God,") whom God appoints to office, and then I can conscientiously vote for him.

QUESTION.

If we do just as the world do, what difference is there? Have we "come out from the world?"

N. B. If I am in an error in this thing, will some one instructed by the Spirit of God point it out?

Watch.

"Watch ye, therefore, for ye know neither the day, nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

The above admonishing text of Scripture is addressed more particularly, I think, to the generation that has seen or passed the signs of Christ's second coming and is to be living at the time of the advent, than to any other. And I believe the present generation has seen or passed them all. If so, then this is the generation that is not to pass till he comes. For he says, Matt. 24: 33-34, "When ye shall see all these things, (i. e. signs of my coming) know that it (or my coming) is near even at the doors. Verily I say unto you this generation shall not pass, till all these things (i. e. my coming) be fulfilled."

Here then is evidence that he will come before this present generation passes away! This is the one that is repeatedly admonished to watch! He is coming while this generation remains! Before it passes away! But we do not know what day, or what hour in this generation he will come. Therefore, we are admonished to watch! We do not know whether he will come at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. "Watch therefore, lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping!"

O let us heed the admonition of our Lord, and watch! We do not know how soon he will come; let us have on our beautiful garments continually, and be found watching. It is no time to indulge in drowsiness or sleep. Wake up! and keep awake! The Master is coming! Are you ready? Is your lamp trimmed and burning? Are you like unto men that wait for their Lord? If he should knock this moment, could you open unto him immediately? Remember it is those that are ready that will go in with him to the marriage, and then the door will be forever shut!! Your Bro. watching,

E. R. Converse.

EXPERIENCE.

I am weary, I am poor,
Hope so cheery bids "endure."
I am lonely, I am sad;
Eden only can me glad.

Billows surging o'er me roll,
Onward urging all my soul.
Now careering I am tost,
Till I'm fearing I am lost.

Now I'm groping in the way;
Now I'm hoping for the day;
Now I'm grieving o'er my doubt;
Now believing casts it out.

Mow I'm weeping for a time,
Yet am keeping hopes sublime;
Now I'm dwelling in the light,
And am telling my delight.

Now I'm longing for that home;
Visions thronging o'er me come;
Sounds are ringing in my ear,
Glory bringing, even here.

And I'm telling of those grand
Radiant dwellings of that land:
And I'm saying, "I'll be there,"
Yet am straying everywhere.

Oh for power to withstand,
Every hour, Satan's hand!
Grant me, Savior, holy light,
Guiding ever me aright.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. B. Waite.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say a few words to the flock of God scattered abroad. It will no doubt be good news to those who love the appearing of Christ, to hear there is a goodly number in this place getting ready for the Nobleman's return.

God is doing a greater work on Warwick Plains than has ever been witnessed there before. Eight weeks ago the Plains church went to work for him in earnest, and their labors have been wonderfully blessed. Bro. Champlin has preached all most every evening, and he is still like a giant filled with new wine. More than two hundred different persons have taken the anxious seat.

The greater part of these persons are rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. The devil is literally mad, for his craft is in danger and many of his subjects have quit his service. He is so enraged that the church has been obliged to hand over to Cæsar about twenty of his subjects.

Many hard sinners have been taken from the rum shop and other places of vice, and have been hopefully converted to God.

The motive that has been set before them to induce them to repent, is the kingdom of God at hand, and immortality and eternal life to be obtained at the resurrection of the just, and nowhere else. About fifty have been added to the church, and some have joined other churches, and a great many have joined nowhere as yet. The whole community seems to be stirred, and the work is still going on. Some are praying for the work to stop, but we are praying for it to go on, and we believe God is hearing our prayers.

Yours, praying for the kingdom to come,

J. B. Waite.

Warwick, Feb. 1, 1858.

From Bro. C. H. Sawin.

Bro. Grant:—I feel happy to state to you and all the blest children of God, that I take pleasure in reading the columns of the Crisis. My wife has received a copy of the paper free for about a year. Her sense of sight has been so much obliterated for the last twelve years she has not been able to read a word; but we are expecting it will be restored soon, when the Lord comes. The glories of the coming kingdom are too much for the tongue to express. We feel ourselves too poor to sustain the Crisis at present, and would rather some other one would have it that is more worthy than we. But if it is in the order of God's providence for us to have it, we would like it continued.

I am rejoiced to see the efforts that are put forth in various ways for the general good of mankind. Evil will exist as long as the world exists; the end of the world is the end of all earthly powers. Then Christ takes the kingdom and bears universal sway over empires. Then Satan's kingdom comes to its final end. Then the wicked will be severed from among the just; and the righteous inherit the kingdom. Hail happy day! Then comes virtue's prize.

"That nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,
The soul's calm sunshine and the heart-felt joy."

We are approaching the world's last grand crisis as fast as the wings of time will carry us. The great desire of our Father in heaven is the happiness of his creatures. For this purpose Christ, the Son of God, suffered and died. Our talents are given to us to improve. Every thing tends to progression. Our one talent or five talents may be improved so as to give more. "All things shall work together for good to those who love God."

"All discord, harmony not understood,
All partial evil is universal good."

It is good for us to be chastened of the Lord—"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." All those who have accounted themselves worthy before God, have needed the chastening of Christ. It is for our good to know that we lack something—"Men would be angels; angels would be gods." When we are made equal to the angels the work of grace is done. We have no more sin to conquer.

To love God with all our powers is the highest order of worship. To love our neighbor as ourselves is a command which our Savior alludes to for our observance if we would be perfect. Fellow pilgrims and travelers, I would exhort you one and all to be faithful in the pure and undefiled religion which the good apostle James alludes to in his first chapter, 27th verse. I love the promise of Christ's appearing.

The joyful day seems to be near. Brethren and sisters in Christ, may we have an inheritance in the kingdom of our blessed Redeemer, is the prayer of one looking for King Jesus.

C. H. Sawin.

Worcester, Mass.

From Eld. Ira Morgan.

Dear Bro. Grant:—Believing it will cheer the hearts of our brethren to hear of the good work now progressing in Cheshire, I will give you a brief sketch of the work of God in that place.

Bro. D. T. Taylor came from Worcester, Dec. 19th. Our meeting commenced that evening. The next night there were twenty-two forward for prayers,—some converted. Bro. Munger was present over Sunday and rendered efficient aid. The meetings continued to increase in interest until the whole community seemed moved by the Spirit's influence and the power of God.

Our brethren and sisters were all united, and had long been praying for a revival. Brethren came from other places and assisted in the good work. We were favored with calls from three Congregational and one Methodist minister; not as spies, but to proffer their pious counsel to the people and stay up the hands of Bro. Taylor, who labored day and night with tears. The result was, many gave their hearts to the Lord in an everlasting covenant.

Before Bro. Taylor left, fifteen followed their Lord down into the water, and were baptized. More are now waiting an opportunity. There has been but little noise in our meetings, but the Spirit has moved like a deep river carrying all before it. All classes have shared alike in this good work. Truly God is no respecter of persons; for he has converted the richest and poorest, the highest and lowest, and made us all one in Christ Jesus.

About thirty-five have been reclaimed, or converted, and the good work is still progressing. Fourteen were forward to the anxious seat a few evenings since; but more anon.

Your Bro. rejoicing in this good harvest time,

Ira Morgan.

Tobacco.

No. XII.

We know of no excuse for the use of tobacco, that may not be given for the use of intoxicating liquors. It is evident but few of its votaries are aware of its deleterious effects, until they quit it forever, and their systems recover their natural state; then, they can see and feel that they have been playing with a viper, that was eating out their vitals, physically and spiritually. The testimonies we have recently received from those who have abandoned its use, amply reward us for all our efforts in trying to persuade our readers to let the poisonous thing alone, before their constitutions are ruined.

Says Dr. Nott, President of Union College,—

"I have had some experience myself of its ill effects, having suffered from it more than thirty years. I was, while a boy, induced to adopt the use of this vile narcotic, because it was considered manly to do so. Immediate and distressing sickness was the consequence of my first attempt. Custom gradually diminished this unpleasant effect, and the use ultimately became habitual and pleasurable. But I was thereafter occasionally visited with nausea, faintness, heart-burn, and a feeling of lassitude, especially in the morning, which continued until I could obtain the supposed restorative from my tobacco box. Years passed on before I became convinced that the ills I suffered were, to a great extent, owing to tobacco. But I did become so convinced, and resolutely determined to discontinue its use. This caused me no inconsiderable suffering for a time, but this suffering gradually disappeared, and with its disappearance my previous ailments also disappeared. . . .

Such has been my own experience; and I may add that, since being connected with Union College, I have observed the deleterious effects of tobacco on others, especially on the youth intrusted to my care. The lives of some, and the health of many, have been destroyed by persisting, in despite of counsels, in the use of this poisonous narcotic, which, next to intoxicating liquors, is, in my opinion, more destructive to the health of the youth in our country, than any other agent."

Testimony of L. N. Fowler. "Having traveled extensively through all parts of the country for a number of years, I have come in contact with every variety of society and diversity of circumstances, and have observed the peculiar effect of different habits on the minds of persons who have indulged in them; and also what classes of persons are the most addicted to various kinds of habits. I find that the most wicked and abandoned individuals in the community use tobacco; that boys and young men who are becoming more and more depraved—that low, dissolute, profane men, idlers engaged in amusements alone, night-walkers, theatre-goers, gamblers, and licentious persons, are almost invariably chewers and smokers.

Believing as I do, that tobacco produces a disastrous effect on the digestive powers and nervous system, tending to weaken the one and derange the other; that the blood is rendered thereby impure and disturbed in circulation; that the secretions become irregular, and shamefully wasted, by constant loss of saliva from the mouth; I have taken particular pains to inquire of those who use tobacco the individual effect that it produces. The almost universal reply is, that it not only does them no good, but a positive injury. . . .

In attempting to induce persons to reform from its use, I find that it is vastly more difficult for them to do so, than to give up the use of ardent spirits. Many have delirium tremens from the use of tobacco; the minds of others are so much unbalanced, that they become entirely unfit for business, till they have smoked three or four cigars. An editor once told me that he was utterly unable to hold his pen steady, or to think out his editorials, until he had smoked several cigars, and the more he smoked, the more was his habit confirmed. Many ministers used to be in the same predicament in writing their sermons.

Nervous women who use it are very apt to scold. [And men too, we presume.—Ed.] Tobacco benumbs the affections and moral feelings, and renders love a mere passion. I knew a man who married a fine woman. At first he was very affectionate, his moral feelings were active, and for a time he studied for the ministry; but imbibing the habits of chewing and smoking, he became less pious, and less affectionate to his wife, and by the time that he smoked thirty cigars per day, he could swear like a pirate, and abuse his wife shamefully. Not being able to endure his treatment any longer, she commenced drinking to drown her trouble, and soon put an end to her life."

Do our readers still think tobacco is used for the glory of God?

A Valuable Work.

Mr. Hunt, the proprietor of the Boston Water Cure, where we have been boarding for the last six months, has issued a valuable little work of thirty-one pages; entitled, "Good bread. How to make it light without yeast or powders.—Receipts for plain cooking.—Hints on Health." Price 10 cts., postage paid.—Address William Hunt, 20 La Grange Place, Boston, Mass.

We recommend this work, because we know from happy experience that it gives directions how to make the best bread we ever tasted. We refer particularly to the "Unbolted Wheat Bread." We wish every one of our readers to enjoy the benefits received from eating this bread. It is especially valuable to dyspeptics, and those troubled with piles or costiveness. We purpose to give extracts from the work soon. Although the book costs but 10 cts., it is well worth a dollar to any housekeeper. [The book can also be had at our office.

Foreign News.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, Feb. 7.

The royal mail steamship Arabia, from Liverpool 23d ult., arrived at this port about 8 o'clock this evening.

INDIA.

The mail from Bombay, telegraphic anticipations of which were brought out by the Canada, conveys little more than a confirmation of previous advices. It was generally argued by the English papers that the suppression of the rebellion in Oude would entail a serious amount of trouble, and require a continual stream of reinforcements.

CHINA.

Passengers from Hong Kong report that the Russian admiral had come from the North and offered his services as mediator between England and China, which offer was declined, but a similar one from the American commissioner was accepted.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says: "It is asserted that the British and French governments have decided that in case the capture of Canton shall not induce the Emperor to accept the terms offered to him, the allied troops are to march to Pekin, and in that case the Emperor of the French will supply additional troops.

FRANCE.

The attempted assassination of the Emperor had been the all-engrossing topic of the week. On the day following the event, addresses were made to the Emperor by the Representatives of the Corps Diplomatique, of the Senate, the Legislative body, the Council of State, &c, congratulating him and the Empress upon their escape. Some of the officials in their addresses hinted that the English Government should be called upon to expel those refugees who abused her hospitality by organizing in their retreat plans of destruction, and perfecting their conspiracies.

The Emperor, in reply to the great bodies of the State, expressed his firm confidence and reliance in their support and devotion. He added that at the same time he was resolved to adopt such measures as might be deemed advisable, but he should not depart from that path of firmness and moderation which he had hitherto followed.

The French journals had joined in the cry for the expulsion of the conspirators from Europe; and the Paris correspondent of the Times says it was positively stated that a communication had been made by the French minister in London to the English government, demanding the expulsion from England of five political refugees—one or two Italians and the rest French.

The adoption of stringent measures in regard to the Italians resident in Paris was contemplated.

A secret society had been discovered in Paris, and gunpowder and arms had been seized.

It is stated that Rudio, the youngest of the Italian prisoners, had revealed every thing connected with the plot to assassinate the Emperor. The trial will take place about the 10th of February.

SPAIN.

The Espana, a semi-official authority, says that Spain has definitely resolved to take part in the projected expedition against Cochin China, and that she will employ in it 1400 infantry, and a battery of artillery from the garrison of the Phillipine Islands.

ITALY.

Accounts had reached Paris of the landing of two hundred Mazinians at Ancona, and of their attempt to surprise the Austrian garrison. Many were killed, and others made prisoners.

AUSTRIA.

A very acrimonious correspondence is said to have taken place between the French and Austrian Governments on the navigation of the Danube.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

General Conference.

Providence permitting we purpose to hold another General Conference, at Chapman Hall, Boston, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening March 16th, at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

In behalf of the church,

Miles Grant, Pastor.

I will endeavor to meet with the churches as follows:—

Lowell,	Wednesday eve, Feb. 10th.
Manchester, N. H,	Thursday eve, 11th.
Concord,	Friday eve, 12th.
Portsmouth,	Saturday eve, 13th, —and over the Lord's day, 14th.
Exeter, N. H.,	Monday eve, 13th.
Salem, Mass.,	Tuesday eve, 16th.
Boston,	Wednesday eve, 17th.
Roxbury,	Thursday eve, 18th.

The rest of the week and over Sunday, where there is an opening to do good.

If these appointments conflict with any others, please notify me.

Hiram Munger.

Chickopee Falls, Mass.

I propose to visit and hold meetings at Woodstock, N. H., Thursday eve, Feb. 11th, —and hold over the following Sunday. Shall have brethren with me to help.

S. W. Bishop.

Bro. Luther Boutell appoints to preach at Stow, Mass., Feb. 14th.

L. Robinson appoints to preach at Chester Factories, Feb. 14th
Blandford, Monday, Feb. 15th.

Providence permitting, I will commence another series of meetings at the Town Hall, Rutland, Vt., commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 9th, and continuing one week or more, as thought best.

Miles Grant.

I will preach at Harwinton (near Bro. Elliott's) Feb. 14th.

C. Goodrich.

Bro. W. S. Campbell will preach at Lowell, Feb. 7th and 14th.
Roxbury, Mass., (eve.,) Feb. 5th.

Conference.

There will be a Conference holden on the 2d Saturday of each month, in Orrington, Me., at the Advent Chapel. Brethren in the ministry will please remember these meetings.

I. Damman.

I will preach (if the Lord will) at Lowell, Feb. 22d.

Poetry.

FORGIVE.

By all the turmoil thou hast felt
Within thy tempted breast,
When fiery passions strove to melt
God's image there impressed,
By all the struggles of thy will
To quell their rebel might,
Forgive the wretch, who, battling ill,
Was worsted in the fight!

Thou knowest not what cunning snares
Were spread beneath his feet;
What foeman lurked in ambushed lairs
To intercept retreat;
The weakness thou would'st hardly chide
Should tender pity woo;
If thou hadst been as sorely tried,
Though might'st have fallen too!

Forgive, and breathe a gentle word
Of sympathy and love,
Like that by weeping Mary heard
From One now throned above;
And thou may'st win from depths of woe
The soul that went astray;
And light anew hope's faded glow
To change its night to day.

But harshness raises higher yet
The waters of despair,
And weaves around a stronger net
To mesh the erring there—
Till, settling heavily they sink
Beneath the tumid wave;
And thou, though standing on the brink,
Didst stretch no hand to save!

The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. V.

BY D. P. HILDRETH.

4.—The battle of the great day; the wicked slain, and burned with the earth.

When Babylon falls, then commences the great battle, which is consequent upon it; for Babylon is a symbol of the apostate church. But the beast and false prophet, which symbolize the Eastern and Western empires of Rome, have not yet fallen; but are on their way to perdition.

"And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat on him was called Faithful and True; and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns: and he had a name written, that no man knew but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; and his name is called The Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. . . . And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him. . . . These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat on the horse, . . . and all the fowls were filled with their flesh." Rev. 19: 11–21.

"And the heaven departed as a scroll, when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains. And said to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. 6: 14–17.

"Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet . . . and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth." Dan. 2: 34, 35.

"And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God." Rev. 14: 19. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; . . . and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture, and on his thigh, a name written, KING OF KINGS and LORD OF LORDS." Rev. 19: 15, 16.

"And I will plead against him (Gog) with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone." Ezek. 38: 22.

"And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air: and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done. And there were voices, and thunder, and lightning; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. . . . And every island fled away; and the mountains were not found. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent; and men blasphemed God, because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great." Rev. 16: 17–21.

"And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit, shall be taken in the snare; for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake." Isa. 24: 18.

The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night: in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness; looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." 2 Pet. 3: 10–12.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. . . . And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints, upon the golden altar which is before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, with the prayers of the saints ascended up before God, out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth: and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." Rev. 8: 1–5.

"And I saw as it were, a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, . . . stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? . . . for thy judgments are made merciful." Rev. 15: 2–4.

"Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven." Mal. 4: 1.

"The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt; the earth is burned at his presence; yea, the world, and all that dwell therein." Nah. 1: 5.

Great God! we adore thee for the hope of thy saints, that they shall be hidden during the dissolving process of earth and heaven.

A Prediction;

By Isaac Taylor, Author of the "Natural History of Enthusiasm."

"When once this weighty question of the after life has been opened, and when it shall have come into the hands of well-informed bibical interpreters, a controversy will ensue, in the progress of which it will be discovered that, with unobservant eyes, we and our predecessors have been so lk-ing up and down, and running hither and thither, among dim notices and indications of the future destinies of the human family, as to have failed to gather up or to regard much that has lain upon the pages of the Bible, open and free to our use Those who, through a course of years, have been used to read the Scriptures unshackled by systems, and bound to no conventional modes of belief, such readers must have felt an impatience in waiting—not for the arrival of a new revelation from Heaven, but of an ample and unfettered interpretation of that which has so long been in our hands.

"Thus the future Methodism, as we assume, will feel the need of, and will acquire for itself, under pressure of the most urgent motives, an incontrovertible exposition of the Scripture doctrine of the future administration of justice; but then it will not make this acquisition as if it could be held as an insulated dogma; for whatever is further ascertained on this ground, will come to stand in its true relationship to much beside, which, in the course of the same argument, will have started to view, as the genuine sense of the inspired books. The doctrine of future punishment, as a belief drawn from Scripture, and so drawn as to dissipate prevalent illusions, and to spread on all sides a salutary and effective alarm—such a belief will take its place in the midst of an expanded prospect of the compass and intention of the Christian system.

"The past Methodism was far from being a message of wrath, proclaimed by men of fierce and fanatical tempers:—it was a message of joy, hope, and love; and it made its conquests as such, notwithstanding those bold and unmeasured denunciations against sin which is so often uttered. And so it will be with the future Methodism; and although it will rest itself upon a laboriously obtained belief concerning the 'wrath to come'—a belief that will heave the human mind with a deep convulsive dread, yet, and notwithstanding this preliminary, the renovation which we look for will come in as the splendor of day comes in the tropics—it will be a sudden brightness that makes all things glad!"—From Debt and Grace, by C. F. Hudson, pp. 158, 159. For sale at this Office.

Correspondence,

From Eld. L. Boutell.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I am still in the field attending to the calls of my Master. If there ever was a time when we were called to double our diligence in labor, this is emphatically the time. The year 1857; how quickly it passed! but it is gone, and with it we are all being hurried on to the day which God hath appointed to judge the "quick and the dead at his appearing and Kingdom." The new year has opened upon us; its book of accounts under favorable auspices, but with fearful responsibilities; and especially to those earthen vessels to whom is committed the word of reconciliation and the warning of those who are in danger of speedily being overtaken in their sins by the great day of the Lord.

The Lord is favoring us with the spirit of comfort and revival almost everywhere. In places where desolation and ruin have prevailed, by the preaching of experimental religion, as the result of truth, a blessed good state of things has been brought about, and some begin to inquire the way of life. Others are returning from their backslidden, God-dishonoring course, when they can praise the Lord once more.

My heart is greatly encouraged. I am resolved to labor more faithfully than ever before in urging my fellow men to be reconciled to God. I see omens of good everywhere I go. The people turn out well, and they give us a good hearing. And while I do think we ought to dwell more upon practical, experimental, life-giving religion; still the great pending events that we are approaching must not be left out. Faith, which is the substance of things hoped for, has, does, and will look for a coming Lord, in harmony with his blessed word and the signs to precede it. And every man who has the mind of Christ can but respond a hearty amen as he sees the indications that we are coming into port soon.

That faith which believes the written record and speaks it lovingly and freely, will please our Father. When I read, "The meek shall inherit the earth," also, "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear I will give you a crown of life;" to turn upon him and say, "I guess they'll get something," would dishonor the great Head of the church. I dare not do it. No, no. Where there is definite, positive testimony, faith says, yea, it is so; faith makes it a substance. This rule may be applied to every plain, positive text, for they do not conflict. It only wants stronger confidence on our part to believe.

And now as the Lord has done so much for us as a people, in showing us the light upon this great, God-like plan of saving men by the truth, his written word, do let us believe, preach, and live it out, every day and everywhere.

The signs they thicken every day,
Which tell us we are on the way,
And if we live up to the light,
The Kingdom then will be in sight.

Be faithful, brethren, now's the time
That we should let our light so shine,
That others might our good works see,
Believe on Christ and his wrath flee.

We must not be ashamed to speak
When Christ has said the saints do sleep,
And if the Bible has men dead,
Don't let's be wiser than our Head.

What if the rulers don't believe,
And the reproach will not receive?
We'll take the cross; count all but gain,
And if we die we'll live again.

Does not the Bible plainly show
That all mankind to dust must go?
And is it not a God-like plan
That brings to life poor mortal man?

Deceptions, they have come at last,
They tell us all the signs are past,
And very soon we all shall find
The Judgment is for all mankind.

Reward to all will then be given,—
The good, they now will find their heaven;
The wicked, they have filled their cup,
The day has come, 'twill burn them up.

L. BOUTELL.

From E. C. Paine.

BRO. GRANT:—"Holiness to the Lord" should be our motto; without which no man can see the Lord. We want the internal witness that we are the Lord's; that we are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord daily. We read; "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself as he (Christ) is pure." Some may say, "I can never be as pure." Dear brethren and sisters, do we not read that if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness? God's promises are yea and amen to all them that believe. We must believe when we come to him that he is and that he is a rewarder of all who diligently seek him. We must accept him as our Savior, our wisdom, our righteousness, our sanctification, our redemption. We must have a just conception of his character.

God is love. He so loved the world he gave his only begotten Son to die for us. Man, by disobedience, forfeited all right to eternal life. God's law had been broken, the penalty attached thereto stood against the sinner; death was his portion, and a remedy was sought. Thank God! help was laid on One who is able to save to the uttermost all that come to him and believe. Simple faith, and you receive the blessing God designs to give. It is without money and without price. Praise the Lord. The poor can have it as well as the rich. So we are without excuse. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom? Do not spurn this freely offered mercy. You want eternal life, and you can have it. You must have a will about it. It is his will, even your sanctification; and now let him work in you to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Our will must be lost in his will.

We are living in an evil time; we need encouraging. I can say I never felt more like leaning upon the arm of my Beloved than now. I feel he is my all. He is my strength, my shield, my defence, my strong tower, my fortress, my deliverer in whom I trust. Glory be to God, he ever learned me to trust in him! He is my shepherd; I shall not want. Some may feel fearful that they shall want, as the times are hard. But I feel it will work for good to us. It will give us a chance to try God and prove him. Call upon him in the day of trouble and he will answer. He says our bread and our water shall be sure. Can we doubt Jehovah's word? Who will dare? Our blessed Savior said when upon earth; "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you"

Are there widows, left with fatherless children, who read this paper? Be encouraged; God's promises are sure. He will be a father to the fatherless and the widow's God and judge. You shall be kept alive in time of famine. God's eyes are over the righteous; his ears are ever open to their prayer.

What a consolation! Dispel your fears; dismiss your doubts; take God at his word, and all is well. We shall come off conquerors, and receive a crown that will never fade. Glory be to God forever!

Your sister in hope of immortality at the resurrection of the just,

E. C. PAINE.

For the Crisis.

I Want to Go Home.

I want to go home. I am tired of wandering up and down this empty, hollow-hearted, earth.

I am tired of these slow revolving seasons. I am tired of meeting and parting.

I want to go where these changing seasons shall be woven into one eternal Spring,—where I shall bathe in that ocean of unbounded bliss, and drink from that pure river, "the streams whereof shall make glad the city of our God."

I want to roam in those green fields where the flowers never fade, where the sun is never darkened, and no storm-cloud will ever throw a shadow.

I want to go where Friendship will prove sincere, and Love's lingering embrace no more be torn asunder.

I want to go where I shall rest these weary limbs, and pillow this aching head upon the bosom of Him who alone cares for me.

SONG.

I sojourn in a vale of tears,
Alas, how can I sing?
My harp doth on the willows hang,
Distuned in every string.
My music is a captive's chain;
Harsh sounds my ears do fill;
How shall I sing sweet Sion's song
On this side Sion's hill?

Yet lo! I hear a joyful sound;
"Surely I quickly come!"
Each word much sweetness doth distil
Like a full honeycomb.
And dost thou come, my dearest Lord?
And dost thou surely come?
And dost thou surely, quickly come?
Methinks I am at home.

Come, then, my dearest, dearest Lord,
My sweetest, surest Friend;
Come, for I loathe these Kedar tents;
Thy fiery chariots send.
What have I here? My thoughts and joys
Are all packed up and gone;
My eager soul would follow them
To thine eternal throne.

What have I in this barren land?
My Jesus is not here;
Mine eyes will ne'er be blest until
My Jesus doth appear.
My Jesus is gone up to heaven
To get a place for me;
For 'tis his will that where he is
There should his servants be.

Canaan I view from Pisgah's top,
Of Canaan's grapes I taste;
My Lord, who sends unto me here,
Will send for me at last.
I have a God that changeth not,
Why should I be perplext?
My God that owns me in this world,
Will own me in the next.

Self Denial.

What is self-denial? Is it sackcloth on the loins? Is it a wooden block for a pillow? Is it pulse or lentil pottage for the daily meal? Is it a crypt or kennel for one's lodging? Ah no! In all this flesh-pinching there is often a subtle self-pleasing: but when the tempter is up to rule the spirit, and over a "manly revenge" to let Christian magnanimity triumph,—that is self-denial. To take pains with dull children and ignorant and insipid adults,—that is self-denial. To hide from the left hand what the right hand is doing; to ply the task when fellow-laborers drop away and lookers-on wax few; for the Lord's sake still to follow up the work when the world gives you no credit,—that is self-denial. When you might tell your own exploits to let another praise you, and not your own lips; and when a fancy touch would make a good story a great deal better, to let the "yea" be simple yea,—that is self-denial. Rather than romantic novelties to prefer duty with its sober common-place routine, and to stand at your post when the knees are feeble and the heart is faint,—that is self-denial.—From personal indulgence, from the lusts of the flesh and the pride of life, to save wherewithal to succor the indigent and help forward Christ's kingdom on the earth, —that is self-denial.

"O could we learn that sacrifice,
What lights would all around us rise!
How would our hearts with wisdom talk
Along life's dullest, dreariest walk!

We need not bid for cloister'd cell
Our neighbor and our work farewell,
Nor strive to wind ourselves too high
For sinful man beneath the sky.

The trivial round, the common task,
Would furnish all we ought to ask,
Room to deny ourselves a road
To bring us daily nearer God."

—Golden Rule.

Benevolence a Source of Happiness.

Of all sources of happiness in a community, none acts so greatly and persuasively as the spirit of true benevolence. Nothing would so much assuage private griefs, or so greatly smoothe the relations of class with class, as the general spread of that sacred brotherly love, that true fellow-feeling which breathes so sweetly in our Christian Scriptures. That widows may not weep unconsoled; that orphans may not roam friendless; that wayward men may not pass a lifetime within sound of church bells without ever hearing inside their own door a word of loving exhortation; that the poor may not be set against the rich by envy; that the rich may not be estranged from the poor by contempt; that real heathens may not live in the heart of Christendom; that nations of pagans may not sit on and on in the darkness of their fathers;—in a word, that this cold world may be warmer, and this troubled race have more joy, open your hand; and give, for man's sake, give.—The Duty of Giving Away.

Kind Words.

They never blister the tongue or lips. And we have never heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They help one's good nature and good will. Soft words soften our own soul. Angry words are fuel to the flame of wrath and make it burn more fiercely. Kind words make other people good natured. Cold words freeze people and hot words scorch them, and bitter words make them bitter, and wrathful words shall make them wrathful. There is a rush of all other kind of words in our day, and it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words, and idle words, and hasty words, and spiteful words, and silly words, and empty words, and profane words, and boisterous words, and warlike words. Kind words also produce their image on men's souls. And a beautiful image it is. They soothe and quiet, and comfort the hearer. They shame him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.—Pascal.

Enemies.

Have you enemies? Go straight on and mind them not. If they block up your path, walk around them, and do your duty regardless of their spite. A man who has no enemies is seldom good for anything—he is made of that kind of material which is so easily worked that every one has a hand in it. A sterling character, one who speaks for himself and speaks what he thinks is always sure to have enemies. They are as necessary to him as fresh air; they keep him alive and active.

A celebrated character who was surrounded by enemies used to remark: "They are sparks which if you do not blow will go out of themselves." Let this be your feelings, while endeavoring to live down the scandal of those who are bitter against you. If you stand to dispute, you do as they desire, and open the way for more abuse. Let the poor fellow talk; there will be a reaction if you perform your duty, and hundreds who were once alienated from you, will flock to you and acknowledge their error.

GOING TO A "BETTER COUNTRY."—A Christion does not turn his back upon the fine things of this world because he has no natural capacity to enjoy them, no taste for them, no love for them; but becaus the Holy Spirit has shown him greater and better things. He wants flowers that will never fade; he wants something that a man can take with him to another world. He is like a man who has had notice to quit his house, and having secured a new one, he is no more anxious to repair, much less to embellish and beautify the old one; his thoughts are upon the removal. If you hear him converse, it is upon the house to which he is going. Thither he sends his goods, and thus he declares plainly what he is seeking.

A GOOD ANSWER.—An enlightened man once said to an ignorant Asiatic, "How do you know that there is a God?" The savage, pointing to the human footsteps near him, replied, "How do you know that men have passed this way?"

AN EXAMPLE FROM NATIVE CHRISTIANS IN TURKEY.—Dr. Pratt writes from Aintab, Turkey, that the contributions of his people during the past year have been for the heathen, schoolhouse, church-edifice, poor, etc., besides the porter's salary, about 8,000 piasters, (2000,) and that the audience has averaged 670 persons; (the Sabbath before writing there were present 500 men and 261 women).

For the Children.

Winter.

Winter, winter, winter! The rough old fellow has come. Do you not hear him blowing his blast? What does he say? "Take care. Look out for those who cannot look out for themselves." Yes, yes. The poor beasts can no longer cut their own fodder. They must have hay from the mow and corn from the crib.

But this is taking care of our own.—There are others to provide for—the poor. Winter puts us in mind to share our comforts with the comfortless. "The poor," Christ says, "you have always with you"—to keep our hearts full of fellow-feeling I suppose.

How do you give to the poor? Do you give only when somebody happens to beg at your door; or do you spare something every week, and make it a habit to seek out and sympathize with them? The last is the true way. I know a little boy who earns an Indian loaf every Saturday to give away to a poor family. He goes to mill with the corn, and splits wood for the oven, and helps his mother. That is his way of earning the loaf, and his mother makes and bakes it for him. A loaf a week makes fifty-two loaves a year. That boy spreads a pretty good table to feed the hungry from, does he not? How sweet must be his enjoyment. Oh, I am sure it is.

And there is a dear, good old lady who, though her little living is eked out by charity, contrives to give a flannel petticoat a winter to some one poorer than herself. "I must give a flannel petticoat's worth," she says; and so, little by little, she saves enough to buy one. People wonder how she can; but such sorts of "can" depend much more upon a full heart than a full purse.

How many children who read this are giving a loaf's worth or a petticoat's worth to feed the hungry or clothe the naked? You know how highly Christ prizes such things. "Inasmuch," he says, "as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Such service, done for his sake, meets with a gracious and blessed reward.—Child's Paper.

A MAN may go idle to hell, but he that will go to heaven must be busy.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis. Over all business matters, write Business.

Poetry.

CHARITY.

Give! the world is poor and needy,
Standing with imploring hand,
And the wail of want and hunger
Echoes sadly through the land.
Give! thy gold will feed the starving,
Yield new strength to fainting heart;
From thy coffer and thy garner,
With a ready hand impart.

Give! the world is full of sorrow,
Aching hearts and tear-dimmed eyes,
Vainly asking for that treasure
Gold and silver never brings;
Aye! they ask for words of kindness,
Given from the heart's warm store,
For the tender tones of pity,
Worth far more than precious ore.

Give thy voice against oppression,
Shield the tempted and the tried,
Lift the fallen, cheer the drooping,
Tho' the hosts of sin deride.
If thou lackest earthly riches,
Give the balm of sympathy;
Give thy prayers and words of comfort,
This is heaven-born Charity!

The New Birth.

(Concluded.)

We sometimes err in the exposition of figures and symbols by bringing all the circumstances connected with them to bear upon the subject.

For instance, we should greatly err in supposing that as in natural generation a period of time intervenes between the conception and birth, during which the peculiar characteristics of the father after being transmitted to the offspring lie dormant, that therefore in regeneration the elements of the Divine nature must lie dormant for a given period: for the Divine principles of holiness are necessarily operative the moment they are received. We, therefore, see how the Scriptures use the two figures in their proper signification, and yet both have reference to the same point of time.

The subject of the new birth is beautifully presented by our Savior in connection with Nicodemus. "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man is born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." John 3: 3. It appears from this verse that the new birth is an essential prerequisite to an admission into the kingdom of God.—Precisely the same sentiment is expressed by Jesus in Matt. 18: 6;—

"Verily, I say unto you, Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

It seems from the question that Nicodemus asks in the fourth verse that he entertained no other idea than that Jesus referred to the regeneration of the physical man; this mistaken idea, however, Jesus immediately corrects by showing, that he did not refer to the organic or physical man, but to the moral or spiritual man: for, says he, "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Vs. 6. Jesus here shows that the distinctive point of difference between the two births is this; the former produces flesh, the latter spirit. As certainly, therefore, as the first birth generates flesh, and not spirit, so certainly will the second birth generate SPIRIT and not FLESH. We, therefore, inquire, at what point in the history of man is a change experienced, which produces, not a new organic man of flesh, but a new spirit, which will prepare him for an entrance into the kingdom of God. In the passage above quoted from Matt., the same indispensable qualification to enter the kingdom of God is brought to view, as is presented in this connection; and we now inquire whether that qualification requires a change in man, and whether that change produces a new organic body of flesh, or a new spirit in man. The expression "except ye be converted" necessarily implies a radical change; for conversion signifies a turning about; and it would be absurd to suppose that Jesus would require the sinner's physical organization to be transformed into that of a little child, in order to enter the kingdom of God. It is evident that he referred to a change of spirit, the same as in conversation with Nicodemus. But another important change in man is to occur at the resurrection of the dead. Can that be the change here alluded to? I think not, for the following reasons.

1. The resurrection will bring the bodies of men having FLESH and BONES out of their graves: but Jesus informs us that the birth of the Spirit produces spirit and not flesh, therefore, the resurrectisn cannot be the new birth.

2. It appears that after Nicodemus had been instructed by the Savior respecting the necessity of the new birth, and that that produced by it was like the wind, he explaimed "how can these things be?" allowing that he did not yet understand the subject. The Savior then sharply reproves him for being "a master in Israel," and not knowing "these things"—things which Jesus says have already taken place, in this world, (or earthly things,) which had transpired within the compass of our vision: for, says the Master, "we speak what we do KNOW and testify that we HAVE SEEN," showing clearly that the great subject he had introduced was eminently practical and experimental in this world, and that therefore "a master in Israel" was blame-worthy for not believing thes things: believing, did I say? for not knowing these things. I fail to see how this can apply to the resurrection to eternal life: for Jesus had not yet been resurrected, and he is declared to be the first begotten from the dead: therefore no one in Israel had seen or known that resurrection.

3. Jesus has said that every one who is born of the Spirit is like the wind, the sound of which may be heard, but the place from whence it came and wither it goes is not known; that is, it cannot be seen coming or going. Nicodemus in contemplating the new birth, was perplexed because he associated with it an organic body of flesh, which may always be seen in its movements (in this world and the next) unless a miracle be wrought to prevent it. But Jesus chooses one of the most striking figures conceivable to show that he did not refer to such a body, but to that whose course is trackless, whose movement is not perceptable to the human eye. Such are characteristics of the Spirit of God and of man.

The spirit of man is represented as being renewed at conversion: for says the apostle, "And be renewed in the spirit of your mind;" Eph. 4: 23. To be renewed is to be made new (or perfect) a second time. When was man made perfect previously to this? At his creation: for Paul informs us that man "is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Col. 3: 10. This proves that when man is renewed in the spirit of his mind, the image of God is restored, as it was at the creation. The Scriptures teach that we are the children of God when we bear his image, as Jesus says,—

"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his son to rise upon the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Matt. 5: 44, 45. Therefore, we see that when man fell he lost the image of God, and could no longer be reckoned a member of the heavenly family; but in the economy of the divine government a plan was laid, through which man may have the holy principles of the Divine nature restored to him again; so that God seeing his own nature reflected (as the natural father does in his son) may send forth that sweetest and most entrancing message that ever greeted the ear of fallen man, thy God receiveth thee as a beloved child.

The word regeneration is also used by Paul to express the same change in man when he says, "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." To generate is to produce our kind, likeness, or image: therefore, when God regenerates man he restores his own spiritual likeness and image which makes him our spiritual father. When we take a general view of the subject we find that the Scriptures in every case represent the renewed man by the outward or physical man after birth and never in the embryotic state: for he is represented as eating, drinking, walking, running a race, a subject of government, &c., &c., but never in an inactive and unconscious state.

The subject becomes still more beautiful and glorious when we contemplase man as being fallen both morally and physically into pollution, sorrow and death; and that, being born of the Spirit, those heavenly principles of the Divine character are restored, which constitute him in the image of God: so that man can again be placed on trial upon the same conditions that he was at his creation; for it appears that he was then tried to prove his faithfulness or unfaithfulness to a holy spiritual nature with which he was endowed. Therefore before he can be placed on trial again according to the original purpose and plan of God, the same holy principles must be restored to man, after which he must have a season of probation, during which he will prove his faithfulness or unfaithfulness to the heavenly treasure committed to his trust. If faithful, he will retain the gift eternally; but if unfaithful, it will be lost forever We have already proved that man fell morally and physically, and have seen how God in the Divine plan purposed to restore man spiritually; but how will he be restored physically? We answer, by the resurrection from the dead. And as he is represented as being born from spiritual death to spiritual life, so is he represented as being born from physical death to physical eternal life. Thus Paul declares that Jesus is the first born from the dead, the term "first" signifying that others are to follow in this birth. Jesus also represents the children of his kingdom as the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Luke 20: 36.

O how sublime a thought! how glorious the contemplation of fallen man restored to that state of holiness and heavenly perfection which characterize the seraphic worshipers around the throne of God; upon whom the impress of the Divine character will ever remain, and who will forever be governed by that eternal Spirit which moves through all the heavenly world, as if propelled by the pulsation of Deity! In view of these things my heart cries out with intense desire, O God! work in me mightily—purify my soul from sin—and at the appearing of the mighty conqueror, reorganize this frame of dust and clothe it with the beauties of his heavenly body—elevate me to equality with the angels—give me the blessedness of God's everlasting kingdom, which will be the rich harvest of the new birth.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER FIVE.

I once traveled in a stage coach with passengers of various characters, one of whom used profane language. After a while I reproved him for his impoliteness and sinfulness, upon which I was asked by him,

"Are you a priest?"

I assured him that I was a preacher of righteousness and felt interested in his welfare, and did not enjoy the sight of his degrading himself, by taking God's name in vain.

"Well, is it worse to use such talk than to jest, joke, and tell shoemaker's lies for sport?"

"Perhaps not: both are wrong."

"Do you know Elder ——, of S——?"

"I have seen him," I replied.

"Well, I have worked with him many a day, and he is one of the jolliest men I ever knew. He tells many funny stories, and jests, jokes, and makes sport for a whole gang of men. No one can get off any thing but he will beat it."

"Do you go to hear him preach?" I asked.

"Preach! No, I don't want to hear him preach. I have no confidence in his preaching."

"But he is called a good preacher and has a large church, I hear."

"Yes, but I have no confidence in his religion. He is a clever man, but does not live religion, any more than I do."

Here was an opportunity for reflection. This young man was lively, vain, reckless of his thoughts and language; when called to an account, sought to measure his language by that of a minister, and an eminent minister, too—a jesting, white-lying minister. Are they not watched, weighed and measured by those who meet, and live with them? Not always correctly, but much nearer than they suppose.

Paul whispers aloud, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." "What a man soweth that shall he also reap." "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth; but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace to the hearer." "Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient, but rather of thanks."

Do ministers follow this rule? I fear many do not, and the result is, no good fruits are gathered by their labors.

I once spent a night with a Christian family, one of the members of which was a very amiable daughter, who had found Christ to be her Savior a year before. I had heard much of her piety, but when I conversed with her she had lost much of her hope; she was in darkness and doubt; confessed she had been unfaithful; was proud, &c. I saw she had a golden god to the cost of five dollars on her person. Before I left, it seemed duty to direct her attention to her idol. So I asked her,

"Suppose you should know that I was living in disobedience to the gospel requirements; would you believe it your duty to mention it to me?" She answered,

"Yes."

"Then I suppose you will willingly allow me to do the same to you," I replied.

"Certainly," she said.

"Now will you turn to 1 Tim. 2: 9, and 1 Peter 3: 3, 4, and read."

She did so, looking sad and ashamed as she read.

"Do you think it wrong to wear such things?" she asked.

"If not, why do those two apostles strictly forbid it in giving the discipline to the church of Christ? Suppose I should cheat, steal, swear, or get drunk, would you consider me a Christian?" I asked.

"No, I should not," was the reply.

"But sister L. and sister R. wear gold, and they are called as good sisters as are in the church."

"No matter about them. Could you wear it when you was first converted?"

"No," was the relpy.

"Have you enjoyed religion since you wore it?"

"No."

"Have you not felt condemned for wearing it?'

"Yes, I have; but I don't see why I cannot enjoy religion and wear it as well as other sisters."

What lessons shall we draw from this case and hundreds like it, with which we meet? We apply the words of holy writ, "One sinner destroyeth much good;" and again, "Whosoever shall offend (cause to stumble) one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea."

The wearing of gold is not the only stumbling block, but it is one of them and will be found in the day of judgment to have turned hundreds from the humble, self-denying, strait faith.

Visiting a family of Universalists once was inquiring of the mother, who was a Christian, about the mind of her son in regard to religion. She replied,

"I think he believes in Christianity, but he says he does not see any in the church. Last year several persons in the place professed conversion, and he went to see them baptized. When he came home he told what ones he believed were converted. Several were baptized with jewelry on. He said those would soon go back. He watched them to see how long they were active in meetings. They soon fell back."

Such are "epistles read and known of all men, but not "living epistles." Truly the religion of this age carries the old man, and dresses him up for a show.

Familiar Letters.

TO MY DEAR UNCLE:—No no! Uncle Fred, I shall not be offended with you because of your "plain-heartedness," but love you all the more for your good-natured, out-spoken remarks.

So you really think that in becoming a "Millerite," as you are pleased to denominate it, I have fully manifested my "folly and delusion," and that in being "re-baptized," I have made myself "perfectly ridiculous before the world, and mortified" my "friends exceedingly."

Well, you have made me out to be quite a silly, inconsistent sort of a person, or rather, I should say, have laid the grave charge at my door, and I will say, that while you have failed to offend, you have fairly succeeded in provoking me to rise up in self-defence, and prove to you that my change of views and course of action have not been produced by the excitement of a moment, but by an attentive study of the word of God.

I will, Uncle Fred, if you will hear me patiently, give "a reason of my hope," but you have instead resorted to a sort of half-earnest, half-playful railing and contempt. And while I attempt to bring forth my strong reasons, I want you to controvert them, and to bring all your battering rams to beat them down if possible; for unless they prove to be impregnable, I desire not to build my house upon them.

I know that you are a double-and-twisted Pedo-Baptist, and are rooted and grounded in the faith that the Jews are to return and build up old Jerusalem again, as in former times; and that the world will all be brought under the influences of the gospel, war be done away, slavery cease, &c., &c., and that this blessed state will continue for a thousand years, and will be the long-looked for millenial age.

Well, Uncle, I am perfectly willing to believe all this just as you do, provided the Bible doth so teach; and I think that an investigation of the matter will not do us any harm. But I must beg, on your part, the exercise of charity; for a simple-minded novice to contend with the veteran of grey hairs, is rather an unequal warfare.

As you have seen fit to remark rather largely upon my "re-baptism" as you are pleased to call it, I will open the discussion (if you will make it thus; otherwise, my defence,), upon this important point. I do not admit, of course, the correctness of your term; and I call upon you to prove that I was ever baptized till I was immersed.

I was, as you know, brought up by parents who believed sprinkling is just as much baptism as immersion. Their parents were Pedo-Baptists like yourself, and dedicated their children to God by so-called baptism, and they have never known any other. But I know that father, and especially mother, has been dissatisfied with that infant sprinkling, and so have multitudes of others. I have heard mother say, that, were she not so aged, she would like to be immersed, that it appeared to her to be the most proper mode. But she belongs to a church that is Pedo-Baptist, and of course could not be baptized by one of its ministers, And in this fact alone I see a very strong objection to the practice of infant sprinkling, and then establishing the rite as the only essential baptism; for thousands, after arriving at an age to investigate and understand for themselves, cannot with their views of scriptural baptism, recognize any other mode than that of immersion, and also that faith in Christ must precede the administration of the ordinance.

I am very glad that my parents were not such strong Pedo-Baptists as to lead them to present their infants to the altar, there to have a few drops of water sprinkled on our heads, forever after to be sanctified as sacred baptism. Had I, however, been subjected to this mode when an ignorant babe, I am aware that I should be less severely censured; but having arrived at the age of understanding and become a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by my own free choice submitting to this mode of baptism, (?) and taking upon me the solemn vows connected therewith; then, to renounce this as a ceremony possessing no value, and by the hands of an administration claiming no line of succession from the apostle Peter, be buried beneath the wave,—ah! this, this, is ridiculous in the extreme!

But while I present the dissatisfaction of multitudes with their infant sprinkling as an objection, mind you, I did not offer it as proof. O no! I shall present some very hard proof-nuts for yout to crack, before I get through with you, and although I shall not argue much directly on the point of infant sprinkling, yet I hope to give you such convincing arguments in favor of immersion, as shall force you under water, if you are an old man somewhat. It was once the custom to immerse children. Whitefield says in one of his sermons:

"It is certain, in the words of our text, that there is an allusion to the manner of baptism, which was by immersion, which our church allows, and insists upon it that children should be immersed in water, unless those that bring children to be baptized, assure the minister that they cannot bear the plunging."

I will give you one more quotation touching this matter of infant sprinkling, and then dismiss the subject and go at once to the root of the tree, unless you present arguments which need to be noticed.

Dr. Wall says; "It being allowed to weak children, though strong enough to be brought to church to be baptized by infusion; many gentlemen and ladies first, and then by degrees the common people would obtain the favor of the priests to have their children pass for weak children, too tender to endure dipping in the water. And another thing that had a greater influence than this, was, that many of our English divines and other people had, during queen Mary's bloody reign, fled into Germany and Switzerland; and coming back they brought with them a great love to the customs of those Protestant churches wherein they had sojourned; and especially the authority of Calvin, and the rules which he had established at Genoa, a form of administrating the sacraments, where, when he comes to order the act of baptizing, he words it thus: 'then the minister of baptism pours water on the head of the infant, saying, I baptize thee.'"

So you see, Uncle Fred, that sprinkling was only for the weak babies at first; but it seems now-a-days that all babes are weak, or else the fashion has changed!

Remember that I challenge you to prove the truth of your charge, viz., that I have been "re-baptized." So bring into the field your sharpest proof-text weapons, and I will meet you with my sling and stone, trusting therewith to pierce your head and heart.

Till then, adieu,

KATE.

HAST THOU NO PRAYER?

Hast thou no prayer, when blessings fair
So richly rare
Are thine to share?
Hath life so dear, 'mid gladsome cheer
Still lurking near,
No ill to fear?

Shall joyful hours fore'er be ours,
And sweetest flowers
Adorn our bowers?
Shall grief away, still every day,
While we delay
To God to pray?

Should we be dumb, while praises come
In gentlest hum
From nature's tongue?
While o'er the ground, and all around
Glad echoes bound
In thankful sound?

Dear brother mine, are trials thine?
Thou hast a mine
Of precious kind:
For chastening brings on angel wings
Most glorious things,
And joy that clings.

'Tis love revealed to servants sealed!
Then joyful yield—
Of sin be healed,
And patient plod this sin-cursed sod
And praise thy God
For e'en the rod!

Of JESUS proud, still onward crowd,
Though darkest cloud
Thy path enshroud;
And while ye roam, and sorrows come
Like surging foam,
Oh think of HOME!

Love.

This principle, as an emination from God, is the foundation of his laws and precepts to man. In the word of God we find much on the subject of love. Love to God and man was the foundation of his "moral law," which was engraven on the tables of stone; or, as the Savior said, "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." And throughout the Savior's teachings, the apostles' writings, and the entire New Testament, are numerous exhortations for us to exercise love in all our intercourse with mankind.

It is a rich and heavenly boon which all may possess, and without which none can be happy; for it is the foundation of all true happiness. It not only affords the higbest enjoyment to those who possess it, but in all their influence over others it has the same happifying effect.

This principle is perfect; especially in the glorious plan of salvation; the rich and unbounded love of Christ in giving his life for the ransom of men. No human being is capable of fathoming its depths; no one can realize its value.

If in view of this great love, the disciple would strive earnestly to cultivate this same spirit, there would be less cause for mourning among Christians.

If in the dissemination of truth, in reproof or correction, in labor or exhortation, this divine gift were more earnestly sought after and cherished, the cause of Christ would be advanced, and sinners saved.

We cannot be too truthful, but let kindness wing the arrows that fly from our quiver, and let their points be all dipped in love, so that none may ever give pain without leaving the balm of healing in the wound.

"God is love," and he who has the brightest spark of the divine principle in his soul, is the happiest among angels or men. And the simple and lowly ones of earth may have as much as the great and honored. 'Tis love only, that varies the lot of mortals. This is the brightest among the Christian graces; is the principal element of the christian character.

Therefore those who serve God give themselves up to the guidance of the Spirit, and love becomes the motive power that leads them on in the ways of peace.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 17, 1858.

"What is Man?"—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER THIRTEEN.

In our last, we found that the Bible plainly teaches that man and the beasts were all made of dust, all have the same breath, all called living souls, and all die alike. The question now arises, in what consists the difference between man and beast? Before answering the question, we will give proof that the foregoing assertions are in harmony with the Scriptures.

1. Man and beast are made of DUST. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground. . . . And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every fowl of the air." Gen. 7, 19.

2. Man and beast have the same breath of life. In speaking of the flood, and those who were drowned in its waters, the Lord directs Moses to say, in Gen. 7: 21–22, "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life of all that was in the dry land died." This passage shows beyond all controversy, that the fowl, cattle, beast, creeping thing, "and every man" have the same "breath of life." The word rendered breath of life in this passage is the same that is translated breath of life in Gen. 2: 7, where it is applied to man; and also in Isa. 2: 22, where we read, "Cease ye from man, whose breath (n'sha-mah) is in his nostrils." This is all in harmony with the declaration of the wise man, when he says, "Yea, they have all one breath."

3. All men and animals are called living souls. "And God said, let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life," (nephesh khayah, margin, "living soul.") Gen. 1: 20. "And God created great whales, and every living creature (nephesh khayah) that moveth." Gen. 1: 21. "And God said let the earth bring forth the living creature (nephesh khayah) after his kind." Gen. 1: 24. And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, (nephesh khayah, margin, 'a living soul,') I have given every green herb for meat." Gen. 1: 30. "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man, and every living soul died in the sea." Rev. 16: 3. Many more passages might be given, if necessary, to show that all animals are called living souls. Does any one doubt that man is so called? Read Gen. 2: 7 once more. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul," (nephesh khayah.)

4. Man and beast die alike. We found it clearly proved that man dies when the breath of life leaves him. In Eccl. 3: 19–20, we read, "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast; for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." No language could be plainer to show that man and beast die alike. What causes death? David answers in Ps. 104: 29, "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, (ruakh) they die, and return to their dust."

We think the foregoing propositions are fully sustained by the Scriptures.

1. "Man and beast are made of dust."
2. "Man and beast have the same breath of life."
3. "All men and animals are called living souls."
4. "Man and beast die alike."

The question now recurs, "what constitutes the difference between man and beast?"—One answers, "Men think, and beasts do not." Is this true? It is evident that beasts have thoughts as well as men, and some animals give proof of stronger minds than some men. The idiot is a man, but he does not know as much as the dog that lies upon the hearth-rug; the former does not know enough to keep out of the fire, while the latter protects the house from all intruders. We may be told that the dog knows nothing only what nature teaches him; if so, he has the best education of the two. But is it instinct that causes the dog to go to market with a basket in his mouth, and bring home a piece of meat for the use of the family? We think instinct, or nature would teach him to eat the meat as soon as it came within his reach. We see that intellect alone does not mark the difference between man and beast. Man in old age frequently loses his intellect, and it is said of him, "His body has outlived his mind." In such a condition, is he not as much a man, as when he stood in the senate hall charming the audience by the power of his eloquence? Yet in his dotage he knows less than the noble horse upon his farm.

We ask another, what constitutes the difference between man and beast? we mean, how can the one invariably be distinguished from the other? He answers, "one is a moral, or accountable being, and the other is not." Is the infant, the man in second childhood, the insane man, and idiot accountable? Certainly not. Then we must inquire again, how can the one always be distinguished from the other? Although most men are intellectual and accountable beings, and superior to animals; yet, this is not true of all; but all the *un*accountable human beings are as truly men and women, as the most learned; hence the grand distinction is not yet produced. In what does it consist? Let us read the proposal for man's creation, as recorded in Gen. 1: 26, and we get an answer. After our Creator had made the animals, in their various forms, he says, "Let us make man in our IMAGE, after our LIKENESS. . . . So God created man in his OWN IMAGE, in the image of God created he him." Of what did he make him? "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." "And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field;" but man alone was made in the likeness and image of his Creator. Why should we be made in his likeness? Because, if christians, we are to be adopted into his family, as his children, and be "joint-heirs with Christ," who was, as Paul declares, in Heb. 1: 3, "the express image of his (the Father's) person." As Christ was "the only begotten of the Father," it is consistent to believe that he should resemble him in form; hence we learn that he was "in the form of God;" and as we are to be sons and daughters by adoption, it is reasonable to think there will be a family resemblance between our Heavenly Parent and all his children.

Some tell us man was made in the moral likeness alone;—but man was made of dust; and the Lord declares that the one he created of dust is in his image. If the likeness refers only to the moral nature, we inquire, does the moral nature of the murderer and pirate, or the harmless dove and innocent lamb, most resemble that of our heavenly Father? Yet the robber is a man as well as the saint.

Some tell us, the likeness consists in man's having an immortal nature. Such might just as well claim that the likeness consists in omnipotence, or omniscience. We can find no more proof in the Bible that man is immortal, than that he is omnipresent.

In conclusion, we remark, it appears plain that man is a being made "of the dust of the ground," in the "image" and "LIKENESS" of his Creator, and, by this means, he is at once distinguished from every other being upon the earth.

Questions.

Maria Louisa, wishes to know the meaning of John 11: 26,—"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

This is a saying of our Savior when talking with Martha about Lazarus and the resurrection of the dead. In the 14th verse we read, "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is DEAD." Can the 26th verse be applied to Lazarus while in that condition? If so, the Savior contradicted himself in a two minutes' conversation. In the 23d verse he says to Martha, "Thy brother shall rise again." Martha replies in verse 24, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." They are now contemplating the scene at the last day, when the resurrection is to take place; and Jesus remarks in verse 25, "I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." When? "In the resurrection at the last day." This 25th verse declares what shall then happen to believers that are dead. But what shall be done for believers that are alive upon the earth at that time?—"Whosoever liveth (at that time) and believeth in me shall never die." This 26th verse then, applies only to christians who are alive when the Lord comes. In harmony with this, Paul says in 1 Cor. 15; 51–52, "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, (or die) but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump."

Again, Maria inquires, "What souls did John see under the altar," in Rev. 6: 9?

He says they were those who "were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held."

The word here rendered souls is properly translated persons by some of the best scholars.

Where were these souls or persons?—"Under the altar." Where was the altar?—Certainly not in heaven or hell, but on the earth. Let them be then where the word of the Lord puts them.

We may be asked, how could they cry if they were slain and dead? We ask, what should make them cry in heaven? If alive, they are not in a very pleasant condition. But after they were slain they could cry as well as Abel after he was murdered by his brother Cain.—"The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." Gen. 4: 10. We learn from Heb. 12: 24, that the blood of Jesus "speaketh better things than that of Abel." In the same way, "the blood of martyrs crieth."

Again, this could have been fulfilled while they were being led to the slaughter by their persecutors, but we see no evidence that they are alive and crying now in paradise.

Once more. "Where did Moses and Elias come from at the scene of the transfiguration?"

Elias was translated and did not see death, and if he was truly upon the mount, he was there personally, and Moses appeared in the same form as Elias; consequently, if actually present he must have had a resurrection; but this idea seems to contradict a plain scripture in Col. 1: 18, where Paul in speaking of Christ says, he was "the first born from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence." If Moses was raised first, then he had the preeminence in the resurrection.

Let us look carefully at the account of the transfiguration as recorded in Matt. 17: 1–9. In verse 9, the Savior "charged them, saying, tell the VISION to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." Jesus calls this a vision. Daniel had visions, but what he saw in them did not then exist in reality. John saw in vision upon the isle of Patmos. While in that state he saw persons beheaded under the fifth seal, but the persons did not live till hundreds of years after they were seen in vision.

In the transfiguration, we understand that the Savior represented in vision how he and his children will appear in the kingdom. "His face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." This was not a permanent change, for when he came down from the mount, he appeared as usual.

One thing is certain, Moses was not actually there, unless he was raised from the dead. For we read in Deut. 34: 5, "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab." And the Lord says to Joshua in chap. 1: 2, "Moses my servant is DEAD." Would our Creator say Moses was dead, when he was alive?

The Great Error of the Age.

"O! listen man!
A voice within us speaks that startling word,
'Man, thou shalt never die!'"

For many generations the doctrine of inherent immortality has been preached to the world. The pagans knew nothing of the doctrine of the resurrection, hence they cherished the fond idea of the soul's immortality in their systems of philosophy. The doctrine took deep root in the Grecian mind. It received strength from the teachings of such men as Socrates, Plato and Pythagoras. These were men whose minds grasped many noble truths, but without the light of revelation to guide them into the knowledge of man's destiny, they groped their way in darkness and thus developed a system which has proved a stumbling block to succeeding generations.

When Papacy blended Paganism with its corrupt system of Christianity, the immortality of the soul received a prominent place in its creed. And at last, even the Protestant churches, as a general thing, have come to sanction the idea,—nay, adhere to it with an unwearied tenacity.—Now, all over the land, the Sabbath bells chime forth their solemn peals to bid the thousands come and listen to the oft-repeated sound, "Man, thou shalt never die."

On every occasion, in almost every literary production, this idea is inculcated. From the cradle of infancy to the dying bed of old age the voice is ever heard, "the soul shall live ever on."

A loved sister dies, the mother bids the little brother dry up his tears, and consoles him with the thought that his sister is a bright angel now in the starry realms above, and that she will still watch over his footsteps, as in bygone days. A household is bereft of its earthly dependence; the surviving friends are comforted amid the funeral rites, by the minister's teachings, which bid them think of the departed as a celestial being, winging his flight on seraph pinions through the Paradise of God, while the seraph ranks attune their golden lyres to loftier strains, as they receive a new accession to their number.

The poet invokes the muse to sing of the soul's immortality. He interweaves his brightest gems of thought with this long-cherished idea, thus weaving the silken web of error around our hearts, with the aid of pleasing rhyme.

The philosopher breathes it in his metaphysical researches, thus surrounding the student with the bulwark of error even in his first search after truth.

If we take all the above things into consideration, why should it seem strange, that the present generation has come to adopt the natural immortality of man as a truth? Why should it seem strange that modern Spiritualism has arisen among us, for it is a natural offspring of the above doctrine? Show from the Bible that "the dead know not any thing" and Spiritualism is at once exploded.

But we who have received light on the subject should deal gently, and kindly, with those who are yet in error. We should never censure a man because he does not at once receive a doctrine which we may deem truth. "A continued dropping will wear the stone." A continued shedding of light will dispel the grossest darkness. A kind way of presenting the truth will win attention, and obtain an ascendancy over the feelings, which can be done in no other manner.

From a child I was taught that there was a principle in man that never dies; and that the sinner will be punished with endless woe. This idea grew stronger with maturer years; and when I listened for the first time to the opposite theory, I looked upon it as being too absurd to receive a moment's attention from a sensible man. Moreover, the manner in which the doctrine was presented added strength to my prejudice. It was not until years afterward that I gave any attention to the subject. It was then that I found my position growing weak by investigation. I endeavored to support my position by the teachings of philosophy; even that source failed me, yet, the idea that the soul wings its flight to some bright Elysium at death was too poetical,—furnished my imagination with too many cherished ideas for me to abandon it thus. But at last, when I saw every vestige of Scripture against my position, I gave up my obstinate belief like an honest man. I acknowledge that it was not till then that I saw a consistency in the teachings of inspiration. It was then that Jehovah and his divine government shone forth in me with a peerless majesty, that I never had beheld before. The great plan of salvation appeared more luminous than ever. The importance of a resurrection of the dead appeared in a new and glorious light. I seemed to understand with Paul that if there is no resurrection of the dead, "Then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." I have denominated the doctrine of inherent immortality at the head of this article, as "the great error of the age." I think that a candid investigation of its principles will convince any candid mind that it is such. I candidly believe that it is the rock against which the infidel and Universalist have split. Let this rock be removed from the depths of investigation, and the last argument is gone which can possibly be urged against the justice of God's government. Teach man as the Bible does, "that the wages of sin is death," that eternal death,—not life in misery,—is the end of the sinner, and all appears consistent. Let it be known that the Bible teaches that "the dead know not any thing," and that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave," then mankind will learn to appreciate the noblest truths of inspiration as they never did before. They will then see that death is not the gate to endless joy," but that the resurrection of the body is the sublime portal through which the Christian enters the land of promise.

Bible Testimony Concerning Slavery.

Thus saith the Holy One of Israel; Because ye despise this word and trust in OPPRESSION and perverseness and stay thereon, therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, &c. Isa. 10: 12–13. Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us? Why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother? Mal. 2: 10. Execute true judgment; and oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, nor the stranger, nor the poor. Zech. 7: 9–10. They are corrupt and speak wickedly concerning oppression, they speak loftily. Ps. 73: 8. Wo unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbor's service without wages and giveth him not for his work Jer. 22: 13. Your hands are defiled with blood; none calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth. Isa. 59: 34. Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Isa. 59: 14. A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land: the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof? Wo—to the oppressing city! She obeyed not the voice; she received not correction; she trusted not in the Lord; she drew not near to her God. Zeph. 3: 1–2. To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice. Prov. 21: 3. Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting.—Wash you; make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed. Isa. 1: 13–20.

Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee (Jehovah) which frameth mischief by a law? Ps. 94: 20. Wo unto them that devise iniquity. Micah 2: 1–2. I will come near to you to judgment: and I will be a swift witness against the . . . adulterers, . . . and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of Hosts. Mal. 3: 5. He shall have judgment without mercy that hath shown no mercy. James 2: 13. They did set over them taskmasters to afflict them with their burdens—and they made their lives bitter with hard bondage. Ex. 1: 11–14. The right of the needy they do not judge. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof. Lev. 25: 10. Ye shall not oppress one another; but thou shalt fear thy God. 17th verse. Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant that is escaped from his master unto thee: he shall dwell with thee, even among you in that place which he shall choose; thou shalt not oppress him. Deut. 23: 15–16. And he that stealeth a man and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death. Ex. 21: 16.

Thus saith the Lord, for three transgressions and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they sold the righteous for silver and the poor for a pair of shoes—and a man and his father will go in unto the same maid to profane my holy name. Amos 2: 6–7. Publish in the palaces—behold the oppressed in the midst thereof. For they know not to do right saith the Lord, who store up violence and robbery in their palaces. Amos 3: 9–10. For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering. Isa. 61: 8. He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches—shall surely come to want. Prov. 22: 16. He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker. Prov. 14: 31. If a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him. But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be as one born amongst you, and thou shalt love him as thyself. Lev. 19: 34. Remember them that are in bonds as bound with them. Heb. 13: 3. Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye have a master in heaven. Col. 4: 1.

So I returned, and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of the oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter. Eccl.

4: 1. They shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors and he shall send them a Savior, a great one, and he shall deliver them. Isa. 19: 20. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise saith the Lord; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him. Ps. 12: 5.

Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins. Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness.—Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not?—Behold in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your labors.—Is not this the fast which I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh? Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward. Isa. 58: 1–10. Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people. Prov. 14: 34.

He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God. Micah 6: 8. H. O.

Paul's Salary.

[Concluded.]

Now, brethren, none of us are very rich, but there is enough among us to sustain the teachers and their families; and it is our duty to do it. God has placed them in his vineyard where they are; and unfeeling, indeed, is that individual who has ability, and stifles every compassionate feeling toward a Master whom he professes to love: and gives not the things which his ministers need. The offerings of God in the temple supported the priests and their families. And do you remember that blessed woman who gave "all that she had," even all "her living?" No matter how much, or little, it was all that she had; and it went to sustain the ministers and their families, and it has been an everlasting memorial and honor, thus far, to that good woman. She loved God, and gave all her living, and that proved it.

O faith! What will not faith accomplish! There is nothing more blessed than to take God at his word,—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Let the families of the ministers be sought out, and provided for: and not let him be reduced to the necessity of going into his shop, to procure the necessaries of life for his family, while God has a great work for him to do elsewhere. Let us never say, "Be ye warmed, and filled;" when it is in our power to give what is absolutely needful to make their bodies comfortable.

I tell you, brethren, there is a sure reward, even for a cup of cold water. Do not go to laying up for a "rainy day;" you may never see it. I am myself poor; but I praise God that I am not so poor but that I am comfortable, and have now and then a dollar to deposit in the "upper bank." I have no confidence in any other bank, and consequently never trust nor invest monies any where else, praise God; and I praise him still more that he has given me a disposition to do it. And while I enjoy a competency, my heart bleeds for those who suffer, and especially the families of poor ministers, who have not such a supply as I through the great goodness of God enjoy. I want to have it understood that the ministers are our overseers, to feed us with "bread of life," and with "meat in due season." And we are also the overseers of them and their families, to see that they are fed and clothed.

Come, brethren, shell out; if not gold and silver, open your stores. Ministers do not want gold; but they want something to eat, and wear, and they must have it. And while we appreciate their instructions, O think how mean all our carnal things look when compared with a plain presentation of the "word of life!" It is termed "hard times;" but certainly harder for the destitute than those who are full. How can a christian be griping, parsimonious and miserly, and fail now in the right time to send on his treasure before him? Your money and goods will surely be refunded, "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over"—when the master comes to reckon with the good. But if we hold on, and say, "Soul, thou hast much good laid up, take thine ease,"—beware! O let us beware lest the devouring elements be commissioned to consume them.

I want all to take this hint, who feel in their conscience that they have not done what God requires of them in this matter, and no others. "God loveth a cheerful giver;" and where there is a "readiness to will, so let there be a cheerful performance, also, out of those things that ye have;" and thus prove the sincerity of your love. Remember, "the liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." O let us now remember the Lord Jesus, who "was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor; that we through his poverty might be rich;" and break the precious box, pour it on his head, and heaven will be filled with its odor.

Vegetable Pain Reliever.

We still keep this on hand, and consider it the best Pain Reliever in the market. All the profits we are pledged to give to the poor, by supplying them with the Crisis, tracts, preaching and the necessaries of life. Responsible men can do well by acting as agents for its sale, and will be aiding the poor at the same time. No family wishes to be without it after they have tried its virtues.

A brother who is selling it in Maine, writes:—"The medicine recommends itself to the world." "My neighbors consider the Antalgica the greatest medicine, for what it is recommended to cure, before the public."

☞ All orders should be accompanied with the cash.

Recipes.

BRO. GRANT: Sir:—I have a few recipes which have been left to me by my ancestors, for some years. I am so situated that I can not use them. One of the recipes has been sold for one dollar, by my father. Any one can make from one to five dollars a day, if they can give their whole attention to the manufacture of the article. Any man with a cash capital of five dollars can commence.

Knowing that a great number of brethren must be thrown out of work this winter, I thought I would write you these few lines, hoping you would give them a place in your paper. I will send five recipes for one dollar; or ten for one dollar and a half; which monies received shall be sent for the support of the Crisis.

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

PORTLAND, Feb. 10.

Steamship Indian, Capt. Jones, arrived at this port at 11 o'clock this forenoon.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, was celebrated at the Chapel Royal, St. James' Palace, on Monday, the 25th ult. According to the programme, the day was generally observed as a holiday. Immense crowds cheered the royal party in a most enthusiastic manner. After the conclusion of the ceremonial, the bride gave vent to her feelings and flung herself upon her mother's bosom. A scene in which great emotion was evinced by all concerned, took place. After the marriage, the young couple started for Windsor. On their arrival at that place, they were drawn in a carriage to the Castle by the Eton boys, amidst enthusiastic cheering.

The Queen gave a grand state concert at Buckingham Palace, in London, on the evening of the wedding day. The principal streets of the metropolis were brilliantly illuminated.

There was a serious disturbance at Belfast on the evening of the 25th. Some fireworks having been let off in honor of the marriage of the Princess Royal, a great crowd gathered in the principal streets, and soon evinced a riotous disposition, by throwing stones. Large bodies of the constabulary and police attempted to restore order, but were assailed with missiles; finally the disturbance rose to such a height that the Mayor read the riot act and took prompt measures to disperse the mob, in which he succeeded after some trouble, and by midnight the town had assumed its wonted quiet. Numerous arrests were made.

Operations were resumed on the Leviathan on the 23d and the 25th ult. The ship moved forward about nine feet each day. During the proceedings an iron handle sprung from its position, throwing all engaged upon it in various directions. Several were severely injured.

It was rumored that Admiral Lord Lyons would succeed Lord Stratford de Radcliffe as Ambassador to Constantinople, and that Vice Admiral Fanshawe would succeed to the command of the fleet on the Mediterranean station.

FRANCE.

The American vessel Adriatic, which sailed from Marseilles while under embargo on account of the collision with steamer Lyonnais, was captured in the Gulf of Spezzia by a French war steamer. The Captain of the Adriatic was placed in irons, and he and his ship were taken back to Marseilles.

The Queen mother of Oude died in Paris on the 24th ult.

Nothing further of importance was developed in regard to the recent attempt to assassinate the Emperor Napoleon. The congratulatory address of the Army of Paris to the Emperor says: "Even had the odious attempt succeeded, it would not have overthrown the empire; we should have cried 'the Emperor Napoleon is dead—long live Emperor Napoleon fourth.' Strong in the Consitution and Laws, we should at once have proclaimed the Prince Imperial. Henceforth Napoleon must reign over France. It is our prayer and it will be that of our children."

The Paris correspondent of the Times is informed that Gen. Changarnier is about to follow the example of Lamoricierre, and return to France.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post believes that it has been decided to divide France into four military departments, with depots of arms, etc., so that in the event of the Emperor being taken away by some fatality, France will find material for maintaining order. It is anticipated that the generals most devoted to the Empire will take command of these divisions.

INDIA.

Further details of Indian news brought out by the Arabia contain some matters of interest.

Sir James Outram remained at Alumbagh with 4000 men. The rebels, it is said, were threatening to attack his position.

Sir Colin Campbell was going to Futtyghur.

The insurgents at Kotah were in great force, and are said to have dethroned the Rajah.

The Azinghur frontier was threatened by the rebels, and Gen. Grant was marching towards it.

The rebels defeated at Cawnpore had fled to Bithoor and Calpee.

The Ghoorka column, over 9000 men, under Jung Bahadoor, had left Nepaul for service in the British Territories.

CHINA.

The Paris correspondent of the Times states that besides the screw steamer Saone, which is preparing to sail for China with troops to the number of 700 on the 15th of February, orders have been given to prepare two more transports for the same destination.

RUSSIA.

A new phase of political life has been developed in Moscow. Two hundred gentlemen met at a public dinner to show their satisfaction at the recent measures having for their object the abolition of serfdom in Russia. The authorities, did not much like the demonstration, for police agents were stationed at the doors to take down the names of the guests.

AUSTRIA.

The Austrian government has forwarded dispatches to Paris and London which express a desire to adopt a conciliatory policy with regard to the navigation of the Danube. The 800,000 idle bayonets are therefore not to be employed in defence of a monopoly of the river.

TURKEY.

At Constantinople the financial crisis had passed away. The Constantinople Journal denies the resignation of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe.

Russian agents have been creating a ferment in the Sclavonic provinces of Turkey by circulating the documents relative to the projected abolition of serfdom in Russia, although in Russia itself the same documents are not permitted to be published.

Fresh disturbances have broken out in Bosnia, and the Porte has dispatched thither a large body of troops.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

HALIFAX, Feb. 14.

The Cunard steamship Niagara, which left Liverpool about 10 o'clock on the morning of Jan. 30, arrived at this port at 7 30 this A. M.

The Leviathan had been pushed twenty-five feet off the end of her launching ways, and her cradles are being removed. She had over seventeen feet of water under her and was expected to float on the 30th or 31st ult.

LATEST FROM LONDON.

Governmedt has received a telegram from Malta, announcing an arrival from Bombay on the 22d January, at Suez.

The news is of little importance. Sir Colin Campbell was still at Cawnpore at last advices, but was shortly expected to move westward with a powerful force. Sir James Outram at Alumbagh, attacked and defeated the enemy on the 22d December, capturing four guns, with trifling loss. There are no fresh disturbances in any part of Decan and Central India. The Punjaub was tranquil.

CHINA.

It was said that Yeh had returned an insulting answer to the English and French Plenipotentiaries, and that the two forces would in a few days attack Canton.

Lord Elgin's demand was of the most temperate character, asking for no more than that the treaty should be carried out.

A letter from Hong Kong says that Yeh's answer to Lord Elgin was couched in a sarcastic vein. He informs his Lordship that the question of the treatment of strangers at Canton has been settled by a decree of the Emperor; that Sir George Bonham was made a Baronet for respecting that decree, and recommends Lord Elgin to follow his example; and that as to the demand for compensation, he (Yeh) has demanded compensation of the English government for the losses suffered by the Chinese.

A few days before this answer was received, Mr. Reed, the American commissioner, solicited an interview with Yeh in the city. Yeh replied he would meet him outside the city, but that no barbarian should set foot within the limits of Canton.

Elder Thomas Smith, Eddington, Me., has on hand the different kinds of Dr. A. M. Higgins valuable Family Medicines, and will act as Agent for them. Brethren in Maine, desirin any of these medicines, can obtain them by sending their orders addressed as above.

Obituary.

DIED, in Westfield, Mass., Feb. 7th, Bro. D. N. Stocking, after a lingering sickness of about four months, aged 49.

He suffered much, but died in peace, like a christian. He has been a friend of Jesus for many years, and an ardent lover of his appearing since 1842, when he saw the evidences that we are near the second coming of our glorious King. Although he has fallen asleep in Jesus, he expected to be awakened soon from his quiet slumber.

He found the christian religion fully adapted to the comfort of a sick and dying man and his sun set without a cloud.

Christian pilgrims have ever found a hearty welcome at his quiet home. He was earnest and effective in his exhortations and prayers, and delighted in laboring for the salvation of his fellow men. May the peace of God rest upon his afflicted widow and five children. They are lonely, and need the prayers and sympathies of their christian friends.

Funeral attended by the writer. It was a sad scene, but we sorrowed not as those who have no hope. We expect to see our brother soon, where pain and death will be unknown forever.

Domestic Summary.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 10.

The Tennessee brings Vera Cruz dates of the 7th. On the morning of the 21st, Comonfort, abandoned by his troops, left the City of Mexico, when Pronunciados entered the Palace, and named A. Consigo de Notables as the head of the government.

Notables elected Zeulaga as Provisional President. Puebla, Toucas, and other points within a radius of the city, have acknowledged the government, which has been organized, and nominated its ministers. They, however, up to the 7th, had not a single port, and were depending upon the clergy for support.

Juabazer, as Persident of the Supreme Court, is President of the Republic under the constitution, and has called Congress together at Gaunapanito, the great point of union of the liberals, while Parodi de Clado Artenja l'Egaledo, at several points, was preparing to unite and march against the Mexicans.

Lazard holds Orizaba.

The castle of Perote is in the hands of the liberals.

D'Euseina Elvarez is said to have his forces under arms in the State of Guareno.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS—PROBABLE RETURN OF SANTA ANNA TO MEXICO.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.

[N. Y. Herald correspondence.] Private dispatches from New Orleans state that President Comonfort had arrived there on the Tennesee, accompanied by his two daughters, and that he would leave at once on his way North. The church party brought over the troops that supported Gen. Comonfort, and he then left the City of Mexico for Vera Cruz, and took passage on the Tennesee. Puebla had acknowledged the new ecclesiastical government, but La Lave was at Orizaba, where he had armed the National Guard and would resist the entrance of Santa Anna, should he attempt to come. It was supposed that the City of Vera Cruz would remain faithful to La Lave and the Puros. Gen. Zoloaga, after his election as Provisional President, had nominated the following persons to the Cabinet: Foreign Relations, Senor Suevas; Treasury, Senor Hierso Maldonano; Interior, Senor Larrainzar. The rebel leader, Orsollos and Miramon, were to march with the church party troops to the West to meet the allied forces of the Liberals. It is supposed in well informed quarters here that these movements will result in the return of Santa Anna to Mexico, as the church party were able and disposed to buy off every thing opposed to them.

A STARVING WOMAN.—A lady passing down Broadway, near Fourteenth street, a few days since, when near a butcher's stand, was startled by the excited appearance of an intelligent-looking woman rushing towards her, with clasped hands and a look of dispatr, exclaiming, "I am hungry, I am hungry!" Stepping inside the store the lady procured for her some potatoes and a piece of meat. The hungry woman quickly gathered the potatoes in her pocket, and then seizing the bloody meat, put it to her lips and eat it to the bone! then saying, "I must take this home to Eddie," rushed wildly from the store, leaving the salesman and the lady astounded. Incredible as this seems, we have every reason to believe it true.—Times.

LATER FROM UTAH.—The New York Herald says:

"An express arrived at Leavenworth on the 22d ult. direct from Camp Scott.

Everything was reported as being quiet. All were waiting for the arrival of stock and the spring season to march immediately forward to the Lake.

Capt. Marcy was expected to be back with the animals from New Mexico by the 15th of April.

Brigham Young had delivered another warlike sermon in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, in which he enjoins upon the Saints to stick by him.

Col. Johnson's impression was, from demonstration made in the valley, that the troops would have to fight."

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Bro., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

General Conference.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a General Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, March 16th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters who attended the Conference one year since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who came to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be persuaded to come to the one now proposed may not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded by rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet not as sectarians, to advance party interests, but as Christians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we, like Caleb and Joshua, be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel? Brethren, arouse to the conflict! The victory is sure. Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldier, awake and gird thine armor! "Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the glad triumph upon Eden's plains of glory.

FAITH, HOPE AND CHARITY.

Faith's key will open
God's storehouse of love;
Brings to the bosom
Sweet peace from above.
Grasps every dear promise, and calls them my own,
The substance of glory, in Eden's bright home.

Hope's star shineth on,
Ever and ever;
Faint not, weary one,
Hope leaves thee never,
The sky may be dark, and the pathway obscure,
'Twill beam 'round the heart, through the bitterest hour.

Love's genial sunshine
No cloud can obscure;
Friendship may decline,
But love will endure.
The eye may grow dim, and the brow may be wan;
But love's blessed sunbeam will keep the heart warm.

Then, christian, cheer thee,
Three friends will ever
Twine round the heart, when
All others sever.
Then ne'er despond, should all other friends flee;
Faith, hope, and love are sufficient for thee.

The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. VI.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

5. The New Heaven and New Earth; and the marriage and supper of the Lamb.

"Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever, in that which I create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy." Isa. 65: 17, 18. "For as the new heaven and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Isa. 66: 22. "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3: 13. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. . . . Write, for these words are true and faithful. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End.' Rev. 21: 1–6. "And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad, and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." Rev. 19: 5, 7.

Here we see the import of some of God's promises to the church, through the prophets. "And it shall be at that day saith the Lord, that thou shalt call me Ishi, (i. e., my husband) . . . And I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies." Hos. 2: 16, 19. "For thy Maker is thine husband; the Lord of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel, the Lord of the whole earth shall he be called." Isa. 54: 5.

The bride symbolizes the church of Christ in its triumphant state; which is composed of the righteous dead, raised to life, and living saints changed as we have seen; and now this body of glorified believers is to be presented as a chaste virgin to Christ." 2 Cor. 11: 12; for "He loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself, a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle." Eph. 5: 25–27. "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." Rev. 18: 8. The Psalmist represents the Father as conversing alternately with the Son, and with the bride, whom he calls "daughter."

"Thou art fairer than the children of men; grace is poured into thy lips; therefore God hath blessed thee forever. . . Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre. Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces whereby they have made thee glad. . . . The King's daughter is all glorious within; her clothing is of wrought gold. She shall be brought unto the King in raiment of needle work; the virgins, her companions that follow her shall be brought unto Thee. With gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought; they shall enter into the King's palace. . . . I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations: therefore shall the people praise thee forever and ever." Ps. 45: 2, 6, 7, 8, 13–15, 17.

To the bride he says, "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house. So shall the King greatly desire thy beauty; for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him. The daughter of Tyre shall be there with a gift; even the rich among thy people shall entreat thy favor." Then again to the Son:—"Kings, daughters were among thy honorable women; upon thy right hand did stand the queen, in gold of Ophir." Verses 10–12, 9.

And well might the queen respond, in the words of Solomon,—"The King hath brought me into his chambers; we will be glad and rejoice in thee; we will remember thy love more than wine; the upright love thee." Cant. 1: 4. "He brought me to the banqueting-house, and his banner over me was love." Chap. 2: 4. "My Beloved is white and ruddy; the chiefest among ten thousand. . . . His (voice) mouth is most sweet; yea, he is altogether lovely. This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughter of Jerusalem. Chap. 5: 10, 16.

"And he saith unto me, Write, blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." Rev. 19: 9.—"And he saith unto me, "These are the true sayings of God." Jesus said, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's Kingdom." Matt. 26: 29. O, may all our treasure be there!

For the Crisis.

"Watchman, what of the Night?"

Much has been written on the subject of Time. Many opinions have been given respecting the events that are to mark the ending of the prophetic periods. Very few believe they have ended. I have conversed with several who have been strong in the faith of their having ended, who are now satisfied that no event has transpired of sufficient importance to mark their end. If they have ended, I think the duty of the watchmen on the walls of Zion is to tell us what event marked their end. Whatever may be said in reference to our knowledge of their ending in the future, all have admitted that when they do end we shall know it.

When Brother Miller proclaimed to the world the end of time, his opponents admitted that what was in the past might be understood. It would be a mysterious revelation indeed if we could not understand its fulfillment; in fact, it would not be a revelation. Chronologists differ ten or fifteen years on the commencement of the 2300 days; also on the time of the crucifixion, which event was the key to unlock the prophecy. No honest man condemned Bro. M. for taking the earliest point of time for their commencement, as the event that was to transpire at the end was of great magnitude, and we considered it all important to have an understanding of it.

Is not the glory that was to follow the suffering of Christ, and the resurrection, still in the future? Where is the spirit of '43 and '44? Where the searching for time? Where the searching of hearts and the denying ourselves of ungodliness and worldly lust? These questions bring a sign from every honest heart when we see so great a departure from the faith.

Is not our indifference to the subject of time the cause of it? Shall we settle down on our lees and take up the song of the nominal church, that we cannot know the time; or shall we still cling to the watch-word—"the wise shall understand?" I believe the time will be understood. It looks like fainting by the way to lay aside the prophetic periods, because we have been disappointed in our conclusions. Should we not be the more diligent as every disappointment makes it more sure? There will be a last disappointment. Wo to them that say in their hearts, "my Lord delayeth his coming!" They will hear the words—"depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." May it be the lot of all that read these few lines to be prepared for that day.

As I have before stated, that few believe the periods have ended, are we excusable for not searching diligently for the time? Is not the testimony of those historians, who differ from those whom we relied on heretofore, equally creditable? Yea, are they not more so as the others have proved incorrect? Is it not our duty to bring forth the best evidence we can, and present it to the world? or shall we repudiate our interpretations by our silence, and let our enemies rejoice over us? I hope there are but few who would be willing to say the Lord has not been in the past movement. And if he has acknowledged the past, will he not acknowledge the future?

Who among us is willing to say the Lord has given us a prophecy, and let the devil run away with the chronology—the most important part—and at the same time tell us "the wise shall understand?" There is nothing more desirable to a pil grim than to tell him of the time when he will arrive home. I plead guilty on this subject. May the Lord forgive, and give me grace and wisdom for the future.

For the Crisis.

OH TELL ME OF EDEN!

O tell me of Eden, the home of the blest!
When my spirit is weary and sighing for rest;
Then I'd hear of that land where no shadow shall fall,
Where the sunlight of gladness is spread over all.

When earth's brightest hopes in the dust are laid low,
And faint grows my heart 'neath its burden of woe;
Then I'd look through the gloom to that sorrowless home,
Where no tears shall be shed, where no trial shall come.

When life's chilling tempests brood dark o'er the way—
When Nature is groaning in blight and decay;
Then I sigh for the country the pilgrims shall gain,
All free from temptation, from sickness and pain.

When those I have loved to the cold tomb are borne,
Who bore by my side the reproach and the scorn;
Then I long for the day when Death's Victor shall come,
And the ransomed in health undecaying shall bloom.

I'm lonely and sad in an enemy's land,
Around me are evils I cannot withstand;
Dear Savior! come quickly, dispel all the shade,
And bring in the glory that never shall fade.

For the Crisis.

Greater than He.

It is indeed comforting to the despised pilgrim here, to consider what an exalted position he will enjoy in the world to come. Was not John the Baptist a great man? Although he was clothed so meanly and his living was so pl in, yet he could draw multitudes from the cities and villages into the plains of Judea, to hear from his lips the glorious proclamation of the first advent of the Messiah. Was it not an honor to him to be the chosen of the Lord, to bear the tidings of a coming Savior to redeem poor fallen man, and raise him to a position of glory, honor and immortality? Says Jesus, "He that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he." What a blessed thought! For one I am willing to have my name cast out as evil, and to be counted as the filth and offscouring of all things if I can but obtain to a position of honor in the world to come.

I care nothing for the honors of this world; they will avail us nothing in the kingdom, if we have ever so many of them heaped upon us here. We are seeking for glory and honor and immortality through Christ alone, by patient continuance in well doing. We are kings and priests in disguise, heirs to an inheritance which is incorruptible. Glory to God for the sweet promises of his blessed word! How full of comfort they are! How precious they are to the humble saint! How they buoy us up through this gloomy veil of tears. We embrace them as ours, and confess that we are pilgrims and strangers on the earth; for we are looking for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

We have a few more trials to pass through, and I think they will be fiery ones; but soon the heavens will reveal the Son of God, robed in majesty and beauty, with the glorious retinue of holy angels attending the mighty conquering King of kings and Lord of lords. The great archangel's trumpwill wake the sleeping saints; their precious dust will be collected together and they will arise from their dusty beds, and be clothed with immortal beauty and excellence, and rise up on high with the living changed to meet their glorious Redeemer and dwell with him forever.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. H. JACOBS writes from Homer, N. Y.:—"I am glad that the great truths of the Bible have found way to my heart; that I can say, like Peter of old, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." By the resurrection of Christ from the dead I have a hope of life eternal. What a contrast between this hope, and the hope I once cherished! How beautiful the thought, that those of our friends who are now in the embrace of death, and those of us who shall be taken by the enemy, Jesus will ere long call, with a voice that will pierce the grave. Blessed be God! for the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, and for the assurance that God has given to us that he has raised him from the dead.

Fellow pilgrims, lift up your heads and rejoice! For we who believe that Christ died and rose again, shall be brought forth from the enemy's land. Then shall be brought to pass the saying written,—'death is swallowed up in victory.' Blessed be God! who giveth us the victory through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ!"

BRO. LEWIS ROBINSON writes from Granby, Mass:—"Of late there has been quite an interest upon the subject of religion in this section among the Congregationalists and Methodists. There have been some conversions, and others are anxious. Meetings are also held both day and evening. The times are somewhat cheering, and I hope the result will be good.

I visited our brethren a few weeks since in Blanford, and found them somewhat revived. They are trying to get upon advance ground. Some few were reclaimed that have been backsliden; and are now rejoicing in the blessed hope of the gospel. The people also are willing to hear."

SR. P. BARROWS writes from Bridgewater, Vt.:—"I believe the kingdom and advent are very near; and seeing we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness! O how holy and upright we ought to live! I want to have on the whole armor, that I may be able to withstand all the devices of the adversary. Truly, we are living in perilous times. None but those that endure to the end can be saved. Let us be faithful to our God a little longer; then we shall receive a crown of life that fadeth not away.

I am thankful for the good exhortations and kind warnings we have in the 'Crisis from week to week; and hope we shall' take heed and obey the truth. Let us be awake in the cause of our blessed Redeemer. To the watchmen I would say, be faithful a little longer; continue to blow the trumpet in Zion; sound the alarm, that sinners may tremble and turn to God."

Brother Muller and his Orphan-Work.

Among the curiosities of literature in our day is a work, of which four parts have appeared at intervals, entitled "The Lord's Dealings with George Muller." The first edition of the first part was published twenty years ago; the fourth part appeared only last year. The tone of this very sinular book is like that of the author of the Bank of Faith, who, when he wanted a new pair of trousers, prayed for them over night, and found them by his bedside in the morning. But while Huntington prayed generally for himself, George Muller takes thought of the orphan, and has accomplished in his own way a substantial work that must secure for him the respect of all good men, whatever may be the form of their religious faith.

George Muller, believing himself to be elect, is one of those who thank the Lord that they are not as other men are; it grieves him to think that in the other world he shall be parted from his natural father and his brother, who are not among the chosen. He does not believe in any gradual amelioration of the world, but looks for the return of the Lord to reign on earth, and is not without expectation that the return may be in his own day. In holding those opinions he is perfectly sincere, and he believes, with a liveliness of faith perhaps unequaled in our time, that all things fitting for His children will be supplied by our Father in Heaven in direct answer to trustful prayer. He points to the orphan asylum on Ashley Down, near Bristol, for the justification of his faith. He has now been laboring in Bristol for a quarter of a century. He has undertaken large works of benevolence. He has established that asylum for destitute orphans, which for some time maintained three hundred inmates, and to which a new wing has just been added for the reception of four hundred more. He expects to add another wing and find room for a thousand. For the prosecution of this orphan work, as he calls it, he has received ninety thousand pounds, without once asking for a penny. When he wants money he prays for it, and in his annual reports, which are summed up in the publication we have named, shows how it comes. His reports make no appeal.

The spirit and intention of them is to bear testimony to truth of which he is convinced, that "the Lord will provide;" and so completely is this their intention, that on one occasion, when the annual meeting and report happened to fall due when his distress for funds was very urgent, and to make the fact known would procure instant relief, that very circumstance compelled him to postpone for a few months the issue of the report. At another time of great want, shortly before the expiration of a year's housekeeping at the Orphan-house, when Brother Muller did not know at breakfast-time how he should buy the orphans' milk for tea, a rich man asked him whether the balance in his accounts would be as good as heretofore.

A sign of want would have produced a check immediately, but George Muller only said the balance will be as the Lord shall please. Of course by the annual publication of such facts as these, an appeal is made to the religious sensibilities of thousands. If Brother Muller never told his prayers, and never worked to produce their fulfillment, could he depend on them for the production of an income? In his own housekeeping Brother Muller followed the same system. He destroyed the pews in his chapel; and because he felt that subscriptions to the salary of a minister were called for when it was not convenient to some to pay them, and were not always given cheerfully, he refused to accept any salary at all. Again, because free gifts paid to his hand might be made on some compulsion of pride, for the sake only of appearing to do right, and he could accept only what was given cheerfully, he caused a box to be set up in his chapel, and depended on the anonymous gifts dropped into it by members of his congregation. His deacons opened the box about once every five weeks. Sometimes he had no bread at home, and there was money in the chapel-box. Perhaps he might then pray that a deacon's heart should be stirred up to open it; but he gave no sign of his want to any man, and never asked that the box should be opened, never if money was owing to him asked his debtor for it. Trusting in prayer only, he never starved, and has obtained more than a hundred thousand pounds for pious uses.

So much we have said, at once to secure respect for Brother Muller, and to separate him from self-seeking men, who trade upon religion. A precarious subsistence—one obtained by living upon prayer—is a safe one in his eyes, but it is accompanied by him with the most energetic labor to do good work in the world. It will be seen, too, as we tell the main facts of the story, that whatever error we find in his theology, his view of a Scriptural life tallies with some of the best precepts of worldly wisdom. Contention is unscriptural. Giving offence to the consciences of others is unscriptural. Debt is unscriptural. Two bills he was once obliged to give, payable at a future day; but he did not give them until he had the amount of them already in his house, and what seemed to be most urgent temporary need afterwards failed to tempt him to the borrowing of a pound from that fund, for a day or two. The delay of an hour in payment of his rent lay on his conscience as debt. The tradesmen who supplied the Orphan-house, compelled him by their strong wish to accept of weekly bills for daily service, but whenever the supply of money ebbed, instead of covering his day of need by help of credit, he stopped even weekly payment, and allowed nothing whatever to be bought that was not paid for at the moment.

Now we will tell his story. He was born near Halberstadt, in Prussia, in the year eighteen hundred and five, so that he is now only fifty-two years old. His father, when he was five years old, removed to Heimersleben, four miles from George Muller's native town. He was then in government employment as collector of excise. Of course, we are told by Mr. Muller bad things of his life as an unconverted boy and youth, and it does certainly appear that he was more unprincipled than boys and young men usually are. He was destined for the church, and educated at good classical schools, acquitting himself with great credit as a scholar. In due time he became a student of the University of Halle, and as a member of that University was entitled to preach in the Lutheran establishment. Halle was at that time frequented by twelve or thirteen hundred students, of whom nine hundred studied divinity, and were allowed to preach. At Halle, when twenty years old, George Muller was taken by a fellow-student to a prayer-meeting at the house of "a believing tradesman." His conversion then began, and was assisted by the arrival at the University of Dr. Tholuck, as Professor of Divinity. George Muller's father became angry at the changed tone of his mind, and at his desire to quit the regular Prussian Church, in which only he could minister in Prussia without danger of imprisonment. Muller supported himself then by teaching German to some American Professors who had come to Halle for literary purposes, being recommended to them by Professor Tholuck.

He desired to be a missionary; but, without his father's consent, could not be received in any of the German missionary institutions. Soon afterwards, at the instance of a pious schoolmaster, he began to preach in a village some six miles from Halle, using the pulpit of an aged and "unenlightened clergyman."

It was in Halle that Augustus Herman Franke had been a professor of divinity in the beginning of the eighteenth century, had done charitable deeds, had shown a very lively faith in prayer, and helped by that faith had maintained an Orphan-house that grew almost to the dimensions of a street. "About the time that I first began to preach," says Mr. Muller, "I lived for about two months in free lodgings, provided for poor students of divinity in the Orphan-house, built in dependence upon God by that devoted and eminent servant of Christ, A. H. Franke, Professor of Divinity at Halle, who died 1727." The Orphan-house at Halle prompted afterwards the founding of the Orphan-house on Ashley Down; but Franke, when he built, like most builders of hospitals, anticipated coming funds, and sent a box round for subscriptions. George Muller never spent a penny till he had it actually in his hand, and as we have said, made it a further point of conscience never, in a direct way, to ask for a subscription.

Vacations at Halle left George Muller free to visit the Moravian settlement at Gnadau, where he had communion with men who were in very many respects like-minded with himself. In Halle, too, he joined himself with sundry brothers who were of his own way of mind. When at the age of twenty-two, Brother Muller heard that the Continental Society in England meant to send a minister to Bucharest, to help an aged missionary, he desired to go, and had the consent of his father. Then there appeared to him an opening for work as a missionary in the conversion of the Jews, and the result of prayer and negotiation was that, after much delay, caused by the refusal of the Prussian government to let a young man leave the country before he had paid his due in military service, Brother Muller came to London. He had been reported at Berlin unfit for military duty. The London Society for the Conversion of the Jews received the German student on probation, and, good scholar as he already was, placed him for six months at their seminary, where he was excused from learning any thing but Hebrew. He had also to study English. He was encouraged at that time by hearing of a Mr. Groves, dentist, of Exeter, who had given up a practice yielding fifteen hundred pounds a year to go to Persia as a missionary. A sister of that gentleman afterwards became Brother Muller's wife. While at the seminary Brother Muller's energy was not to be restrained. He began work among the Jews, and read the Scriptures regularly with about fifty Jewish boys.

After a serious illness Brother Muller was obliged to go into the country for recovery of his health. He went to Teignmouth, there preached at the opening of Ebenezer Chapel, and became linked in friendship with the Brother Henry Craik, who afterwards was the associate of all his labors. Doubt was arising in George Muller's mind as to the scriptural nature of his connection with the Society for the Conversion of the Jews. In serving the society he should serve men; whereas, was he not bound to do only the bidding of the Lord? Again, he would need to be ordained, and he could not conscientiously submit to be ordained by unconverted men, professing to communicate what they have not themselves.

Also, he was not satisfied with the position of a religious society so constituted that it sought for its heads, not the best men, but the most wealthy, or those highest in worldly rank. There was no instance of a poor good man presiding over any of its meetings. After much prayer and consideration, he expressed his doubts, and his connection with the society thenceforward ceased. He was at that time preaching in Devonshire, and designing to preach as a wandering missionary in divers parts of the country; but he was eventually persuaded to accept, on condition that he was not to be held bound to the post, the fixed office of minister to Ebenezer Chapel, Teignmouth, with fifty-five pounds as subscription from his flock.

Thirty pounds of that he soon afterwards perilled by a change of view on the subject of baptism. Nearly at the same time, being twenty-five years old, he married the lady before mentioned, and about three weeks after marriage, upon conscientious scruples. gave up altogether the receipt of a fixed salary; after a few more days, he established the box in his chapel, and not long afterwards, after a much harder struggle of faith, he and his wife determined thenceforth to ask no man for help, also to lay up no treasure upon earth, but, giving all in arms, to have no care about the morrow, and trust wholly in prayer for the supply of every want. Thus, for a day of sickness, or for expected births of children, nothing was ever laid by. Excess as it came was distributed to those who needed.

For some years even the rent-day at the Orphan-house was less uncared for till it came, when means of paying the rent could be prayed for. But in one year prayer failed; the rent was not provided until three days after the time, when it lawfully fell due, and that being accepted as a Divine admonition to lay by every week the portion due on such account, it afterwards was cared for from week to week as conscientiously as it had formerly been left out of account.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis. Over all business matters, write Business.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

"WE'VE A CIRCLE DEAR."

We've a circle dear where spirits blend
In union sweet, and friend with friend
(Though sundered far) with pleasure meet
In one true brotherhood complete.

Here gems from the word, and from the mind,
Some in the spirit most refined;
And gems from wit, and fancy, too,
To crush the false and raise the true.

And diversity of gifts are here,
All knotty points are rendered clear;
While satire's whip delinquents teach
To practice truth, as well as preach.

Come all who taste the blest repast,
Prepared by others for the feast;
Say I will not a niggard be,
And they shall have a slice from me.

Now we've commenced another year,
We'll give to truth a hearty cheer;
And try to make the banquet better
With sermon, poetry, and letter.

Yes, we will hoist our sails once more,
And push our barques for yonder shore;
Our working time will soon be past,
And rest and home we'll gain at last.

God's Sovereignty: Man's Agency.

There have been two classes all along who have each taken one of two extremes. One says, "If God works, that is quite enough." Man's agency is thus ignored. The other says, in effect, the like erring thing, only in another way, and with another error; "God's agency would supercede man's, if exerted at all; but since man is called on to work out his salvation, it is clear that it is left to him altogether."

The following, by H. W. Beecher, from The Independent, contains more truth than is usual in such an article. Surely no man can be well instructed in the Holy Scriptures who does not see that "Salvation is of the Lord." Nay, that "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ."

But again, he must read that men are called on to "work—labor—believe—repent, and to love and worship God." Both these aspects of truth stand out on almost every page of Revelation; by consequence that preacher's "light" must "be darkness" who will not allow this—who so confounds these essential parts of the one system of truth, taught with equal "plainness of speech" by the "one spirit" of the gospel. Truth and fact harmonize.

We meet this confusion and delusion at almost every turn of our pilgrimage; and hence the subject needs a frequent illustration, that those bewildered by false teaching may be relieved and consoled.

HUMILITY, even in a very small measure, would seem to demand of the imperious teacher of Divine Sovereignty a recognition of it at this point. God is dressed man,—so governed man, and will so save man, as to exercise and PERFECT and HONOR HIS AGENCY. Divine Sovereignty was never more sovereign than in making man with an intelligent, responsible nature. As a sovereign, in saving men, God employs man's agency.

"WORKING OUT OUR OWN SALVATION.

There is a sense in which a man's salvation is not directly and absolutely a divine gift. It is not made over by God to man as a complete thing. A perfect title to a piece of property puts a man in possession of it just as absolutely on the first day when it is given, as in twenty years after. When a man gives a flower, it is a perfect gift. But the gift of grace is rather the gift of a flower-seed. It contains within it all the elements necessary for growth, but which the sun is yet to warm and develop, until it comes to blossom and fruit. When men are called effectually by the power of God's Spirit, that is purely the office of God, and not a human power. The calling is of God, and the forgiveness and amnesty are altogether of his free goodness. The efficacious influence of the Spirit upon the heart is God's work, and not man's.

But when this has taken place, and men are awakened and brought into the number of God's children, the work is just begun. There is now to be a development of a Christ-like disposition. There is to be a life within, which is to consist in a development of every part of the mind, so that the whole soul shall be re-educated by spiritual influences. There is to be also a corresponding outward life—a course of Christ-like conduct. Every man is called, and graciously aided by God, that he may take care both of the work which respects his own disposition, and the work which respects his outward conduct. And when the Apostle says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," it is not meant with servile or painful fear; it is fear in the sense of solicitude; fear, in distinction from presumptuous confidence.

But, it is added, "for it is God that worketh in you." Here is the inspiration of man's liberty, and the charter of his hope. Standing in the atmosphere of the divine heart, every one finds that his summer is come. The doctrine is not that every man must wait till God moves him. It is a command to go forward, with a reason attached. It is an encouragement, not a discussion. It is wrong by the twists of perverse reasoning to change a divine truth right about, and put its back where God put its face.

Many teachers have made an anchor out of this text, which God spread for a sail, and have in effect cautioned people not to move till God attracted them; as if the chief danger of men was too great alertness in matters pertaining to religion.

Now, this passage opens with a command to every one to work out his salvation. And that every excuse for delay might be removed, adds, for God worketh in you.

When God calls men to awake, it is implied that the morning has come. When God says, Plant, it is implied that soil, air, and summer are prepared; and he speaks to April, not to January!

And when God says, Work! it is implied that there are all those conditions of providence and divine overshadowing which make it worth a man's while to work.

But many say, "How can I work if it be God?" Well, if a father, going out into his garden where his child is at work among the flower-beds, should say to him, "Now I will encourage you, and excite your zeal and interest," what would be thought if the child should suddenly look up and say, "But if you are going to stimulate me to work, how can I work?" Is there any thing incongruous or paradoxical in the idea that, though God worketh in us, we are to work out our own salvation? It is not said that God performs the work, but that he influences us to perform it.

The work of the Spirit is not to supersede, but to help our faculties. It is akin to parental training, to education, to the action and influence of one mind upon another. Not that God's mind acts upon ours, just as ours acts upon others; for we have no warrant for saying this. But the illustration is sufficient to show that one mind may stimulate another to action without destroying its liberty. The young artist, while he sits under Raphael, or Michael Angelo, or Correggio, does not expect to have his work done by his master. He goes to witness and to catch his master's enthusiasm, that his own eye may be fired and his own hand guided like his. We bring up our children by the action of our minds upon theirs. Our influence over the child does not take away any thing from the child's power, but on the contrary adds to it. And so, God says to us, "Work out your own salvation, for I am working in you." It is like a father saying to his children, "Here am I working among you, adding my experience, my wisdom, and my power to yours; therefore be hopeful, and courageous, and enter [illegible] gument of hope and ardor, and not of waiting and faltering. It is an argument to begin now, and not to delay, with the vain thought that God will finally do all the work and leave us nothing to do.

If it be asked how we shall distinguish divine influence from natural, the reply is, We cannot always do it. There is no intimation in the New Testament that anybody can tell. We can know them only so far as they bring forth fruits. If a husbandman wishes to know whether he is under the influence of right farming, he must go and look at his harvests. If, therefore, a man says, "How can I tell whether this feeling is of God or of Satan?" he cannot tell by the feeling, but by its results.

It is the same act that plants good or bad seed. It is the same string and bow, whether a scraping beginner or a Paganini play. The music evolved must determine whether a master or a bungler touches the violin. The human faculties, whether acted upon by sinister spirits, by divine influences, or by natural causes, always act within the lines and limits of their own laws and nature. And it is not any difference in sensation or consciousness which can distinguish divine influence from any other. We must abide by Christ's rule of estimate. "By their fruit shall ye know them." Is the fruit good, is there enough of it, is it continuous? It is very certain that a disposition of deep benevolence, a heart of unfeigned love, will lead a man in the right direction, and he need not spend one anxious thought lest the Devil should have inspired him with such influence.

On the other hand, conceited and presumptuous men are found, who, assuming that they are under the divine influence and guidance, follow out their own selfish and fleshly lusts, and attribute it all to God. But no man can have any evidence that he is moved by the Spirit of God, except so far as the fruit is divine. There is nothing in mere consciousness, nothing in sensation, nothing in any witness or inward light, nothing in any degree or kind of exhilaration, nothing in the pleasurableness or other quality of the feeling. The moral quality of the life determines whether one is a child of God, or of the Devil.

What, then, is the use of the truth of God's Spirit, if you cannot discern its presence or action? It is good for general hopefulness. It gives men courage to know that they are divinely helped, though they may not perceive the special acts. It is an exorcism to fear and superstition. For it exhibits the world, as illumined and overcome by the gracious presence of God working both in Providence and in grace, and throwing around all who will do well an atmosphere of protection and genial incitement, in which they shall thrive and bring forth abundant fruit." *

This article needs to be filled out with the vital truth that man's agency must always be exerted in obedience to, and in the direction of God's purpose, as it is being unfolded and fulfilled at the time.

"Work" implies intelligence and purpose; and hence we "must needs" know the working of God, in order to "work with him."

God was known to be "working in" Paul mightily, to establish the gospel among the Gentiles. But Paul so worked with this inworking of God, that he was "not a whit behind the chiefest of the Apostles!" Acts 26: 19; 28: 28; 1 Cor. 9: 18–27; Gal. 1: 16; Eph. 3.

Thus Noah by faith wrought with God to save both himself and house. Go wrought, by working in his mind by his word and Spirit, a conviction of the world's condition and the way of safety, by his working together with God's purpose, to preserve life and carry forward his plan. The truth wrought in Noah's mind by God's Revelation. Noah wrought out at the building of the ark and by extending the Messiah's ancestral line on this side the flood.

Thus Abraham, throughout his whole course, yielded himself to work out God's plan, that was revealed to and wrought in him. Thus it was with Moses and Joshua, David and Daniel, Peter and Paul. Thus it was also with Luther and his coadjutors at the Reformation. So it will be to the end.

The conviction has been more or less wrought in every mind, living under the gospel, that we are sinners, needing righteousness to be ready for the Judgment. This is the work of God's Spirit—to "convince of sin, of righteousness and of judgment." Those who yield to this gracious "in-working," and work with it and own it by a corresponding life,—those who do not [illegible] "walk in the light," "are children of light." Amen.

That which God does for us he usually works out by us! Thus it was with Joseph and Samuel, and the prophets and apostles. Thus it will be with us. We shall be willing, nay, delight to know and do the will of God, or perish.

AT EVERY EPOCH, God has had a special purpose to work out. This being first wrought into the minds of his friends, has been, according to their capacity, wrought out by them—by human agency; and it all relates to "salvation," complete and everlasting at the end.

LET US BE "NOT UNWISE, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." Christ is coming; let us believe, be ready, and so "work out" the good pleasure of God in preparing a people for that day. Amen!

"So Run that Ye may Obtain."

1 COR. 9: 24.

The Olympic games were established by Hercules in honor of Jupiter Olympius, after a victory obtained over Augias, B. C. 1222. These games were observed particularly, B. C. 884, by Iplitus; and then by Corebus in 776, after the destruction of Pisa. No women were permitted to be present at these games; and those who trespassed this law were immediately thrown from a certain rock and killed! And no person was permitted to participate in the Olympic games till he had exercised himself ten months in the public gymnasium of Elis. The gainers were appointed by lot. In these games were exhibited running, leaping, wrestling, boxing, &c. Besides these, there were horse-racing, contentions in poetry, and eloquence.

The only reward that the conqueror obtained was a crown of olive, which was in memory of the labors of Hercules, who thought himself to be a friend of humanity. The combatants were stripped of every encumbrance; this will doubtless explain the reason why the other sex was not allowed to be present. They were girded about the waist with a scarf, which served as a supporter. These festivals were attended to once in five years, and continued only five days. The games were exhibited at the time of the full moon next after the Summer Solstice.

So run that ye may obtain. The Christian's passage to the "Land of Rest" is compared to the running of a race. Mark the expression, "So run." We remark, that if we would so run as to obtain the prize, we must observe the following particulars, namely;

1. We must heartily believe in God. He that cometh unto me, says Christ, must believe that he is (God is) a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. The inspired Apostle declares that, without faith it is impossible to please God.

2. We remark, that we must repent of, and forsake all our sins. Jesus Christ says, Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

3. We remark, that if we would so run as to obtain, we must love God with all the heart. The divine command is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself.

4. We remark, that we must possess humility. We must be converted, and become as little children—be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." We must trust wholly in God for help.

5. We remark, we must persevere. "He that looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, shall be blessed in his deeds." He that continueth to the end, shall be saved.

Now we observe, first, that those who run in the Olympic games, run all; but one obtained the prize: not so respecting those who run in the road to heavenly felicity; [illegible]

Secondly, we observe, that those who run the race literally speaking, only obtain a corruptible crown. But he that runs in the christian race, has an incorruptible crown awarded to him; and an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away! "So run, that ye may obtain!!"

The End of this Age.

BRO. GRANT:—With your permission I would ask the privilege of presenting some Scripture for the consideration of those who believe in the burning of the earth, at the coming of the Lord, or before the close of the thousand years. I do not intend going into a discussion with any one. But to me the subject is a glorious one, and full of interest. And I am not a little astonished that there are so many who have for years been studying the sure word of prophecy—who have taken the Bible as their TEXT BOOK, and still are Scribes, who seem to understand so little concerning the things of the kingdom. What would any one think, if we were to use as unsound logic concerning the present kingdoms,—say the kingdoms and dominions of Great Britain, to say that it all meant KINGDOM?

It is in the days of the ten divisions of the Roman kingdom, that the God of heaven will set up his kingdom. Then surely the earth is not burned, neither is the whole earth the kingdom. Again, what does Zechariah mean when speaking of the second coming of our Lord, when his feet shall stand on Mount Olives—of the change that will then take place in that land, that it shall be lifted up and inhabited, and in it there shall be NO MORE UTTER DESTRUCTION? Nothing is said about cleansing it by fire. I wish a harmony of verse 16 to the end of the 14th chap., with the view that the earth is burned and all purified at the time when the kingdom is set up. Also read and harmonize Zech. 16, 17; chap. 2: 1–4—11, 12, 13. Now turn with me to Isaiah 11th chap., and tell me if the wolf, the lion, the young lion, the leopard, the cow and her young, the bear and the little child, will all be playing in the new earth after it has been purified by fire. If you say yes,—then will they be immortal? And will they propagate their species?

Then take Isa. chap. 35 and 60. Here we have a statement of the glory of Zion when the Redeemer shall come to Zion; and after the glory of God is risen upon that land, then the nation and kingdom that will not serve the Lord shall perish, yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted. "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, (Zion,) the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary: and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Then gold will be brought instead of brass, and silver instead of iron, "and for wood brass, and for stones iron." Will all this precious material be brought to adorn the New Jerusalem city? At that time "violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou (Israel) shalt call thy walls Salvation and thy gates Praise." Then read the 61st chapter. "For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations." See also the 65th chap., 17th verse, and on to the end.

Surely this state of things cannot be in the new earth, for they build houses, and plant vineyards, and the lion eats straw like the bullock, and dust is the serpent's meat. I believe that when our Lord (the second Adam) shall have accomplished the work that he is coming to do, there will be no serpents to mar the face of the beautiful new earth.

I might quote Jeremiah the 31st chapter, and many more throughout that book, and a host more from Isaiah, and then David, and all the lesser prophets,—and then our Lord's words, the parable of the tares and wheat, and the harvest, which is [illegible] offend and do iniquity, then the righteous are gathered from the four points of compass to sit down in the kingdom. It is then Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, may be seen in the kingdom while others are thrust out. Then the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of their Father. Then the saints will sing "the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints, (or nations, margin.) Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy; for ALL NATIONS SHALL COME AND WORSHIP BEFORE THEE; for thy judgments are made manifest." Rev. 15: 3, 4. See Zech. 2: 11, and 8: 20–23, in harmony, and many more corresponding scriptures.

It is only vain for man to add to the word of the Lord, or to take from it, or to try to make it mean differently than what God has said. Man has been too long engaged at this work, and has profited nothing by it. The words of the Lord are pure words, enduring forever. His counsel will stand, and he will do all his pleasure. And in the AGES to come he will make known the EXCEEDING riches of his glory. Oh! the blessed thought that there is an age of righteousness and peace about to dawn on this blood-stained age. And who would not cry to the Lord to hasten that glorious age?

BRO. GRANT:—Notwithstanding much has been written on the above subject, both in the affirmative and negative, with your permission, I wish to show to those that believe in the affirmative, why I am compelled to believe in the negative. While I write, I wish to be guided by the spirit of truth; I desire to say nothing dogmatically or for the sake of controversy; but it is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, that I desire. A thus saith the Lord I call truth, whether spoken by his own mouth or by his inspired writers.

In the first place, I inquire, was the seventh day enjoined on man as a day of rest, before Moses? I answer no. Because I find a thus saith the Lord to the contrary. Deut. 5: 2, 3. "The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day." And at the 14th verse we find, that a part of this covenant reads thus: "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work," &c. Now, my dear brother, I dare not dispute Moses and say, that not only our fathers, but all mankind were under this covenant, before it was lettered on stones.

I would ask if all mankind were under it since it was lettered on stones? No. For the word says, Deut. 5: 1, "And Moses called all Israel (not all men) and said unto them, Hear O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep them, and do them." This proves to my mind that they had not learned them, nor kept, nor even heard of them until they were written on stones, and delivered to them by Moses; and this covenant, or law "was added (to the promise found in Gen. 13: 15,) because of transgression, (says Paul, Gal. 3: 19,) till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. (See Gal. 3: 16.) "Wherefore the Law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ." Gal. 3: 24. Whom does the apostle mean by "us"? [illegible]

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

"WE'VE A CIRCLE DEAR."

We've a circle dear where spirits blend
In union sweet, and friend with friend
(Though sundered far) with pleasure meet
In one true brotherhood complete.

Here gems from the word, and from the mind,
Some in the spirit most refined;
And gems from wit, and fancy, too,
To crush the false and raise the true.

And diversity of gifts are here,
All knotty points are rendered clear;
While satire's whip delinquents teach
To practice truth, as well as preach.

Come all who taste the blest repast,
Prepared by others for the feast;
Say I will not a niggard be,
And they shall have a slice from me.

Now we've commenced another year,
We'll give to truth a hearty cheer;
And try to make the banquet better
With sermon, poetry, and letter.

Yes, we will hoist our sails once more,
And push our barques for yonder shore;
Our working time will soon be past,
And rest and home we'll gain at last.

God's Sovereignty: Man's Agency.

There have been two classes all along who have each taken one of two extremes. One says, "If God works, that is quite enough." Man's agency is thus ignored. The other says, in effect, the like erring thing, only in another way, and with another error; "God's agency would supercede man's, if exerted at all; but since man is called on to work out his salvation, it is clear that it is left to him altogether."

The following, by H. W. Beecher, from The Independent, contains more truth than is usual in such an article. Surely no man can be well instructed in the Holy Scriptures who does not see that "Salvation is of the Lord." Nay, that "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ."

But again, he must read that men are called on to "work—labor—believe—repent, and to love and worship God." Both these aspects of truth stand out on almost every page of Revelation; by consequence that preacher's "light" must "be darkness" who will not allow this—who so confounds these essential parts of the one system of truth, taught with equal "plainness of speech" by the "one spirit" of the gospel. Truth and fact harmonize.

We meet this confusion and delusion at almost every turn of our pilgrimage; and hence the subject needs a frequent illustration, that those bewildered by false teaching may be relieved and consoled.

HUMILITY, even in a very small measure, would seem to demand of the impetuous teacher of Divine Sovereignty a recognition of it at this point. God is [illegible] dressed man,—so governed man, and will so save man, as to exercise and PERFECT and HONOR HIS AGENCY. Divine Sovereignty was never more sovereign than in making man with an intelligent, responsible nature. As a sovereign, in saving men, God employs man's agency.

"WORKING OUT OUR OWN SALVATION.

There is a sense in which a man's salvation is not directly and absolutely a divine gift. It is not made over by God to man as a complete thing. A perfect title to a piece of property puts a man in possession of it just as absolutely on the first day when it is given, as in twenty years after. When a man gives a flower, it is a perfect gift. But the gift of grace is rather the gift of a flower-seed. It contains within it all the elements necessary for growth, but which the sun is yet to warm and develop, until it comes to blossom and fruit. When men are called effectually by the power of God's Spirit, that is purely the office of God, and not a human power. The calling is of God, and the forgiveness and amnesty are altogether of his free goodness. The efficacious influence of the Spirit upon the heart is God's work, and not man's.

But when this has taken place, and men are awakened and brought into the number of God's children, the work is just begun. There is now to be a development of a Christ-like disposition. There is to be a life within, which is to consist in a development of every part of the mind, so that the whole soul shall be re-educated by spiritual influences. There is to be also a corresponding outward life—a course of Christ-like conduct. Every man is called, and graciously aided by God, that he may take care both of the work which respects his own disposition, and the work which respects his outward conduct. And when the Apostle says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," it is not meant with servile or painful fear; it is fear in the sense of solicitude; fear, in distinction from presumptuous confidence.

But, it is added, "for it is God that worketh in you." Here is the inspiration of man's liberty, and the charter of his hope. Standing in the atmosphere of the divine heart, every one finds that his summer is come. The doctrine is not that every man must wait till God moves him. It is a command to go forward, with a reason attached. It is an encouragement, not a discussion. It is wrong by the twists of perverse reasoning to change a divine truth right about, and put its back where God put its face.

Many teachers have made an anchor out of this text, which God spread for a sail, and have in effect cautioned people not to move till God attracted them; as if the chief danger of men was too great alertness in matters pertaining to religion.

Now, this passage opens with a command to every one to work out his salvation. And that every excuse for delay might be removed, adds, for God worketh in you.

When God calls men to awake, it is implied that the morning has come. When God says, Plant, it is implied that soil, air, and summer are prepared; and he speaks to April, not to January!

And when God says, Work! it is implied that there are all those conditions of providence and divine overshadowing which make it worth a man's while to work.

But many say, "How can I work if it be God?" Well, if a father, going out into his garden where his child is at work among the flower-beds, should say to him, "Now I will encourage you, and excite your zeal and interest," what would be thought if the child should suddenly look up and say, "But if you are going to stimulate me to work, how can I work?" Is there any thing incongruous or paradoxical in the idea that, though God worketh in us, we are to work out our own salvation? It is not said that God performs the work, but that he influences us to perform it.

The work of the Spirit is not to supersede, but to help our faculties. It is akin to parental training, to education, to the action and influence of one mind upon another. Not that God's mind acts upon ours, just as ours acts upon others; for we have no warrant for saying this. But the illustration is sufficient to show that one mind may stimulate another to action without destroying its liberty. The young artist, while he sits under Raphael, or Michael Angelo, or Correggio, does not expect to have his work done by his master. He goes to witness and to catch his master's enthusiasm, that his own eye may be fired and his own hand guided like his. We bring up our children by the action of our minds upon theirs. Our influence over the child does not take away any thing from the child's power, but on the contrary adds to it. And so, God says to us, "Work out your own salvation, for I am working in you." It is like a father saying to his children, "Here am I working among you, adding my experience, my wisdom, and my power to yours; therefore be hopeful and courageous, and enter [illegible] argument of hope and ardor, and not of waiting and faltering. It is an argument to begin now, and not to delay, with the vain thought that God will finally do all the work and leave us nothing to do.

If it be asked how we shall distinguish divine influence from natural, the reply is, We cannot always do it. There is no intimation in the New Testament that anybody can tell. We can know them only so far as they bring forth fruits. If a husbandman wishes to know whether he is under the influence of right farming, he must go and look at his harvests. If, therefore, a man says, "How can I tell whether this feeling is of God or of Satan?" he cannot tell by the feeling, but by its results.

It is the same act that plants good or bad seed. It is the same string and bow, whether a scraping beginner or a Paganini play. The music evolved must determine whether a master or a bungler touches the violin. The human faculties, whether acted upon by sinister spirits, by divine influences, or by natural causes, always act within the lines and limits of their own laws and nature. And it is not any difference in sensation or consciousness which can distinguish divine influence from any other. We must abide by Christ's rule of estimate. "By their fruit shall ye know them." Is the fruit good, is there enough of it, is it continuous? It is very certain that a disposition of deep benevolence, a heart of unfeigned love, will lead a man in the right direction, and he need not spend one anxious thought lest the Devil should have inspired him with such influence.

On the other hand, conceited and presumptuous men are found, who, assuming that they are under the divine influence and guidance, follow out their own selfish and fleshly lusts, and attribute it all to God. But no man can have any evidence that he is moved by the Spirit of God, except so far as the fruit is divine. There is nothing in mere consciousness, nothing in sensation, nothing in any witness or inward light, nothing in any degree or kind of exhilaration, nothing in the pleasurableness or other quality of the feeling. The moral quality of the life determines whether one is a child of God, or of the Devil.

What, then, is the use of the truth of God's Spirit, if you cannot discern its presence or action? It is good for general hopefulness. It gives men courage to know that they are divinely helped, though they may not perceive the special acts. It is an exorcism to fear and superstition. For it exhibits the world, as illumined and overcome by the gracious presence of God working both in Providence and in grace, and throwing around all who will do well an atmosphere of protection and genial incitement, in which they shall thrive and bring forth abundant fruit." *

This article needs to be filled out with the vital truth that man's agency must always be exerted in obedience to, and in the direction of God's purpose, as it is being unfolded and fulfilled at the time.

"Work" implies intelligence and purpose; and hence we "must needs" know the working of God, in order to "work with him."

God was known to be "working in" Paul mightily, to establish the gospel among the Gentiles. But Paul so worked with this inworking of God, that he was "not a whit behind the chiefest of the Apostles!" Acts 26: 19; 28: 28; 1 Cor. 9: 18–27; Gal. 1: 16; Eph. 3.

Thus Noah by faith wrought with God to save both himself and house. Go wrought, by working in his mind by his word and Spirit, a conviction of the world's condition and the way of safety, by his working together with God's purpose, to preserve life and carry forward his plan. The truth wrought in Noah's mind by God's Revelation. Noah wrought out at the building of the ark and by extending the Messiah's ancestral line on this side the flood.

Thus Abraham, throughout his whole course, yielded himself to work out God's plan, that was revealed to and wrought in him. Thus it was with Moses and Joshua, David and Daniel, Peter and Paul. Thus it was also with Luther and his coadjutors at the Reformation. So it will be to the end.

The conviction has been more or less wrought in every mind, living under the gospel, that we are sinners, needing righteousness to be ready for the Judgment. This is the work of God's Spirit—to "convince of sin, of righteousness and of judgment." Those who yield to this gracious "in-working," and work with it and own it by a corresponding life,—those who do not [illegible] "walk in the light," "are children of light." Amen.

That which God does for us he usually works out by us! Thus it was with Joseph and Samuel, and the prophets and apostles. Thus it will be with us. We shall be willing, nay, delight to know and do the will of God, or perish.

AT EVERY EPOCH, God has had a special purpose to work out. This being first wrought into the minds of his friends, has been, according to their capacity, wrought out by them—by human agency; and it all relates to "salvation," complete and everlasting at the end.

LET US BE "NOT UNWISE, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." Christ is coming; let us believe, be ready, and so "work out" the good pleasure of God in preparing a people for that day. Amen!

"So Run that Ye may Obtain."

1 COR. 9: 24.

The Olympic games were established by Hercules in honor of Jupiter Olympius, after a victory obtained over Augias, B. C. 1222. These games were observed particularly, B. C. 884, by Iplitus; and then by Corebus in 776, after the destruction of Pisa. No women were permitted to be present at these games; and those who trespassed this law were immediately thrown from a certain rock and killed! And no person was permitted to participate in the Olympic games till he had exercised himself ten months in the public gymnasium of Elis. The gainers were appointed by lot. In these games were exhibited running, leaping, wrestling, boxing, &c. Besides these, there were horse-racing, contentions in poetry, and eloquence.

The only reward that the conqueror obtained was a crown of olive, which was in memory of the labors of Hercules, who thought himself to be a friend of humanity. The combatants were stripped of every encumbrance; this will doubtless explain the reason why the other sex was not allowed to be present. They were girded about the waist with a scarf, which served as a supporter. These festivals were attended to once in five years, and continued only five days. The games were exhibited at the time of the full moon next after the Summer Solstice.

So run that ye may obtain. The Christian's passage to the "Land of Rest" is compared to the running of a race. Mark the expression, "So run." We remark, that if we would so run as to obtain the prize, we must observe the following particulars, namely;

1. We must heartily believe in God. He that cometh unto me, says Christ, must believe that he is (God is) a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. The inspired Apostle declares that, without faith it is impossible to please God.

2. We remark, that we must repent of, and forsake all our sins. Jesus Christ says, Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

3. We remark, that if we would so run as to obtain, we must love God with all the heart. The divine command is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself.

4. We remark, that we must possess humility. We must be converted, and become as little children—be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." We must trust wholly in God for help.

5. We remark, we must persevere. "He that looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, shall be blessed in his deeds." He that continueth to the end, shall be saved.

Now we observe, first, that those who run in the Olympic games, run all; but one obtained the prize: not so respecting those who run in the road to heavenly [illegible]

Secondly, we observe, that those who run the race literally speaking, only obtain a corruptible crown. But he that runs in the christian race, has an incorruptible crown awarded to him; and an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away! "So run, that ye may obtain!!"

The End of this Age.

BRO. GRANT:—With your permission I would ask the privilege of presenting some Scripture for the consideration of those who believe in the burning of the earth, at the coming of the Lord, or before the close of the thousand years. I do not intend going into a discussion with any one. But to me the subject is a glorious one, and full of interest. And I am not a little astonished that there are so many who have for years been studying the sure word of prophecy—who have taken the Bible as their TEXT BOOK, and still are Scribes, who seem to understand so little concerning the things of the kingdom. Also read and harmonize Zech. 16, 17; chap. 2: 1–4—11, 12, 13. Now turn with me to Isaiah 11th chap., and tell me if the wolf, the lion, the young lion, the leopard, the cow and her young, the bear and the little child, will all be playing in the new earth after it has been purified by fire. If you say yes,—then will they be immortal? And will they propagate their species?

The Seventh Day Sabbath—Is It Binding Now?

BY J. GIBSON.

No. I.

BRO. GRANT:—Notwithstanding much has been written on the above subject, both in the affirmative and negative, with your permission, I wish to show to those that believe in the affirmative, why I am compelled to believe in the negative. While I write, I wish to be guided by the spirit of truth; I desire to say nothing dogmatically or for the sake of controversy; but it is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, that I desire. A thus saith the Lord I call truth, whether spoken by his own mouth or by his inspired writers.

In the first place, I inquire, was the seventh day enjoined on man as a day of rest, before Moses? I answer no. Because I find a thus saith the Lord to the contrary. Deut. 5: 2, 3. "The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day." And at the 14th verse we find that a part of this covenant reads thus: "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work," &c.—Now, my dear brother, I dare not dispute Moses and say, that not only our fathers, but all mankind were under this covenant, before it was lettered on stones.

This proves to my mind that they had not learned them, nor kept, nor even heard of them until they were written on stones, and delivered to them by Moses; and this covenant or law "was added (to the promise found in Gen. 13: 15,) because of transgression, (says Paul, Gal. 3: 19,) till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. (See Gal. 3: 16.) "Wherefore the Law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ." Gal. 3: 24. Whom does the apostle mean by "us?" Evidently it was the circumcised Jews, [illegible]

every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law." Therefore I understand that the law given by Moses cannot be binding on an uncircumcised person. But says one, are not the ten commandmets to be observed by the Gentile church if they are not circumcised? No, because Moses gave them to the children of Israel, they were for them and them only. But we have another Law-giver to whom we must hearken. Peter says, Acts 3: 22, 23, "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Also when he was transfigured on the Mount, "a voice was heard out of the cloud," which said, "this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him." Therefore I understand that not only the Jew, but the Gentile is to give earnest heed as to what this prophet says. Does that Prophet, which is Jesus Christ, our Lord, and Master, ever say that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God?" Or did he ever say, in all his teachings, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy?" No, nothing of the kind, can I find named by him or any of his apostles. Paul says, in 2 Cor. 3: 13—16, "And not as Moses which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that (law, see Rom. 10: 4,) which is abolished: But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in reading of the Old Testament; which vail is done away in Christ. But even unto this day when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart (or mind). Nevertheless when it (the mind, or heart,) shall turn to the Lord, (and hear him instead of Moses,) the vail shall be taken away."

"Hear ye him." When Jesus was asked, "which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Not a word said here about the keeping of a Sabbath. Then of course it is binding on no one that is living under the new covenant, whether he be Jew or Gentile; for the law was "added (to the promise) because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made," "which is Christ." And by his fulfilling the old law or covenant, it is superseded by the new, which giveth life; the old being "the ministration of death written and engraved in stones," &c. 2 Cor. 3: 6, 7. "The letter (of the old covenant) killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." And instead of its being lettered on stone, it is in the fleshly tables of the heart. And it is all made up of love; hear him. Matt. 5: 38, 39; 43, 44. "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. . . . Ye have heard that it hath been said, thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; but I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Much more may be found in the same chapter like the above. Now it is impossible for both of those laws, or covenants, to be in force at the same time. And it seems needless to ask a christian which is now binding, for both Moses, and a voice from heaven says, "Hear ye him." And Jesus says, "Whosoever loveth me, will keep my commandmets."

From Bro. Henry Rust.

Bro. Grant:—I do not believe that man, or any part of man is immortal. Why? Because Paul says to Timothy that the God of the heavens only hath immortality, (1 Tim. 6: 16,) and that the Lord brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. 2 Tim. 1: 10. "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." 1 John 5: 12.

I do not believe, that when man dies there is any part of him yet alive, because the Psalmist says that "his (man's) breath goeth forth; he (man) returneth to his (man's) earth;" and "in that very day his (man's) thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. Neither do I believe that when a saint dies he will go immediately to heaven; "I go ye cannot come." John 13: 33. Nor do I believe that when a man dies in his sins, that he will be eternally burning in a lake of fire and brimstone; because God says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezk. 18. And "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life." And this life is in his Son, and we must get into Jesus if we would have life. We also find in Mal. 4: 3, that the sinner shall become ashes under the soles of the saints' feet.

Neither do I believe that the kingdom of God is set up in the heart; because Daniel says in chapter 7: 27, that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." And "in that day the Lord shall be king over the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one." Zech. 14: 9.

I am looking for the Lord to come, to set up a kingdom here on this earth, under the whole heavens, where, if we are faithful, we shall become kings and priests unto God, and shall reign here on the earth. Rev. 5: 10. For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the trangressors shall be rooted out of it. Blessed be God, the earth will then be pure. I hope to become a subject of that kingdom. It is a blessed hope, a well grounded hope. A hope that looks over all, and through all, right into the kingdom of Jesus, where there will be no iniquity, no more distress of nations. Yours in hope,

Henry Rust.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 24, 1858.

What is Man?—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER FOURTEEN.

In our last article upon this subject, we found the Bible declaring that man was created of dust in the "image" and "likeness" of his Creator.

The word image occurs one hundred times in the Bible, and in no case does it relate to a moral image, unless it be in this first use of the word; but we have failed to find proof that the word moral should be prefixed to it in this passage. In Gen. 5: 3, we read, "And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image." This is the first time the word occurs, after its use in the first chapter of Genesis. Does this relate to a moral likeness and image? We think no one would make such a claim. Why then say it is a moral image in Gen. 9: 6? "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man." This passage seems to intimate clearly that the material organism, that has blood, was made "in the image of God." Man was "formed" "of the dust of the ground." Did he form a moral image of the dust? It is certain that man was thus formed, or else the record is not true.

Says James in chap. 3: 9, when speaking of the tongue, "Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude (or likeness) of God." In this scripture, James evidently refers to the physical organism. "For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God." 1 Cor. 11: 7. Man is the most noble and glorious work of God that was made at the creation of the world. The head referred to must be the visible one which we cover, and not a moral one; neither is it the head of an "immaterial," "uncompounded," "indivisible," "indissoluble," "indestructible," "intangible," and "immortal soul," "without body or parts," which some tell us is "the real man." Says David, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15. Does he expect to awake in a moral likeness? Is the moral likeness asleep in the grave? or is it the man David, represented by thy pronoun "I?" David's death is recorded in 1 Kin. 2: 10; and reads, "So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." This is the one that is to "awake in thy likeness." Says Peter, in Acts 2: 29, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried." And in the 34th verse he says, "David is not ascended into the heavens." But this man David who is dead and buried who [illegible] of his Creator. Paul tells us in Phil. 3: 21, that "our vile body" is to "be fashioned like unto his (the Lord's) glorious body." Here is the likeness again.

It is said in Phil. 2: 7, that Christ "was made in the likeness of men." Was it a moral likeness? Then he was made wicked.

We have now found that man was made in the "image" and "likeness" of his Creator, and that Christ was made in the likeness of man; then it follows, that Christ is also in the likeness and image of our heavenly Father. Let us see if the Bible sustains this point. In Heb. 1: 3, where Paul is speaking of the Son of God, he says Christ was "the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his PERSON." This makes harmony of the Scriptures, and establishes our conclusion. In Paul's letter to the Philippians, he tells them in chap 2: 6, that Christ is "in the FORM OF GOD." Shall we dispute the Apostle?

But we are told, "God is a Spirit," consequently the likeness cannot refer to man's physical form. Angels are said to be "ministering spirits," and yet, they so far resemble men, that "some have entertained angels unawares." Heb. 13: 2. In Heb. 12: 29, it is said, "Our Lord is a consuming fire." Does any one suppose that he is merely fire? In 1 John 4: 8, we learn "that God is love." Again in 1 John 1: 5, that "God is light." Shall we conclude that God is only light? Such an idea is absurd.

Let us look at a few Scriptures showing that man was made literally in the likeness of our Father in heaven. In Matt. 5: 3, our Savior says, "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." He does not say the pure do see him, but they have the promise that they shall. Daniel saw "the Ancient of days" in one of his visions, and says, his "garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like the fiery flame." Dan. 7: 9. The Savior tells us in Matt. 4: 4, that "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." In 1 Pet. 3: 12, we read, "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." We find the eyes of the Lord mentioned twenty-one times in the Bible; ears, eight times, and face, ten times. In Matt. 18: 10, Jesus says, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." How can they behold his face if he h s none? The Lord said to Job, "Hast thou an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?" In this passage Job is reminded of his own weakness. It is said in Exodus, 31: 18, that Moses received "two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God." David speaks of a time when the earth "shook and trembled," and says the Lord bowed the heavens also, and came down; and darkness was under his feet." Ps. 18: 9. These, and many more similar passages show that we are made in the image and likeness of our Creator.

The objector says, "God is every where, and consequently has no form." Our Savior has taught us to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven." Is heaven every where? Then why did Jesus say, "I came forth from the Father, and am come to the world;" again, "I leave the world and go to the Father?" John 16: 28.—In John 20: 17, he says, "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God and your God." If our Father is every where, why does our Savior "leave the world" to go to him? We might bring many passages to show that our Savior is in heaven (not every where) with our Creator. When Stephen was being stoned, he "looked up steadfastly into heaven," and saw Jesus standing at the right hand of God. Why not allow our heavenly Father to be as truly a person as his Son who stands on his right hand?

We are told that he must of necessity be omnipresent, in order to know what is done, and to aid his children. Is the sun in heaven present in every place where it shines?—In one sense it is, and yet the sun itself is in the heavens, some ninety-five millions of miles distant. The mesmerizer is present with his subject by means of a spiritual influence, when personally, he may be several rods, or miles, distant. So, we understand, our heavenly Father is omnipresent by his Spirit, while he is in heaven in company with Jesus who are "ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." Says David in Ps. 139: 7, "Whither shall I go from thy SPIRIT? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" Here we learn how our Father is in heaven, and yet present with all mankind at the same time. Jesus tells us in John 15: 26, that the Holy Spirit, or comforter, "proceedeth FROM the Father." It is this Spirit that bears witness that we are the children of God. It is this which convinces men of sin, righteousness and a judgment to come. By this, the Lord is present, where two or three are met in his name, while he himself is in heaven.

We remark in closing, if we adhere strictly to the Bible, we see no way to avoid the conclusion that man is personally in the "image" and "likeness" of his Creator.

(Concluded next week.)

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

For the Crisis.

Running to Extremes.

The more the mind dwells upon a chosen course of study or exercise, the more it will be drawn onward in its pursuit or enjoyment,—at least, the more it will strive for gratification in that direction. Some, indeed, thus spend their lives uselessly; others bless humanity. Here, by the way, we see one of the distinct elements in the hardening power of sin. Another is, that God leaves the man to the final choice of his mind after the repeated efforts of the Spirit of God to save him. Excess will come in unobserved to overwhelm us in an unguarded hour from this tendency, unless there is a constant labor to restrain.

Take fashion for illustration. It will rule the masses. It is the Diana of Asia, and America, and all between. An almost universal and iron dominion it holds over all classes. Who can stay its power, with this voluntary subjection to its wild empire? No good one, of all the fashions, can be allowed to remain in a reasonable degree of development; but must be pushed, or spread, or pinched, or laced to the extreme. A good style is never allowed to stand; for some will never be satisfied with a medium in any thing.

And here extremes often meet, the mode having traveled the entire circle. A good fashion is to be allowed, if a person please, and can afford it within the limits of duty; but an extreme of fashion is an extreme of folly, aye, of sin, if, in nothing more, in the numerous violations of natural law, and the ruin of health and solid comfort,—beside being a waste of income and cheating of creditors; for all debts could be paid if people did not follow fashion in dress and living,—to say nothing of the popular fashion of repudiating and failing.

The habit of reading tales and romances—by its sickly sighing, languid, or even wild, raging character, feeding the already vitiated appetite mentally, and in the same proportion the moral taste—leads to an extreme of mental dissipation, from which there is hardly any recovery, and but little hope for the usefulness of the individual. Some stories may be very well. Some of the dramatic poets may be instructive and useful. Some books of romance may do good. But the tendency of fiction is to secure for itself a love to dissipation. Often study and labor, means and morals, must give way before it.

A word here to the young. You carry an amusement to the extreme and abuse it, who thus follow the current of intellectual intoxication; not thinking that the publishers of fiction do it solely to make money out of your folly, and would publish something else just as soon if it would sell just as well. While your enemy, the Devil, loads fiction with his own poisonous spirit, under the delightful aroma of a heroic, sympathetic, or sentimental tale, that you may suck down the draught of hell in quiet, and even in tears, over some supposed martyr to liberty, duty or love. That same Cobb keeps writing for his pay, fulminates his "Tale" lies at Newark, where he is sick, and you are paying him to tell big stories about nothing. He keeps the corn and sends you the cob. "The tendency is to the greatest excess. Hence [illegible]

From Bro. D. A. Jones.

Dear Bro. Grant:—Thinking that you would like to hear from Danielsonville, and that some others would like to know how the cause is prospering here, I thought I would drop a few lines to the Crisis.

The little church is growing every day in strength and in the knowledge of the Lord. The work seems to be working to the very foundation, and the truth is taking hold of some of the very best and most substantial citizens of the place. Some, who have always rejected the Bible, and who did not consider it more than any other book, are now searching it as for hid treasure, and we trust they will treasure up the truth into good and honest hearts. Some of the most hardened infidels now say that the Bible recommends itself to their better judgment, and they are very much troubled about their future welfare, and inquire with earnestness whether these things are so or not.

But the best of all is, those that have come out seem to be founded on the rock, Christ Jesus, and are willing to do the commandments of God, and thereby keep the faith of Jesus. You know there are a great many who say a great deal more about keeping the commandments of God than they do about doing them, and at the same time act as if they could keep the commandments of God and not do them.

How I do love these doing christians, not always talking, but sometimes doing; and more doing than talking is what the Lord wants. At a certain time a master told two servants to go and work in his vineyard. One says I will go and went not; but the other said, I will not go, and afterwards repented and went. Now I would ask, which was justified? The one who talked about doing the will of the Lord, or the one after he had repented acted as if he had by doing the will of the Lord? Why, the one who did the will ot the Lord was justified, not he that said he would and did it not.

I think that is the great trouble with some of us who profess to be Adventists. We are willing to talk about doing the will of the Lord, and willing to tell others how to do his will, but the question is, do we do the will of the Lord? not do we talk about doing it? The Lord said that he who knew his will and did it not should be beaten with many stripes.

At one of our prayer meetings not long since, one of the brethren arose and said that he had been thinking that day about what Jesus would say to his children at the judgment. "I was hungry and ye fed me, I was sick and ye visited me, &c. "And," said he, "to-day I have been thinking of a poor brother who has worn himself out in the vineyard of the Lord, and is now pining away with disease, and I thought of visiting him. But I thought that his wife would be all tired out, and would not want visitors, and so I thought I would just put a dollar into a letter and send to them, thinking that kind of visiting would be more acceptable and do more good."

This spirit run through the whole meeting; and the brother was followed by others who declared their willingness to do the will of the Lord as well as to talk about it. And we think that meeting did some good. The Brn. and Srs. made up quite a little purse to send to the Bro. in the name of Jesus, although they were all strangers to him in the flesh. Mark it; they did not promise to do something at some future time, but their religion went pocket deep, and they did it right on the spot.

Would that other churches would follow the example and do the same things. If any church wants to grow in grace, it must do the commandments of the Lord as well as talk them, and then it will bear fruit unto eternal life. My prayer is that we who profess to be the followers of the Lord, may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior with good works, and be prepared to meet our Lord when he comes.

Tobacco.

No. XIII.

We are rejoiced to learn that many of our readers are leaving off the use of tea, coffee and tobacco, and experiencing the most happy results. Our prayer is that all may follow their example, and reap the same rich reward. The universal testimony of those who have abandoned these narcotics, is, "we feel a great deal better than when we used them." Let others make the experiment, and send us their experience. We feel satisfied that the time has fully come when, as christians, we should abstain forever from the use of these flattering and deceiving enemies, which are destroying, piecemeal, many of the best constitutions, and making life a mere burden, filling the mind with desponding fears and gloomy forebodings. Let all who do not wish their children to follow these bad habits, set them an example by their own abstinence. Let all who preach a pure gospel, be "ensamples to the flock in all things."

Says Henry Ward Beecher:—

"Tobacco must be regarded as one of the wonders of the world. In its own nature it can be regarded as only disgusting. Those barriers which are thrown around poisonous vegetables here exist in a marked degree. Its juice is poisonous; its flavor pungent and disagreeable; its effects upon the untempered, unsubdued nerves, are horrible."

Horace Greeley remarks:—

"You ask me for a statement of what I know and think respecting tobacco. [illegible] have a good deal of experience on th[e] subject; in fact, I once smoked nearly [an] inch of cigar myself. It served me ri[ght] and I have never since had an inclinat[ion] to outrage human nature and insult decency in any such way. . . . I have since endured my share of the fumigations and kindred abominations of tobacco, but have inflicted none."

Says Dr. Jennings, when speaking of the effects of tobacco upon the human system:—

"They are 'evil, and only evil, and that continually.' No one claims for tobacco that it is nutritious, or capable of being wrought into living organs. On the contrary, it is generally admitted to be a poison, and a most subtle and potent one. It acts directly upon the nerves, both of sensation and motion." "Reader, . . . permit me to commend to your special attention and unflinching application, the only rational and trustworthy remedy for so formidable an evil. Adopt for your motto, IMMEDIATE EMANCIPATION AND TOTAL ABOLITION. And not only discard at once and forever all use of tobacco, but admit of no substitute of camomile flowers, or other substance, with a view to alleviate the horrors, or sense of depression and wretchedness which will be very likely to ensue upon a disuse of the narcotic stimulus. 'The hotter the battle the sooner over.' There is no danger to be apprehended from suddenly arresting the pernicious habit, no matter how long it may have been indulged, or how strong it may have waxed, nor yet how feeble the constitutional powers."

Come, dear reader, if you are in the habit of using this poisonous weed, summon all your resolution, and by the help of the Lord, quit it forever, NOW!

Appointments.

We would say, to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise [t]hey will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

General Conference.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a General Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, March 16th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters who attended the Conference one year since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who came to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be persuaded to come to the one now proposed may not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded by rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet [illegible] ians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we, like Caleb and Joshua, be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel? Brethren, arouse to the conflict! The victory is sure. Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldiers, awake and gird thine armor! "Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the glad triumph upon Eden's plains of glory.

For the Crisis.

THE TRIUMPH OF FAITH.

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day."—Paul.

The holy saint had fought the conflict,
Had nobly braved all worldly scorn;
In perils oft by land and ocean,
Had calmly, meekly suffered on.
Yet never, never had he murmured
Against the Hand that tried his love,
He trusted ever in his Savior
Who sent him aid from courts above.

Among the hills and vales of Judah,
In distant Syria's untaught land;
Among the many isles of ocean,
On minor Asia's sunny strand;
He long had spread the blessed tidings,
The thrilling theme of Jesus' name;
His deeds of love, his holy mission,—
Lost man to save from sin's dark stain.

To proud Athena's boasting sages,
He boldly taught the "Great Unknown;"
Amid the scenes of Roman bondage
By him the precious seed was sown,
That would in future ages flourish
And unto mighty stature grow,
O'er pagan darkness boldly triumph,
To thousands joy and peace bestow.

His life-work done, his course now finished,
His long and weary labors o'er,
He now beheld the holy vision
Of sacred Salem's peaceful shore.
Life's winding river, stream of crystal,
There gently flowed amid the scene;
There blazed for him the crown of glory,
That far outshone all earth's, I ween.

And calmly now the holy martyr
Went forth to meet his cruel fate;
Ne'er paused nor feeble grew his footsteps
Beneath the gaze of Roman hate;
For now he triumphed in the promise
Of life again in that blest morn,
When long and loud the summons thrilling
Shall call from dust the holy throng.

For the Crisis.

The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. VII.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

6.—The reign of the saints with Christ a thousand years.

In the foregoing numbers we have anticipated those awful events which will open the day of the Lord; and have arrived, i. e., in the description, at the period of blessedness, when the sanctuary is cleansed and all things are made new; when the saints enter on their inheritance. "The purchased possession" being redeemed, Abraham and his seed, through the righteousness of faith, come into possession of his patrimony; he having been made "heir of the world." And now the promise is fulfilled,—"The kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High; whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7: 27.

Then the apostles get their thrones and crowns; "Ye that have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19: 28. "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations: and I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." Luke 22: 28–30. "And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Rev. 5: 11–13.

"After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. . . . These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white [illegible] sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of water; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Rev. 7: 9, 10, 14–17.

We have now come in anticipation and description to "the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3: 21. This is that company, a part of whom have so long waited for those "things which God hath prepared for them that love him;" which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man." 1 Cor. 2: 9. "He hath chosen us in him (Christ,) before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love. Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence, having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to the good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him; in whom also we have obtained an inheritance." Eph. 1: 4–10.

Here is that "fullness of times;" and here is that "chosen generation;" that "royal priesthood;" that "holy nation;" that "peculiar people;" who have been redeemed from death and hell; that they should show forth the praises of him who called them "out of darkness," to the enjoyment of untold glories,—to feed on the fruit of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." "The hidden manna;" the "white stone;" and the "new name written," each recipient will know and understand; and they will be clothed in white raiment, have the new name of the Beloved, the name of God and the holy city written upon them. They will not be "hurt of the second death," nor will their names be blotted "out of the book of life;" "but," says the Beloved, "I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels." "And I will give him the Morning Star;" and he shall "sit with me in my throne." Rev. 3: 21.

"The Lord direct your (our) hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ."

Familiar Letters.

No. II.

To Uncle Fred:—Well, dear Uncle, I have called at "the house of Lydia," and "of Stephanus," and also visited the jailor's family, and could not find an infant child among them! Please tell me, won't you, why you sent me to them? Did you hear that Paul sprinkled some babies for them? If so, give me your authority, and I will pursue my investigations further, for if this can be demonstrated, I must own myself conquered at once.

I see, however, from your letter, that you are not disposed to enter into a discussion of the question of infant sprinkling; but that which has special bearing upon my own case, and in this I agree with you. But still I will grant you all the advantage which you can possibly gain from those families above referred to, for if you can show that there was one infant sprinkled among them, no further argument is needed in support of your position. If you cannot prove this, your reference gains nothing, for there is no more evidence to show that those "households" were sprinkled, than that they were immersed, and, I think, not so much, as I shall endeavor to prove to you in the course of argument. You derive your first proof texts from the Old Testament Scriptures, having, as you believe, direct reference to the mode of baptism. But this you have failed to prove—it is merely inferential.

That the first quoted, "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you," &c., cannot have reference to the ordinance of baptism, as instituted by Christ and practised by the apostles, is evident, from the connection. The Lord God is addressing the house of Israel, who, for their [illegible] among the heathen, and to gather them from out of all the countries whither he had driven them, and to bring them into their own land. "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you," &c. This, of course, was not fulfilled in the days of Christ and his apostles, neither has it been since. The term "sprinkling" evidently has allusion to the cleansings of the ritual law, as has also the term "washing." Some things pertaining to the tabernacle were sprinkled, others were washed by immersion in water, and we shall see by and by which of these terms are connected with baptism.

"And he shall sprinkle many nations." Some render this word "astonish," and there is a show of authority for this rendering. In the Septuagint version published in Greek 285 years before Christ, it is thus translated: "Thaumasontoie, astonish." Hayne's Review, p. 32.

"Dr. John Brown, of Edinburg, a leading Presbyterian, gives us the same import, and is sustained by the learned interpreter, Genesius Roscomelle, and Martin." But, admitting that this is not the true rendering, but that it is rightly translated "sprinkle," it affords no proof in favor of sprinkling for baptism. To the command of Christ, and the example of the apostles and of the early church, are we to look for light upon this subject.

And now, Uncle Fred, I will examine briefly your great objecting testimony, derived from the Pentecostal revival. I am aware that this is considered the "great stone" which no man can roll away; but I shall put a pry beneath it, and lift it up sufficiently for you to look at it on all sides, beneath, as well as above, even if I do not succeed in removing it from the place it now occupies, in your imagination.

The account does not say that 3000 were baptized in one day,—but this side of the stone lies in the shade, and you cannot see it very plainly. I conclude that the Lord did not add to the church any but immersed believers.

We read that the disciples were all with one accord in one place, an hundred and twenty in all. How many of them were women we know not, but probably a large proportion of them were men. Very likely all of these aided in the administration of the ordinance; but if being duly authorized and commissioned by Christ was essential, why then we are limited to the seventy and the twelve, eighty-two administrators, and that would make about thirty-eight candidates to each, and surely it was not impossible for this number to have been immersed in one day.

Now don't you see, dear Uncle, that where you saw an impossibility, there is now a very fair probability?

In regard to the "Baptism of the Spirit," I once reasoned just as you do about it. I could not see any analogy between the mode of the Spirit's advent, and the immersion in water, yet both were denominated baptism. Upon a more thorough examination of the subject, however, my difficulties were removed. There could be no such thing as being immersed in the Spirit, as the candidate is immersed in the water, for the Spirit was to come to them and baptize them. How did it come? It came like the "mighty rushing wind, and filled all the house where they were sitting." Supposing it had been water that thus rushed in and "filled all the house," would they not have been completely submerged in it? And were not the children of Israel entirely surrounded and covered, when baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea? Do not fix your eye alone upon the "tongue of flame" resting on the heads of the disciples, and say that was the "baptism of the Spirit," but remember that the promise was—"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire;" both are in the baptism—the one surrounded them—the other rested upon their heads in the form of cloven tongues.

Do not confine your attention to the "cloud" that overshadowed the Israelites, and imagine that from that the sprinkling drops descended upon their heads, and thus they were baptized; but remember that both the sea and the cloud are embraced in the account, and without the sea towering high, and forming a wall on either side, they could not have been baptized. Let every candidate be thus surrounded, and covered with water, and we will be content to call it baptism.

I believe that I have noticed all of your evidences in favor of sprinkling; if you have any more to present, I shall be happy to hear them. And now, Uncle Fred, prepare yourself for a strong plea in proof of exclusive immersion; for in my next communication I shall put forth invincible arguments which you shall neither "be able to gainsay nor resist."

Yours as ever, Kate.

"ARE WE NOT EXILES HERE?"

BY HENRY T. TUCKERMAN.

Are we not exiles here?
Come there not o'er us longings for a clime
More genial and more dear
Than this of time?

When deep vague wishes press
Upon the soul and prompt it to aspire,
A mystic loneliness,
And wild desire;

When our long-baffled zeal
Turns back in mockery on the weary heart,
Till at the sad appeal
Dismayed we start;

And like the Deluge dove,
Outflown upon the world's cold sea we lie,
And all our dreams of love
In anguish die?

Nature no more endears;
Her blissful strains seem only breathed afar,
Nor mount nor flower cheers,
Nor smiling star.

Familiar things grow strange;
Fond hopes like tendrils shooting through the air
Through friendless being range
To meet despair.

And, nursed by secret tears,
Rich but frail visions in the heart have birth,
And this fair world appears
A homeless earth.

Then must we summon back
Blest guides, who long ago have met the strife,
And left a radiant track
To mark their life.

Then must we look around
On heroes' deeds—the landmarks of the brave,
And hear their cheers rebound
From off the wave.

Then must we turn from show,
Pleasure and fame, the phantom race of care,
And let our spirits flow
In earnest prayer.

Brother Muller and his Orphan-Work.

[Concluded.]

In the year 1832, Brother Craik having already left Devonshire for Bristol, Brother Muller felt that the call to go also to Bristol was from Heaven. He was then travelling and preaching in various parts of Devonshire. A few days before his journeying to Bristol, he went one day to preach in Dartmouth, when, he says in his journal:—"I have five answers to prayer to-day. 1. I woke at five, for which I had asked the Lord last night. 2. The Lord removed from my dear wife an indisposition under which she had been suffering, and under which, have been trying to me to have had to leave her in that state. 3. The Lord sent us money. 4. There was a place vacant on the Dartmouth coach. 5. This evening I was assisted in preaching, and my own soul refreshed."

At Bristol, Brother Muller shortly afterward joined Brother Craik in ministering at Gideon chapel, establishing there (and afterward in another chapel in the town provided for them, called Bethesda), their peculiar system of dependence for the supply of temporal wants wholly on free-will offerings. In the beginning of next year, Brother Muller was reading the life of Franke, and longing to live as he lived, that so "we might draw much more than we have as yet done out of our Heavenly Father's bank, for our poor brethren and sisters."

At the close of the year he writes: "It is just now four years since I first began to cast myself upon the Lord, trusting in him for the supply of my temporal wants. My little all I then had, at most worth one hundred pounds a year, I gave up for the Lord, having then nothing left but five pounds. The Lord greatly honored this little sacrifice, and he gave me in return, not only as much as I had given up, but much more. For during the first year he sent me already, in one way or another, (including what came to me through family connection), about one hundred and thirty pounds. During the second year, two hundred and sixty-seven pounds, fifteen shillings and eightpence farthing. This income of donation from the brethren, apart from the large contributions now sustaining missionary undertakings, and the Orphan house, now exceeds six hundred pounds a year. But from first to last, at the end of each year, all is gone, excess having always been given to the poor."

It was in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-four that Brother Muller founded, at Bristol, the "Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad." He thought believers bound to help in the extension of the faith, although the world was not to be converted until after the ingathering of the elect at the second coming. He could not work with any established society, because such societies bow before unconverted persons for the sake of wealth, and ask money from unbelievers, as Abraham would not have done.

He rejected altogether the help of unbelievers in the conduct of his institution; but if they gave him money for it freely and unasked, he was not, by Acts, twenty-eighth chapter, second to tenth verses, warranted in refusing to accept their contributions. He rejected as unscriptural the practice of contracting debts, and then asking the charitable to assist in paying them. He based all hope of success on prayer. The object of the institution was to assist "godly" schools; to circulate the Scriptures; and to help those missionaries who worked most in what the [illegible] would call a Scriptural way. After only seven months of work this little institution, which has now become a large one, was instructing one hundred and twenty children in the Sabbath school. It had circulated about five hundred Bibles, and had contributed about fifty-seven pounds to the use of missionaries. Evidently Brother Muller is an energetic man.

"September eighteen.—A brother, a tailor, was sent to measure me for new clothes. My clothes are again getting old, and it is therefore very kind of the Lord to provide thus. September twenty-five.—A brother sent me a new hat to-day." A few months later, a fifth day-school was established. In March, eighteen hundred and thirty, Brother Muller went on missionary business to the Continent.

"At Dover," he says, "we left the hotel before the break of day, to go to the packet. All being in a great hurry, whilst we went towards the sea, I was separated from Brother G. and V. I now lifted up my heart to the Lord, as he generally helps me to do on such occasions, to direct my steps toward the boat which went out to meet the packet, and" (the italics are his) "I found it almost immediately. We had, in answer to prayer, a good passage." On his way back, by way of Hamburg, the sea being very rough, the good brother says; "At ten I was taken with sea-sickness, from which I had been kept, during my four previous short voyages, in answer to prayer; but this time I on purpose refrained from praying about it, as I did not know whether it was better for my health to be sea-sick or not."

Defect of health caused Brother Muller to go, in the next autumn, to Portishead, walk, bathe, and take horse-exercise. But he writes: "September fifteen.—To-day I at clearly understood that the person who lets his horse has no license, I saw that, being bound as a believer to act according to the laws of the country, I could use it no longer; and as horse-exercise seems most important, humanly speaking, for my restoration, and as this is the only horse which is to be had in the place, we came to the conclusion to leave Portishead to-morrow."

And now we come to the main fact: One day in November, eighteen hundred and thirty-five, George Muller writes: "This evening I took tea at a sister's house, where I found Franke's life. I have frequently for this long time, thought of laboring in a similar way, though it might be on a much smaller scale; not to imitate Franke, but in reliance on the Lord." In five days he has made up his mind to begin. He is thirty years old. Humanly speaking, there is life before him for the work. He says: "The three chief reasons for establishing an Orphan-house are: 1. That God may be glorified, should he be pleased to furnish me with the means, on its being seen that it is not a vain thing to trust in him, and that thus the faith of his children may be strengthened. 2. The spiritual welfare of fatherless and motherless children. 3. Their temporal welfare." He prays; he calls a public meeting at which he will state his plan, and says on the fifth of December, eighteen hundred and thirty-five—"This evening I was struck in reading the Scriptures with these words: 'Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it.' Up to this day I had not at all prayed concerning the means or individuals needed for the Orphan-house. I was led to apply these words to the Orphan-house, and asked the Lord for premises, a thousand pounds, and suitable individuals to take care of the children." At the public meeting there was no collection—no money asked for, and after the meeting ten shillings were given; but gifts soon flowed in.

The design was to receive only such children as were fatherless, motherless, and wholly destitute; to feed them, clothe them, and to put them out where they could earn an honest living in the world. There should be no voting or canvassing for admissions—no restriction to the charity to children of one corner of the country. Orphanage and destitution were to form the simple claims which had only to be stated to procure admission for a child so long as there was house-room left to give. Any donation given for this object was received—odd shillings, pence, basins, mugs, four knives and five forks, a blanket, fifty pounds, twenty-nine yards of print, one plate, six tea-spoons, one skimmer, one toasting-fork, one pillow-case, one sovereign, fifty-five yards of sheeting, a clothes-horse, two pewter salt-cellars, three frocks, four pinafores, six handkerchiefs, from one friend a flat-iron stand, and from another friend a flat-iron, six pots of blacking-paste, four combs, a hundred pounds, a piece of blind-line and one dozen of blind-tassels, a ton of coals, promises worth two or three thousand pounds, as a gift conditional on five hundred pounds being raised to adapt them to the orphans' use, six little shirts, a hundred weight of treacle, two metal spoons, a kitchen fender and a pie dish, fifty-five thimbles and five parcels of hooks and eyes; such were the gifts that flowed in upon Brother Muller.

He took charge of them all for his orphans. Before the conditions which would make a gift of the large premises had been fulfilled, the good brother rented the house which he had been occupying in Wilson street, for the use of the orphans, fitted it for thirty little orphan girls, between the ages of seven and eleven, and opened it on the twenty-first of April, eighteen hundred and thirty-six. It began work with six-and-twenty little girls, a matron and a governess. At the same time Brother Muller's heart was set upon the opening of a like home for little orphan boys; but, first of all, he would set to work on an Orphan-house for [illegible] seventh year. Aided by gifts little and large—[illegible] tippets, old clothes, bits of bacon, sugar, money—the work went on, and before the end of the following November, more than seven hundred pounds had been raised without one contribution having been asked for in a direct way, by Muller himself, and the Infant Orphan House was opened. At the end of the year, sixty-six orphans were in Brother Muller's keeping, and seven hundred and seventy pounds had been the income of the Orphan-houses. Brother Muller was at work, then, for the establishment of the third Orphan-house, that for boys.

At the end of the year following he had established it, and writes, "There are now eighty-one children in the three Orphan houses, and nine brethren and sisters who have the care of them. Ninety, therefore, daily sit down to the table. Lord, look on the necessities of thy servant!" At the same time there are day and Sunday schools, with more than three hundred children in attendance upon each. The establishment increases, but the pressure on each day for money to buy bread is now and then intense. The children never miss their usual supply, though sometimes, even at dinner, there is no money to pay the milkman in the afternoon, and without money no milk would be taken. Yet the money comes. When things are at their worst, one of the teachers has some shillings in reserve, and gives them. At one such time every brother or sister in the Orphan-house had given up all to supply the daily wants before there came another offering to help them from without. Under pressure of this kind Brother Muller writes in September, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight:—"I have about two hundred and twenty pounds in the bank, which, for other purposes in the Lord's work, has been intrusted to me by a brother and sister. I might take of this money, and say but to the sister, and write but to the brother that I have taken, in these my straits, twenty, fifty, or a hundred pounds for the orphans, and they would be quite satisfied (for both of them have liberally given for the orphans, and the brother has more than once told me, only to let him know when I wanted money); but that would be a deliverance of my own, not God's deliverance."

In eighteen hundred and forty-one, the consciences of Brothers Craik and Muller found that there was spiritual assumption in the box inscribed with their names put up for free-will offerings in the chapel. Other brethren were not less able to teach from their experiences, why should they stand apart from the rest, as if they were the only pastors? Their names were expunged, therefore, and they assigned to the poor all money in the box that was not screwed up in paper as especially placed in it for themselves. In their own houses, as in the Orphan-house, there was the same system of living, and the same occasional selling of books or furniture to obtain food. Nevertheless all prospered. In December, eighteen hundred and fifty, the expenses of Brother Muller's institution were at the rate of six thousand a year, and they were met. The new Orphan-house on Ashley Down had gathered under its roof three hundred orphans—three hundred and thirty-five inmates. There were two hundred and thirty applicants for admission. Brother Muller had felt the extent of the desolation he is working to relieve. He was encouraged by the blessing on his orphan work, and so we find him writing: "It has passed through my mind to build another Orphan-house large enough for seven hundred orphans, so that I might be able to care for one thousand altogether."

For a time he does not speak to any human being—not even to his wife—about this matter; but he prays that he may act not as one led away by ambition to do good, that he may avoid mistake and delusion. His mind being made up, he states his plan, and waits on heaven for a building fund. He will not begin to build until he has counted the cost and laid by the requisite provision; now it is thirty-five thousand pounds that he requires. In large and small sums money flows in, and he looks upon it as some trial of faith that, at the end of two years, he has received donations only to the amount of twelve or thirteen thousand. This fund increasing, it is at last found prudent to begin the work by adding to the house for the three hundred orphans a wing that will accommodate four hundred, leaving the other wing for three hundred to be supplied afterwards. The building, therefore, was commenced, and will be opened, we believe, before the expiration of the present year. More than twelve months ago, at the close of the volume from which we have drawn these very curious facts, Geo. Muller wrote as follows: "Without any one having been personally applied to for any thing by me, the sum of eighty-four thousand four hundred and forty-one pounds six shillings and threepence farthing has been given to me for the orphans." Probably, by Christmas next, the sum will have amounted to about a hundred thousand pounds!—From Household Words.

There are three modes possible for the development of the intellect of an intellectual being; to know, to will, and to do.

The nerve which never relaxes, the eye which never blanches, the thought which never wanders—these are the masters of victory.

Were but human beings always that which they are in their best moments, then should we know here already on earth the kingdom of heaven, of beauty, and goodness.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and state in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all letters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Poetry.

THE CONFLICT.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

When Freedom, on her natal day,
Within her war-rocked cradle lay,
An iron race around her stood,
Baptized her infant brow with blood,
And through the storms that round her swept,
Their constant ward and watching kept.

Then, where the quiet herds repose,
The baneful roar of battle rose,
And brethren of a common tongue
To mortal strife as tigers sprung,
And every gift on Freedom's shrine
Was man for beast and blood for wine.

Our fathers to their graves are gone,
Their strifes are o'er, their triumphs won;
But nobler conflicts wait the race
That rises in their honored place;
A moral warfare with the crime
And folly of an evil time.

So let it be. In God's own might,
We gird us for the coming fight,
And, strong in Him whose cause is ours,
In conflict with unholy powers,
We grasp the weapons he has given—
The light, the love, the truth of Heaven.

For the Crisis.

Doubting Castle is for Doubting Christians.

"The accuser of our brethren" is unceasing in his attempts to ensnare and cast down the host of God, and if they finally escape, it will not be because the "prince and power of the air, that worketh in the hearts of the children of disobedience," has failed to do what he could to this end, but because Jesus, the "mighty to save," was stronger than the strong man armed, and gave us the victory. Yea, we "are more than conquerors through him that loved us." Nevertheless we do well that we understand the devices of the enemy. For he hath come down in great wrath, knowing that his time is short.—With flatteries and frowns, with temptations and persecutions; now with an air of dignity and now with contemptuous invectives, he assails on the right hand and on the left, before and behind, and in forms many times multiplied, until, with all the saved, we shall feel of a truth, "that it is through much tribulation that we must enter the kingdom of God;" and that

"Sure we must fight if we would reign."

The days are perilous, and for the great want of faith they are all the more so. "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" was a question proposed by Jesus, long time ago.

"Truth shall retire
Bestuck with slanderous darts, and works of faith
Rarely be found."

So says Milton, and so the present times say it is.

But of all persons, none are more devoid of "works of faith" than those trembling, fearful souls, bound within yon fearful and [illegible], whose walls are so high and impregnable, whose monstrous gates and iron bars are so many, and whose legion, and argus-eyed sentinels are so vigilant. This is Doubting Castle in which, as Bunyan says, many professors of religion get incarcerated. And this may be well enough understood when we consider that, by grace we are "saved through faith." Grace being given of God—who giveth freely—and faith being acquired on our part in return. Hence it is declared, "He that doubteth is damned," "for whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

But what does and well may surprise us is,—

1. That so many of our own friends—"good folks"—old professors of religion, should get there.

2. To see the perturbation of mind, the fearfulness, and even sometimes the paleness and horrid countenance they exhibit when talking of the day of doom.

3. To see how often times they occupy themselves in arduous and protracted labor, thinking thereby to obtain deliverance; but bringing works without faith, all is in vain except to tighten their fetters.—Whereas, a hundredth part the effort in "works of faith," or put forth from a believing heart, would effectually break in sunder their fetters, and enable them like an angel to leap the highest walls of old Doubting Castle, and rejoice in the liberty of the children of God.

Now to such, a few suggestions may not be out of place.

1. You are earnestly exhorted to believe God, knowing "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Believe all God has said, whether of things in general, or of yourself in particular. Don't question a single promise.

2. Do not rest until you have put to your "seal, that God is true;" that "God who cannot lie hath promised," and that salvation is yours through Jesus Christ, who came into the world to save even the chief of sinners. Beware the devil does not carry you on this point, for if he can persuade you to question the matter of personal salvation, he will immediately proceed to the stronger citidel and tempt you to question the authority of the Scriptures. But this he will not attempt while you have in your own heart the witness of the Spirit—which is given to them that ask in faith.

3. Never rest satisfied with a faith that does not work by love, and that unceasingly. Do not feel that an old hope, except it be a present hope, is a good one. The idea of being saved because we once experienced religion, is a mere snare of the devil, and will fasten you in Doubting Castle if you do not break away from this snare. This is a good test by which may be tested our personal and theoretical faith.

Let us ask—"Am I doing, and that with all my might, the work of Christ, indicated to me by his word, by his providence, or by his Spirit,—and am I making that my special and chief business? And if so, from what motive do I act? Is it because of a living, active faith in God? or, am I acting from selfish motives? God will not fail to bless the disinterested efforts of his people put forth in the name of Christ. But this cannot be expected of those who put self in the stead of God. And remember that to serve God must be the business of our lives. We must always, every day, seek first the kingdom of God and his rigteousness. Do you say this requires a sacrifice? Then be glad you know it, and be glad it is yours to make a sacrifice for Jesus Christ; whether it be of time, talent, money, reputation, home, or country; yea, even, if need be, of life—let all go for Christ. If our eye be single, then shall our whole body be full of light.

4. If with a correct understanding of the Bible faith, and Bible hope, you have all these, and yet do not enjoy the liberty of the gospel, then must you look to some other source to know why you are in this doubting castle, when you are prone to question your own salvation, and are so harrassed by the devil. Perhaps there is some duty you have neglected, some cross you have not borne, some confession or profession you have not made. Perhaps you are incidentally in some association you should not be, or may be standing aloof from the association of Christians, where God wishes your talent. May be you are habitually keeping company with the ungodly—a thing most certain to destroy christian enjoyment. And if none of these things, then ask if you are so diligent in the means of grace as you should be.

If need be, like Timothy, give thyself wholly to these things—and be resolved at all events that you will not only profess religion, but that you will ENJOY religion.

No. III.

TO UNCLE FRED:—"Don't think I'm vanquished"—of course not; I would not care to contend with an opponent so weak, as at the first onset to turn his back and retreat. I will grant you the liberty you ask; so "step aside, and listen candidly to my 'strong plea' in favor of 'exclusive immersion,'" and if you see fit to "resume your weapons" afterward, you shall certainly be allowed the privilege.

If we go back to the first account of baptism, given in the New Testament, we shall find that it supports immersion.—"And were baptized of him in Jordan." "Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water," &c. "Baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water," &c. Mark.

"And John also baptized in Enon, near to Salem, because there was much water there." If sprinkling was the mode of administration, why then a small quantity of water would have been sufficient for the purpose. Leaving the Bible testimony for a moment, let me introduce the testimony of Dr. Wall. Speaking of the primitive christians, he says; "Their general and ordinary way was to baptise by immersion, or dipping the person, whether it were infant or grown man, or woman, into the water. This is so plain and clear, by an infinite number of passages, that as we cannot but pity the weak endeavors of such Pedo-baptists as would maintain the negative of it; so, also, we ought to disown and show a dislike for the profane scoffs which some people give to English ati-Pedo-baptists, merely for their use of dipping. It was in all probability the way by which our blessed Savior, and for certain was the most usual and ordinary way by which the ancient christians did receive their baptism. It is plain that the ordinary and general practice of St. John, the apostles, and the primitive church, was to baptize by putting the person into the water. We should not know by their accounts (John 3: 23; Mark 1: 5; Acts 7: 28,) whether the whole body of the baptized were put under water, head, and all, were it not for two later proofs, which seem to me to put it out of the question. One: St. Paul has twice, in an allusive way of speaking, called baptism a burial; which allusion is not so proper if we conceive them to have gone into the water only up to their arm-pits, as if their whole body were immersed. The other: The custom of the succeeding times. As for sprinkling, I say as did Mr. Blake at its first coming up in England, let them defend it who will." Yet, notwithstanding Dr. Wall thus wrote, he practiced it, believing probably with Calvin, that "by allowing the mode they lost none of the substance."

The case of the eunuch is very plain. "They went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water," &c.

The comparisons of St. Paul in connection with baptism cannot be harmonized with any other form of administration. The burial of the body in the water, and the raising of it up again, shadows forth the burial of the body and the raising of it up at the last day. Planted in the likeness of his (Christ's) death, and of his resurrection. To plant, is to bury, to cover up in the ground; hence it bears no analogy to sprinkling.

"The body washed with pure water." A few drops of water sprinkled on the head cannot properly be denominated washing the body. When we wash our face, our hands, our clothes, &c., we cover them with water entirely. Were a person to sprinkle a little water upon our hands, or upon our clothes, and to call it washing, then we should think them very inconsistent.

Allusion is here made evidently to the custom of the priesthood. When Aaron and his sons were consecrated to the office of the priesthood, Moses washed them with water. He then put upon Aaron the broidered coat, girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound the ephod unto him therewith; then he put the mitre upon his head, and upon the fore part of the mitre he placed a golden plate, the holy crown, and after he was thus arrayed for the priestly office, Moses poured the anointing oil upon his head, and anointed him to sanctify him. Afterwards a ram was slain, and his blood sprinkled upon the altar. (See Lev. 8: 6–19.)

Now in the type you have washing, pouring, and sprinkling; which of these think you, shadows forth baptism? The bodies of the priests were washed with water—the anointing oil was poured upon the head, and the blood of the slain victim was sprinkled upon the altar. Let us examine these "shadows of good things to come," with the "substance," and see if they will throw any light upon the mode of baptism. Jesus Christ is the substance of the typical Aaron, is he not? And must not his body be washed with pure water, before he can be arrayed in priestly robes? Did not John perform the work for Christ that Moses prepared for Aaron? Could Christ "fulfill all righteousness" until he had submitted to this rite? Did not the Spirit's descent like a dove lighting upon him, answer to the anointing oil? Read Luke 4: 18. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel," &c. Does this not prove the anointing? And now on the other point, what the "substance" is, which answers to the sprinkling of the victim's blood, there is such an amount of testimony respecting it that I should have no difficulty in regard to establishing this fact, viz., that it typifies the blood of Jesus Christ, by virtue of which believers in him have their hearts (not their heads,) sprinkled from an evil conscience," previous to having their "bodies washed with pure water." I will cite you to a few texts illustrative of the type. See Heb. 9: 18–23; 12: 21; 13: 12. 1 Pet. 1: 2.

From these texts it is evident that the type of sprinkling the blood for the purpose of cleansing the people, and the altar, with the vessels of the sanctuary, shadowed forth the blood of Jesus, and not the "washing of regeneration," or baptism.

The washing of the priests preparatory to their entering upon their office, shadows forth baptism, and to this no doubt the apostle refers when he says, "your bodies washed with pure water," and the sanctification of the priests by the sprinkled blood, is doubtless alluded to in the previous expression, "your hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience"—how?—by the blood of Jesus Christ. Now read 2 Cor. 1: 20, and you find the "anointing." He which hath anointed us is God." Turn to 1 John 2: 20–27, and you find this anointing to be with the Holy Ghost.

I might cite you to other passages showing how the type is fulfilled in the office itself, and the garments, and the sacrifices, but have not room for this. It will be interesting for you to trace out the subject in the Bible.

I will in my next give you extracts from the writings of learned men, who have investigated this matter thoroughly.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER SIX.

Can one travel; associate with thousands; see men in a great variety of circumstances, with as many dispositions; hear their reasonings; learn their hopes and conduct; without thinking? Certainly not. Well, is it best to think aloud? Some think so and some think not. I believe it is best to tell our thoughts on some things, for the edification, reproof, correction and warning of those who hear.

It has long been the opinion of a class of religious people that the ministry of the gospel was made a subject of traffic by some beside the Roman priests; that a system of trade was often resorted to by which to sell the artificial theology and spontaneous wisdom of large-brained clergymen; and abundant evidence has appeared in proof that they did not err in such opinions. Poor christians, honest and clear-headed christians, rich misers, stingy men, enemies of the gospel, self-conceited men, and money lovers have with one voice condemned the traffic of "hirelings" in the church, and the Bible responds,—"Amen."

Does it not look all out of place to see a class of christians offer a certain sum, which will entice a smooth speaker, or a learned man, or perhaps neither, but a popular one from one place where, if he is a good man, he is needed, to another, to labor with them; to pay large sums to secure the labors of certain gifts, while they turn away from the service, or refuse the labors of more humble, devoted, and useful men? Surely this is wrong.

Well, we condemn this whole train of conduct, and descant upon its evil tendency, unchristian spirit, &c. But, what now? Why do you use a term which looks another way? Because I have been thinking in another direction. The truth is, so much has been said against hirelings that many, even honest-minded persons, have forgotten the gospel requirement to support the truth by providing for its ministers. And many more, not so well disposed, seek to evade responsibility.

I knew a man less than "fourteen years ago," and I am quite sure he was in the body, and labored earnestly and effectually for the upbuilding of the cause of God, and the salvation of sinners,—the same believed duty required him to go out and preach in the "highways and hedges," and compel the people to come to Christ and the truth. The people were glad to have meetings, loved to hear the gospel, rejoiced in "a free gospel." They were awake to hear, and wanted such an one to come often. He thought the prospect good to spend time and pay tolls, keep a team, travel, &c., that souls might be saved. Thus he labored from place to place when he could, and worked with his hands to supply his wants. The brethren were always glad to see him; some were reclaimed, some converted, morality advanced, christianity revived. The brethren prayed earnestly for the preacher, asked God to give him wisdom, grace, humility, and make him useful in bringing souls to Christ; to give him many stars in his crown of rejoicing,—souls as seals of his ministry; to bless him temporally; supply all his wants; take care of his family; blessed God for ever sending his servant among them. In some places, one or two had the mind to give something to the brother to aid in fulfilling their prayers. In some places several were free to do what they could; while in other places none gave a farthing—the gospel was free. If any had a mind to give, it was some one who was too poor to do so.

In such cases I have thought the people had not grown up into Christ their living head; had not a knowledge of all the truth which it was important that they should know. How could one help thinking of such passages as, "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard and eateth not the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock and eateth not the milk of the flock? If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" 1 Cor. 9: 7–11.

And when we see such an one spending his time and money as long as he had any, to preach a free gospel to those who spend their whole time to earn money, and they reaping the fruit of his toils, and rejoicing in it for a time, we dare not wonder he did not beg for money, because he would have been marked immediately "an hireling." But we turned to Christ's discipline and read, "Do not they which minister holy things live of the things of the temple? even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

Who Will go to Joppa?

The time has come when all can labor to advantage somewhere. Calls are from every quarter, saying, "Come over and help us." All can do something if they will only scatter out. For a few years we have as a people denned up, supposing nothing good or worth saving unless it came in our wake or under our banner, calling every thing common or unclean unless we had a hand in cleansing it in our own way. Many need a trip to Joppa to learn this fact, that God is not confined to any place in particular. Some have been to Joppa and were astonished to see the work of God in other places among other christians.

There is a general revival spirit in the land and God seems to bless very feeble efforts, put forth to get sinners converted. I have managed to get two or three missionary teams started out, of lay brethren, to work for God; and their efforts were blessed in a short time, sinners were converted to God and his truth. In one place the brethren held a meeting in a farmer's kitchen four miles from the village of S——, in a heathenish neighborhood, and God blessed four the first evening; a good work started and God was glorified. More real good was done in four weeks than had been done in some large villages for a year.

In another place where a brother went into a school house, the people were not in the habit of attending any meetings. The second meeting one was converted—others serious. The brethren were encouraged to give other appointments.

There are a lot of such places a little way out one side, where the people would be glad to have meetings, where a lot of brethren hived up doing nothing, but debating and devouring each other's positions, killing themselves and others, supposing wisdom will die with them.

Scatter out, brethren. Make the trial. God will bless you, and the people. You used to go out and help others a few years ago. How much better you felt. Come, take a trip to Joppa, and see if others are not worth saving. Think of that poor neighborhood, and old school house, that stands ready for meetings. Come, two or three of you, who can sing, pray and exhort, go together; make a trial, and I venture you will lose much of your sectarianism, and get a larger heart, as Peter did, going to Joppa.

Comments on the Extreme.

Take preaching for another example. Here, from the same element, there is the same danger. Some men may have a call to a particular part of the work, but generally ministers should be found ready to divide the word rightly, that they may give to each a portion in season; and if they should all do it, men's theological structure would remain in proper balance. But now we see a man or a body of men going into extreme upon prophecy, or some other Bible topic, and the people become just like them. Frequently the heart is left barren, while the mind is very much occupied and fed with intelligent conceptions of the divine arrangement and rule. Oftener, however, the extreme lies in the neglect of these themes, and with clergyman and people there is an [illegible] virulent opposition. Both parties, especially the latter, should [illegible] the [illegible] injunction, and "let their moderation be known to all men."

THE CONFLICT.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

When Freedom, on her natal day,
Within her war-rocked cradle lay,
An iron race around her stood,
Baptized her infant brow with blood,
And through the storms that round her swept,
Their constant ward and watching kept.

Then, where the quiet herds repose,
The baneful roar of battle rose,
And brethren of a common tongue
To mortal strife as tigers sprung,
And every gift on Freedom's shrine
Was man for beast and blood for wine.

Our fathers to their graves are gone,
Their strifes are o'er, their triumphs won;
But nobler conflicts wait the race
That rises in their honored place;
A moral warfare with the crime
And folly of an evil time.

So let it be. In God's own might,
We gird us for the coming fight,
And, strong in Him whose cause is ours,
In conflict with unholy powers,
We grasp the weapons he has given—
The light, the love, the truth of Heaven.

For the Crisis.

Doubting Castle is for Doubting Christians.

"The accuser of our brethren" is unceasing in his attempts to ensnare and cast down the host of God, and if they finally escape, it will not be because the "prince and power of the air, that worketh in the hearts of the children of disobedience," has failed to do what he could to this end, but because Jesus, the "mighty to save," was stronger than the strong man armed, and gave us the victory. Yea, we "are more than conquerors through him that loved us." Nevertheless we do well that we understand the devices of the enemy. For he hath come down in great wrath, knowing that his time is short.—With flatteries and frowns, with temptations and persecutions; now with an air of dignity and now with contemptuous invectives, he assails on the right hand and on the left, before and behind, and in forms many times multiplied, until, with all the saved, we shall feel of a truth, "that it is through much tribulation that we must enter the kingdom of God;" and that

"Sure we must fight if we would reign."

The days are perilous, and for the great want of faith they are all the more so. "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" was a question proposed by Jesus, long time ago.

"Truth shall retire
Bestuck with slanderous darts, and works of faith
Rarely be found."

So says Milton, and so the present times say it is.

But of all persons, none are more devoid of "works of faith" than those trembling [illegible] [illegible] within yon [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] walls [illegible] high and impregnable, whose monstrous gates and iron bars are so many, and whose legion, and argus-eyed sentinels are so vigilant. This is Doubting Castle in which, as Bunyan says, many professors of religion get incarcerated. And this may be well enough understood when we consider that, by grace we are "saved through faith." Grace being given of God—who giveth freely—and faith being acquired on our part in return. Hence it is declared, "He that doubteth is damned," "for whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

But what does and well may surprise us is,—

1. That so many of our own friends—"good folks"—old professors of religion, should get there.

2. To see the perturbation of mind, the fearfulness, and even sometimes the paleness and horrid countenance they exhibit when talking of the day of doom.

3. To see how often times they occupy themselves in arduous and protracted labor, thinking thereby to obtain deliverance; but bringing works without faith, all is in vain except to tighten their fetters.—Whereas, a hundredth part the effort in "works of faith," or put forth from a believing heart, would effectually break in sunder their fetters, and enable them like an angel to leap the highest walls of old Doubting Castle, and rejoice in the liberty of the children of God.

Now to such, a few suggestions may not be out of place.

1. You are earnestly exhorted to believe God, knowing "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Believe all God has said, whether of things in general, or of yourself in particular. Don't question a single promise.

2. Do not rest until you have put to your "seal, that God is true;" that "God who cannot lie hath promised," and that salvation is yours through Jesus Christ, who came into the world to save even the chief of sinners. Beware the devil does not carry you on this point, for if he can persuade you to question the matter of personal salvation, he will immediately proceed to the stronger citidel and tempt you to question the authority of the Scriptures. But this he will not attempt while you have in your own heart the witness of the Spirit—which is given to them that ask in faith.

3. Never rest satisfied with a faith that does not work by love, and that unceasingly. Do not feel that an old hope, except it be a present hope, is a good one. The idea of being saved because we once experienced religion, is a mere snare of the devil, and will fasten you in Doubting Castle if you do not break away from this snare. This is a good test by which may be tested our personal and theoretical faith.

Let us ask—"Am I doing, and that with all my might, the work of Christ, indicated to me by his word, by his providence, or by his Spirit,—and am I making that my special and chief business? And if so, from what motive do I act? Is it because of a living, active faith in God? or, am I acting from selfish motives? God will not fail to bless the disinterested efforts of his people put forth in the name of Christ. But this cannot be expected of those who put self in the stead of God. And remember that to serve God must be the business of our lives. We must always, every day, seek first the kingdom of God and his rigteousness. Do you say this requires a sacrifice? Then be glad you know it, and be glad it is yours to make a sacrifice for Jesus Christ; whether it be of time, talent, money, reputation, home, or country; yea, even, if need be, of life—let all go for Christ. If our eye be single, then shall our whole body be full of light.

4. If with a correct understanding of the Bible faith, and Bible hope, you have all these, and yet do not enjoy the liberty of the gospel, then must you look to some other source to know why you are in this doubting castle, when you are prone to question your own salvation, and are so harassed by the devil. Perhaps there is [illegible] you have neglected, some cross you have not borne, some confession or profession you have not made. Perhaps you are incidentally in some association you should not be, or may be standing aloof from the association of Christians, where God wishes your talent. May be you are habitually keeping company with the ungodly—a thing most certain to destroy christian enjoyment. And if none of these things, then ask if you are so diligent in the means of grace as you should be.

If need be, like Timothy, give thyself wholly to these things—and be resolved at all events that you will not only profess religion, but that you will ENJOY religion.

No. III.

TO UNCLE FRED:—"Don't think I'm vanquished"—of course not; I would not care to contend with an opponent so weak, as at the first onset to turn his back and retreat. I will grant you the liberty you ask; so "step aside, and listen candidly to my 'strong plea' in favor of 'exclusive immersion,'" and if you see fit to "resume your weapons" afterward, you shall certainly be allowed the privilege.

If we go back to the first account of baptism, given in the New Testament, we shall find that it supports immersion.—"And were baptized of him in Jordan." "Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water," &c. "Baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water," &c. Mark.

"And John also baptized in Enon, near to Salem, because there was much water there." If sprinkling was the mode of administration, why then a small quantity of water would have been sufficient for the purpose. Leaving the Bible testimony for a moment, let me introduce the testimony of Dr. Wall. Speaking of the primitive christians, he says; "Their general and ordinary way was to baptize by immersion, or dipping the person, whether it were infant or grown man, or woman, into the water. This is so plain and clear, by an infinite number of passages, that as we cannot but pity the weak endeavors of such Pedo-baptists as would maintain the negative of it; so, also, we ought to disown and show a dislike for the profane scoffs which some people give to English ati-Pedo-baptists, merely for their use of dipping. It was in all probability the way by which our blessed Savior, and for certain was the most usual and ordinary way by which the ancient christians did receive their baptism. It is plain that the ordinary and general practice of St. John, the apostles, and the primitive church, was to baptize by putting the person into the water. We should not know by their accounts (John 3: 23; Mark 1: 5; Acts 7: 28,) whether the whole body of the baptized were put under water, head, and all, were it not for two later proofs, which seem to me to put it out of the question. One: St. Paul has twice, in an allusive way of speaking, called baptism a burial; which allusion is not so proper if we conceive them to have gone into the water only up to their arm-pits, as if their whole body were immersed. The other: The custom of the succeeding times. As for sprinkling, I say as did Mr. Blake at its first coming up in England, let them defend it who will." Yet, notwithstanding Dr. Wall thus wrote, he practiced it, believing probably with Calvin, that "by allowing the mode they lost none of the substance."

The case of the eunuch is very plain. "They went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water," &c.

The comparisons of St. Paul in connection with baptism cannot be harmonized with any other form of administration. The burial of the body in the water, and the raising of it up again, shadows forth the burial of the body and the raising of it up at the last day. Planted in the likeness of his (Christ's) death, and of his resurrection. To plant, is to bury, to cover up in the ground; hence it bears no analogy to sprinkling.

"The body washed with pure water." A few drops of water sprinkled on the head cannot properly be denominated washing the body. When we wash our face, our hands, our clothes, &c., we cover them with water entirely. Were a person to sprinkle a little water upon our hands, or upon our clothes, and to call it washing, then we should think them very inconsistent.

Allusion is here made evidently to the custom of the priesthood. When Aaron and his sons were consecrated to the office of the priesthood, Moses washed them with water. He then put upon Aaron the broidered coat, girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound the ephod unto him therewith; then he put the mitre upon his head, and upon the fore part of the mitre he placed a golden plate, the holy crown, and after he was thus arrayed for the priestly office, Moses poured the anointing oil upon his head, and anointed him to sanctify him. Afterwards a ram was slain, and his blood sprinkled upon the altar. (See Lev. 8: 6–19.)

Now in the type you have washing, pouring, and sprinkling; which of these think you, shadows forth baptism? The bodies of the priests were washed with water—the anointing oil was poured upon the head, and the blood of the slain victim was sprinkled upon the altar. Let us examine these "shadows of good things to come," with the "substance," and see if they will throw any light upon the mode of baptism. Jesus Christ is the substance of the typical Aaron, is he not? And must not his body be washed with pure water, before he can be arrayed in priestly robes? Did not John perform the work for Christ that Moses prepared for Aaron? Could Christ "fulfill all righteousness" until he had submitted to this rite? Did not the Spirit's descent like a dove lighting upon him, answer to the anointing oil? Read Luke 4: 18. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel," &c. Does this not prove the anointing? And now on the other point, what the "substance" is, which answers to the sprinkling of the victim's blood, there is such an amount of testimony respecting it that I should have no difficulty in regard to establishing this fact, viz., that it typifies the blood of Jesus Christ, by virtue of which believers in him have their hearts (not their heads,) sprinkled from an evil conscience," previous to having their "bodies washed with pure water." I will cite you to a few texts illustrative of the type. See Heb. 9: 18–23; 12: 21; 13: 12. 1 Pet. 1: 2.

From these texts it is evident that the type of sprinkling the blood for the purpose of cleansing the people, and the altar, with the vessels of the sanctuary, shadowed forth the blood of Jesus, and not the "washing of regeneration," or baptism.

The washing of the priests preparatory to their entering upon their office, shadows forth baptism, and to this no doubt the apostle refers when he says, "your bodies washed with pure water," and the sanctification of the priests by the sprinkled blood, is doubtless alluded to in the previous expression, "your hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience"—how?—by the blood of Jesus Christ. Now read 2 Cor. 1: 20, and you find the "anointing." He which hath anointed us is God." Turn to 1 John 2: 20–27, and you find this anointing to be with the Holy Ghost.

I might cite you to other passages showing how the type is fulfilled in the office itself, and the garments, and the sacrifices, but have not room for this. It will be interesting for you to trace out the subject in the Bible.

I will in my next give you extracts from the writings of learned men, who have investigated this matter thoroughly.

He thought the prospect good to spend time and pay tolls, keep a team, travel, &c., that souls might be saved. Thus he labored from place to place when he could, and worked with his hands to supply his wants. The brethren were always glad to see him; some were reclaimed, some converted, morality advanced, christianity revived. The brethren prayed earnestly for the preacher, asked God to give him wisdom, grace, humility, and make him useful in bringing souls to Christ; to give him many stars in his crown of rejoicing,—souls as seals of his ministry; to bless him temporally; supply all his wants; take care of his family; blessed God for ever sending his servant among them. In some places, one or two had the mind to give something to the brother to aid in fulfilling their prayers. In some places several were free to do what they could; while in other places none gave a farthing—the gospel was free. If any had a mind to give, it was some one who was too poor to do so.

In such cases I have thought the people had not grown up into Christ their living head; had not a knowledge of all the truth which it was important that they should know. How could one help thinking of such passages as, "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard and eateth not the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock and eateth not the milk of the flock? If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" 1 Cor. 9: 7–11.

And when we see such an one spending his time and money as long as he had any, to preach a free gospel to those who spend their whole time to earn money, and they reaping the fruit of his toils, and rejoicing in it for a time, we dare not wonder he did not beg for money, because he would have been marked immediately "an hireling." But we turned to Christ's discipline and read, "Do not they which minister holy things live of the things of the temple? even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

For the Crisis.

Who Will go to Joppa?

The time has come when all can labor to advantage somewhere. Calls are from every quarter, saying, "Come over and help us." All can do something if they will only scatter out. For a few years we have as a people denned up, supposing nothing good or worth saving unless it came in our wake or under our banner, calling every thing common or unclean unless we had a hand in cleansing it in our own way. Many need a trip to Joppa to learn this fact, that God is not confined to any place in particular. Some have been to Joppa and were astonished to see the work of God in other places among other christians.

There is a general revival spirit in the land and God seems to bless very feeble efforts, put forth to get sinners converted. I have managed to get two or three missionary teams started out, of lay brethren, to work for God; and their efforts were blessed in a short time, sinners were converted to God and his truth. In one place the brethren held a meeting in a farmer's kitchen four miles from the village of S——, in a heathenish neighborhood, and God blessed four the first evening; a good work started and God was glorified. More real good was done in four weeks than had been done in some large villages for a year.

In another place where a brother went into a school house, the people were not in the habit of attending any meetings. The second meeting one was converted—others serious. The brethren were encouraged to give other appointments.

There are a lot of such places a little way out one side, where the people would be glad to have meetings, where a lot of brethren hived up doing nothing, but debating and devouring each other's positions, killing themselves and others, supposing wisdom will die with them.

Scatter out, brethren. Make the trial. God will bless you, and the people. You used to go out and help others a few years ago. How much better you felt. Come, take a trip to Joppa, and see if others are not worth saving. Think of that poor neighborhood, and old school house, that stands ready for meetings. Come, two or three of you, who can sing, pray and exhort, go together; make a trial, and I venture you will lose much of your sectarianism, and get a larger heart, as Peter did, going to Joppa.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Comments on the Extreme.

Take preaching for another example. Here, from the same element, there is the same danger. Some men may have a call to a particular part of the work, but generally ministers should be found ready to divide the word rightly, that they may give to each a portion in season; and if they should all do it, men's theological structure would remain in proper balance. But now we see a man or a body of men going into extreme upon prophecy, or some other Bible topic, and the people become just like them. Frequently the heart is left barren, while the mind is very much occupied and fed with intelligent conceptions of the divine arrangement and rule. Oftener, however, the extreme lies in the neglect of these things, and both clergyman and people [illegible] [illegible] virulent opposition. Both [illegible] especially the latter, should [illegible] injunction, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] known to all men.

We think of a meeting where there is nothing said. It must be an excess of silence,—still it may have its uses. Silence is often the evidence of wisdom. The remark of the Quaker, who, when told by a friend that his silent meeting was enough to kill the devil,—said, "that's the very thing we intended to do,"—shows that the meeting had resolved upon extreme measures—perhaps a dernier resort—since the tongue is an unruly member; a perfect reservoir of hell-fire.

Another extreme is that of religious excitement; not so much in our lives or experience, but in exercises at meeting—in talking without any thing to say—sound and not sense—noise and no power. I think this looks a little like the extreme of the matter—it probably sometimes may be considered the last resort to drive out the enemy. Now I will complain of one usage which prevails with some extreme men,—that of exhorting always after the sermon. Let me just say that, in the opinion of some of the best and most pious, you sometimes spoil the meeting. Sometimes you improve it; but I think it is a fault to always do it.

What a financial crisis the country suffers at this time! Crash after crash through the whole land shows that the business of the country has been conducted with some ruinous and fatal mismanagement. What is the cause? Nothing but extreme in every thing. Men should have learned long ago to avoid and escape the shoals of extreme. But the tendency to the greatest excess in worldly things, leads men to ruin,—for this world and the world to come. With the idea of an extremely long pen—not particularly sharp—I shall close this article.

W. S. C.

From Bro. E. R. Converse.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—What poor, weak and dependent creatures we are. What a frail nature we at the present possess. How fast we are crumbling back to our mother dust, at the touch of the finger of Time. Surely every man in his best state is altogether vanity. Ps. 39: 5. When we look at our natures in the light of reason and common sense, or in the light of inspiration, and there learn the truthful, yet solemn fact, that we at the present possess no other than a corruptible, decaying and dying nature, and that without some foreign aid we must, soul, body, mind and spirit, perish forever, like the brute creation, it leads us to see and feel the need of a Savior. Ah yes. Such a Savior becomes us, as the one who has abolished death, and brought "light and immortality to light through the gospel." One that can not only forgive our sins, but can "raise us from the dead and give us eternal life." One that can "change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body." One that can give immortal natures. Strange that poor, dying mortals should ever boast of possessing what God only hath, viz., immortality! Such a doctrine to my mind undermines the value or necessity of a Savior, in a very marked degree. Was immortality ever lost? Can it become corrupt? Answer ye who claim that a part of man is immortal. It certainly must be in a degraded or fallen state in order to have need of help, or a Savior. I shall not attempt to describe what the present condition of man would be in, had he not sinned in the garden of Eden. But we know that man sinned, Gen. 3: 6. And by sinning man became a "dying creature." Gen. 2: 17; Rom. 5: 12. "And lest the man after he had sinned should put forth his hand and take of the tree of life and eat and live forever; (and thus have a nature that would not die,) the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken. And God placed at the east end of the garden of Eden, cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life." See Gen. 3: 22–24. "And unto Adam he said, because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat of the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it thou wast taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. 3: 17–19.

Thus we see by our first parents' disobeying God and eating of the tree of which he commanded them not to eat, brought [illegible] upon themselves and their posterity; [illegible] it would have been to every son and daughter of Adam had not God made further provision for man.—And it is from this condition that God promises to rescue us. Then there is hope for poor mortal man after all! Praise God there is, and a good one it is, too. Hear what his Son says; "God so loved the (condemned) world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." John 3: 16. Believe it, fellow mortals! O believe in Jesus! and by so doing you will be saved from everlasting death.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 3, 1858.

What is Man?—Ps. 8: 4.

NUMBER FIFTEEN.

With this number, we close our series of articles written in answer to the question,—"What is man?" We have endeavored to prove from a harmony of Scripture testimony, that the whole man,—the accountable being, was made "of the dust of the ground;" that the truth of the Bible is addressed to him as a unit, and not as a double entity; that the "breath of life" breathed into his nostrils is not the man, or the conscious, accountable part, but that which sets the human machinery in motion; that this "breath of life" is the same in every living creature, and when possessed of it, they are called living souls; that death invariably takes place when it is taken from man or any other animal; that the whole man remains unconscious between death and the resurrection, and will never live again unless the dead are raised; that when a man is in sheol or hades, he is simply in the grave, where there is "no knowledge;" that wicked men are to "be punished with everlasting destruction, and not with eternal torment; that immortality is to be obtained "by patient continuance in well doing," and to be put on at the resurrection when the Lord comes; and that man was made literally in the image and likeness of his Creator.

We will now present a few facts which may be useful to the Bible student.

N'sha-mah, the word rendered breath in Gen. 2: 7, is found in the Old Testament twenty-four times; and is translated, "breath" and "breathed," seventeen times; (Gen. 2: 7; 7: 22; Deut. 20: 16; Jos. 10: 40; 11: 11, 14; 1 Kin. 15: 29; 17: 17; Job 27: 3; 33: 4; 34: 14; 37: 10; Ps. 150: 6; Isa. 2: 22; 30: 33; 32: 5; Dan. 10: 17.) "The blast of," three times; (2 Sam. 22: 16; Job 4: 9; Ps. 18: 15,)—"the souls" once; (Isa. 57: 16,)—"Spirit" twice, (Job 26; 4; Prov. 20, 27,)—and "the inspiration" once, (Job 32: 8.)

Ruakh, the word rendered spirit in Eccl. 12: 7, where the spirit is said to return to God, is found four hundred and three times in the Old Testament, is rendered in seventeen different ways, but is not once translated soul. Pneuma, the corresponding word in the Greek, is found three hundred and eighty-six times in the New Testament, is rendered in eight different ways, but is not once rendered soul. These taken together make seven hundred and eighty-nine times. If soul and spirit are synonymous, why is not this word sometimes rendered soul? If this is the conscious part and never dies, why do we not find some passage teaching that the spirit is immortal?

Nephesh, the only word rendered soul (with two exceptions) in the Old Testament, is found eight hundred and twenty-eight times, but it is never said to be an immortal soul. This word is translated in forty-four different ways, and is thirty-three times applied to beasts. The two exceptions are found in Job 30: 15 and Isa. 57: 16. In Job the word rendered soul is n'dee-vah; in Isaiah, n'sha-mah. These two added to the eight hundred and twenty-eight make eight hundred and thirty.

Psukee, the Greek word rendered soul in the New Testament, and corresponding with nephesh in the Old Testament, is found one hundred and five times, and is rendered in eight different ways. It is rendered soul sixty times and life and lives forty times. These added to those in the Old Testament, make nine hundred and thirty-five; but in all these we are not once told that the soul is immortal, but frequently read about souls being killed. If we add the words rendered soul and spirit together, they amount to seventeen hundred and twenty-four. Why is the whole Bible silent on the immortality of the soul and spirit, if such a doctrine be true?

In the Old Testament, we find the words rendered "die," "death," and "dead," two thousand and eighty-six times; and the corresponding words are found in the New Testament six hundred and forty-six times, making in all two thousand, seven hundred and thirty-two; and yet in all these we do not find a hint that the man is alive between death and the resurrection. Candid reader, what shall we do with these facts? Shall we still declare, in opposition to all these, that the soul is immortal, that man never dies? We cannot do it, without joining with Satan, and contradicting the Lord. Let objectors examine every passage where the words soul, spirit, die, death and dead occur, and then we think they will cease their opposition, and acknowledge that the Bible teaches us that the whole man dies, and remains unconscious till the resurrection "at the last day."

Paul says, "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you; . . . I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Paul has not said one word about an immortal soul, or spirit, or about eternal torment; consequently, it is not "profitable," nor in harmony with "the counsel of God."

"Inquiries."

The following inquiries are from "A Brother," who wishes to know our "opinion" on the points mentioned. We are not fully satisfied ourselves in relation to them all, but will give our opinion, according to the best light that we now see.

1. "Do you believe that the resurrected and translated saints are taken to meet the Lord in the mid heavens immediately upon the Lord's second advent; and then will directly descend to this earth?"

In answer to the first part of this question, we would say, yes. For Paul says, in 1 Cor. 15: 51–52, "Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Here we learn that the righteous who are living when "the last trump" shall sound, will "never die," but when the dead are raised, the living will be "changed," "for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." In 1 Thess. 4: 16–18, Paul rehearses the matter and says,

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

We learned from Paul's letter to the Corinthians, that the dead are raised, and the living changed at the sounding of "the last trump;" and from his letter to the Thessalonians, that when the trump sounds, the Lord descends, the dead are raised, the living changed, and all "caught up together" "to meet the Lord."

In relation to the second part of the question, whether they "will directly descend to the earth," we remark, we know of no plain scripture with which to answer this inquiry; but we believe they will return as soon as the sanctuary is cleansed, referred to in Dan. 8: 13–14; or in other words, as soon as the kingdom is prepared for the saints. A little time, we know not how long, must be spent by the angels when "they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." Matt. 13: 41. This being done, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 43. This same great truth is clearly expressed in Matt. 25: 34, where the Lord says, after the inheritance is prepared, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

2. If not, where will the thousand years be spent?

And do the Scriptures say how or for what purpose they (the thousand years) are appointed?

We think they will be spent on the earth after the sanctuary is cleansed, during which, Rev. 20: 6 will be fulfilled. "They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Those who reign with him, we understand to be the resurrected and translated saints. We think these thousand years are specially appointed for the Sabbath of rest, to complete the great week, in which each day is "a thousand years," and which was typified by the six days of creation, and the seventh day of rest. This was the faith of the Jewish and early christian churches. As each day of creation represents a thousand years of this world's history, we see how the Lord has declared "the end from the beginning." Isa. 46: 10. When six thousand years are passed since creation, we expect the seventh trumpet will sound, the dead be raised, and Christ's kingdom set up in the cleansed sanctuary, or the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

3. "Does the general conflagration constitute the day that shall burn as an oven; (spoken of in Mal. 4: 1,) and if so, when does it come,—at the beginning or ending of the thousand years?"

We think it takes place at the end of the thousand years. We learn from 2 Pet. 2: 6, that the destruction of the Sodomites was set forth as "an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly." They were destroyed as in a lake of fire and brimstone. When we turn to Rev. 19: 20, and 20: 9, 14, we find the final punishment of the wicked to be after the "ensample" given.—They "were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." But when Sodom and the other cities of the plain were destroyed by fire and brimstone, other cities remained unharmed; why then, may not the saints of God be safe in their Eden home, while the wicked are being destroyed by fire, after their resurrection, at the end of the thousand years? The Lord declares that he will punish "the high ones," "and the kings of the earth upon the earth." Isa. 24: 21. Again, in Prov. 11: 31, we read, "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner." Solomon says, "the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." Prov. 10: 30. The Savior says, "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. 5: 5. David says in Ps. 37: 34, "when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it."

Let us recapitulate.

1. "The Lord himself shall descend." 1 Thess. 4: 16.

2. "The dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4: 16.

3. The living christians "shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 52.

4. We all "shall be caught up together." 1 Thess. 4: 17.

5. "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed," or the land promised to Abraham. Dan. 8: 14.

6. We shall return and "reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 10.

7. We shall reign "with Christ a thousand years." Rev. 20: 4.

8. "The rest of the dead (the wicked) lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Rev. 20: 5.

9. The plain inference is, from the last passage quoted, that the rest of the dead, or the wicked, will live again at the end of the thousand years.

10. They are judged, condemned, and "cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Rev. 20: 14.

11. When the wicked are "devoured" by fire, we have the burning day of Malachi and Peter, or "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Mal. 4: 1; 2 Pet. 3: 7.

12. After the remainder of the earth, not included in the sanctuary, is purified by fire, "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7: 27. "The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." Dan. 7: 18. Then "all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. 14: 21. Then, the "meek . . . inherit the earth." Then, "Every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them" will be "heard . . . saying, blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Rev. 5: 13.

Question.

Bro. D. Carlisle, Ill., wishes an explanation of Luke 20: 37–38.

"Now that the dead are raised, (or 'shall rise again,' as rendered by Wm. Tyndale, in the first printed English edition of the New Testament,) even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him."

Observe, the Savior is talking with the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection of the dead. It is the [illegible] of that which is dead, not the [illegible] of something that [illegible] which Jesus is trying to prove; [illegible] and Jacob were [illegible] then, we can see no force to o[illegible] argument.

At the time the angel of the Lord appeared to Moses in the bush, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were dead and buried in the grave of Machpelah; but the Lord at that time calls himself their God. Says our Savior, "He is not a God of the dead but of the living;" hence they must be raised at some time from the grave, or he cannot be their God again, for when men are dead they need no one to counsel or govern them. Only the living need a God.

Says Paul, in Rom. 4: 17, "God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were." This passage explains the reason why the future resurrection in Luke 20: 38, is expressed in the present tense. We look upon Luke 20: 37–38, as strong proof that the dead are not alive. When will they live again? "I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 40. "Man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Job. 14: 12. I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep . . . for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

Our brother also wishes an exposition of the thief on the cross. We refer him to an article in the Crisis, published in No. 11, vol. 5, May 13, 1857.

Boston.

The Lord is visiting us in a most gracious manner. Bro. Munger has been with us the last week, and his labors have been much blessed in the reclaiming of backsliders, and the conversion of sinners. The work is spreading rapidly and in power. The Lord is doing a great work in Rutland, Vt. Fourteen were baptized last week, and several others are waiting for an opportunity.

☞ We would recommend to our brethren and sisters who are interested in our General Conference, to commence March 16th, that they observe Friday, March 12th, as a day of fasting and prayer, asking the Lord to make the conference the best and most profitable we ever enjoyed.

☞ Our subscribers will notice that this is the first number of a new volume, and we hope they will send the advance pay as soon as possible, that we may be able to meet all our bills. Let all do what they can to increase our subscription list. The success of our paper will depend in a great measure upon the efforts of the preaching brethren, who travel from place to place. We hope they will see that every household of faith is supplied with a copy,—especially the poor.

Debt and Grace,

AS RELATED TO THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.—BY C. F. HUDSON.

Notices of the Press.

"The candor of his statement and reasoning is admirable. . . . The volume may deserve the attention of ministers, because it is the most able and complete exhibition of a view which is far more likely to make converts in the future than Universalism. . . . The entire subject of future punishment needs a new discussion by men of eminent scholarship, vigorous thought, and genuine piety."—Congregational Herald.

"A learned and able work. . . . A passionless re-examination of this subject by some master mind uniting a searching scholarship with a close metaphysical acumen, will supply a demand of the times."—Methodist Quart. Rev.

"We have read it with deep interest, and not without profit; and we think any man who can afford the time and thought to master it, (it is not easy reading,) will be benefitted by its perusal."—The Congregationalist.

BRO. GRANT:—Recent communications to the Crisis, respecting the revival of the work of God in different places, have been cheering to me. One especially, from Bro. Waite, of Warwick, R. I., though short, [illegible] that God has [illegible] been doing a greater work in that place than he has ever done before, and also that the church have been to work in earnest. So it appears that when the church works in earnest, God works. Also, that about two hundred have taken the anxious seat, and most of them are rejoicing in the love of God. I think this is a strong argument in favor of these means of grace. I know that some of our brethren have no faith in inviting the unconverted to the anxious seat, and denounce it as human machinery, &c., but I dare not speak lightly of any means that God blesses in the salvation of souls.

Yours, &c.,

D. N. SMITH.

Extract.

FROM BRO. HASTINGS' NEW WORK.

Pp. 124–129.

"Throughout Christendom, there are the perils of secret and open apostasy that thicken on every hand. The authority of God is but little regarded in this age of temporizing and Mammon-worship. Other lords have dominion. Fashion, pride, wealth, glory, pleasure, lust and iniquity—these are the gods that have reverence here, and whose votaries are among the great and mighty of this world.

The word of God is not revered as it should be. Men disavow its inspiration, they deny its authority, they cavil at its teachings, they wrest its truths, they make it void through their traditions, they turn their ears away from the truth, they are turned unto fables, they cannot endure sound doctrine. The plain, simple truths of Almighty God are too insipid for them. They must have human eloquence, flowery essays, elegant orations, and soft sayings, in the place of those pungent outpourings of divine truth that lay bare the heart, that expose its falsity, that probe the conscience, that arraign the soul before the word of Christ as before the great white throne, and which only offer salvation upon the grounds of unconditional and eternal obedience to the will of the living God.

And alas, there are too many who have no higher calling than to administer thus to the itching ears that wait upon their words. The might and faith of holy men of old is far too rare. Gold outweighs grace, and silver has more influence than salvation. The terror of the Lord is forgotten and the judgments of the Lord are ignored, the wrath of the Lord is in the shade. The judgment is denied, the resurrection forgotten, damnation is unpopular, hell horrid, and destruction detestable. The heart is left full of idols, and prophesying smooth things is disguised under the subtle name of "preaching love."

But alas, this love is not the love of God to man, nor the love of Jesus to the lost. It is not that mighty, devoted, all-sacrificing impulse, that tears the soul from every idol, that wins the heart from all luxurious ease and selfishness, that binds the body as a living sacrifice to the horns of Jehovah's altar, and that yearns with unutterable longings for the glory of God and the salvation of men. This love that fills the heart with the agony of intense desire—this love that allies the soul to the Great Eternal—this love that turns the "world upside down," if it may but pluck sinners as brands from the burning—this love that counts all things loss and dross if it may but win Christ—this love that, renouncing all its worldly honors, glories only in the cross of the Lord Jesus, is in its character and manifestations very far from resembling the smooth sayings, the soft and honied words, with which men are accustomed to be lulled in the lap of fleshly security and enabled to slide quietly, and peacefully, and unconsciously down to perdition. Under such influences, while iniquity abounds, the love of many waxes cold. Faith is weak, faith is low, faith is dead. Zeal is unfashionable and earnestness is impolite. Now and then a spasmodic revival, like a galvanic shock, thrills a church for a moment, and then leaves them to relapse into a slumber more lethargic and deathlike than before. Pride creeps in—humility goes out. Aristocracy takes the chief seats in the synagogues, and piety is crowded in the corner. Evil is done that good may come of it. Sin is winked at that money may be gained. Worldlings are courted for their influence and their gold; and pure religion, and undefiled before God is as unusual as it is desirable. The earnest, fervent piety of other days is remembered by some with regret for its departure, while others gladly discard the toil of the "pilgrim's path" for the comfort of the "celestial railroad," [illegible]

King's highway, and Apollyon himself be installed as engineer!

Outside the church things are still worse. Hosts of apostates gather there. Many, disgusted with hypocrisy, rail at all religion. Infidels crack their impious jests, and find within the pale of the church abundant basis for their bitterest scoffs. Necromancy prevails. The old tricks and hallucinations of ancient heathenism are revamped and palmed upon the world as the opening of a new era. The demons of darkness are invoked, and their strange responses—a medley of falsehood, blasphemy and folly—are received as revelations from celestial "spheres!" "Doctrines of demons" are rife. The marriage covenant is treated with contempt—laws, both of God and man, are derided, and satanic revelations authorze adultery, fornications, and the countless abominations that are, with such witchcraft, "the works of the flesh." The ages of heathenish darkness seem setting in upon us. The abominations of demon-worship are revived. The juggling and satanic mystery of ancient sorcery and divination have returned to curse the world, and the lurid and baleful flickerings of this phantom-light are held by many to be the veritable dawnings of the perfect day! As Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these withstand the truth. Men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. Deceptive demons go forth to the kings of the earth and the whole world to array them in conflict against the Almighty God. Multitudes are meshed and ensnared in these strong delusions, because they believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.* The results are obvious. Crime abounds. The mad lust for wealth pushes men beyond the pale of religion, morality or honesty. Adulteries, murders, and all 2: 11, 12.
kindred abominations haunt us on every side. Dishonesty causes no surprise. Violence is a matter of common occurrence. Veniality and corruption are all around us. Blood toucheth blood.—Vice rolls in torrents. Piety weeps. Judgment is turned away backwards, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth, and he that departeth from evil is accounted mad.†

Intemperance, riot and revelry, with all the horrid crimes that flow from them like streams from a fountain, prevail on every hand. Iniquities are defended, crimes are legalized, villainy is extenuated, and ungodliness is made honorable. Darkness is put for light, and light for darkness.—Good is put for evil, and evil for good. Humility is despised, godliness is derided, righteousness is nearly obsolete and piety almost forgotten.

Turn which way we will we find no general disposition to yield to the divine requisitions. The great controversy is still pending. There is no peace to the wicked, saith my God. The tumult shows no token of abatement. The broils and strifes of mortals still go on. The dark clouds still mantle the skies. The heavens gather blackness. The thunders of approaching wrath still mutter. The Lord hath a controversy with the nations! What shall be the issue?

Shall earth ever find rest? Shall peace stretch her mantle over this world again? Shall light break in upon the darkness and chase it all away? Shall the discordant jarrings ever end, and earth take up its appointed part and chime with all the countless orbs of heaven in the glorious music of the spheres? Shall the earth be full of the knowledge and glory of Jehovah? Shall it rejoice in all its hills and vales and grow vocal with its Maker's praise? And if so, how? How shall the great struggle between light and darkness, between good and evil, end? Who can tell us? Who can relieve the dread suspense that encompasses us? Oh for the voice of inspiration to reveal to us the mighty secret! Let us search the sacred oracles and find answers to these questions."—The Great Controversy. By H. L. Hastings. [For sale at this Office; price sixty cents.]

For the Crisis.

Luke 16: 19--31.

I would like to suggest a few thoughts to those who claim this scripture as an historical record. If I mistake not, you claim that it is not necessary to understand all names of places or things, named in any scripture as strictly literal, in order to have it an historical record of things which have, or do exist. Therefore you argue that the above scripture is a history and not a parable, and hence you must admit from necessity that there are several tropes or figures of speech in it.

There was a certain rich man who was finely clad and sumptuously fed, all his life, but at last he dies and is buried. And there was a certain beggar lying at his gate, full of sores, desiring to be fed of the crumbs that fell from his table, while dogs lick his sores. Finally he dies, also. Thus far it speaks plainly. But now we come to figures.

First, the personal pronoun "he" is not to be understood any longer in the nominative case, but as standing in place of "his" or "his soul" in the possessive case, which the mind of the reader must supply as he goes on in the narrative thus; "And in hell he (his soul) lifted up his (its) eyes being in torments," "And he (his soul) cried," &c. Not being familiar with the law of tropes, I cannot tell to which class this belongs.

Again, Abraham's bosom is denominative of the upper part of hades, to which the beggar's soul was carried by angels. "Hell," where the rich man's soul is tormented, is the lower part. Now why do you claim Abraham's bosom as a figure, while at the same time you claim Abraham or his soul as being literally there? We read in verse 23, that the rich man "seeth Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom." Now if this was really Abraham which could really be seen, then Lazarus was really seen in his literal bosom. Where then do you get your figurative bosom? A literal Abraham in his own figurative bosom. Does not this look inconsistant?

Again, why is it that the Savior does not distinguish between the spirit and the body as he proceeds in the narrative, if he is relating things literally? Send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame." Now before men die they have fingers and tongues. But can a (theological) spirit have them?

Again, what is a gulf,—and what idea do we attach to it? It is an open chasm, or gap, across which there must be a bridge, or men cannot go over. But is it necessary to have terra firma for spirits to walk on? I trow not, especially if they are immaterial, as we are taught to believe.

Then if Lazarus and the rich man were spirits as you say, why does a gulf, or chasm, prevent them from passing to each other?

Now to claim this scripture as history is to assume that they are spirits, and hence are under the necessity of showing why they cannot pass where there is a gulf, or chasm,—why that which is immaterial needs that which is material to pass on. "But this is all figurative," say you. Then I ask, why use so many figures to relate a historical fact? O consistency, thou art a jewel! Better yield the point at once and believe it all a parable, and then you will be in perfect harmony with the plain, unequivocal declaration of Scripture, which says,—"Without a parable spake he not unto them."

O. D. Gibson.

Bro. Grant:—I would just say in regard to parables that some claim that the Savior when he says "There was," or "A certain man," &c., at the beginning of his parables, it is certain he has chosen an historical fact to bear on the point. Now take for instance the parable of the tares of the field. Does any one believe this ever transpired literally? that a certain man sowed a wheat-field and when asleep his enemy came and sowed tares among his wheat? Or do we not rather believe that Christ formed this case and adapted it to the circumstances which he wished to illustrate, as we would suppose a case by which we wished to illustrate any given subject? I think the latter.

For the Crisis.

The Holy Spirit.

Bro. Grant:—I extract the following from Faber:

"When the supporting arm of God is withdrawn from a Christian as a trial of faith, and to convince him of his frailty, his strength withers, his spiritual faculties decay, and he becomes weak like other men. He finds that the occasional assistance of the Spirit is not sufficient, that he requires it every day, every hour, every minute. As the body is constantly supplied with the breath of life, so does the soul require the vivifying inspiration of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is styled Ruach and Pneuma, words which primarily signify the air in motion. We are led to conclude, that there must be some analogy between the influence upon the soul and that of the atmosphere upon the body. This persuasion is strengthened by finding that the same terms are invariably used to describe the action both of the Divine and the material spirit. The play of the lungs by which the atmosphere is received into our animal frames is termed inspiration; the very name by which the conveyance of supernatural powers to the soul is uniformly designated.

In consequence of the air being thus the appointed emblem of the Holy Ghost, our Lord compares the operations of the one to the operations of the other, and communicates the gift of the Holy Ghost to his disciples, by breathing upon them, an action of the lungs, signifying that it could be breathed. That wonderful effusion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost was attended with a sound from heaven of a 'mighty rushing wind;' expressive of those miraculous powers. If we wish then to understand the manner in which the Spirit operates upon the soul, we must inquire in what manner the air operates upon the body. Now we find that the air surrounds the body on all sides, is perpetually inhaled by it, and is so necessary to its health that death is the certain consequence of its being withdrawn. In a similar manner, so long as the Holy Ghost animates the soul of the christian, being surrounded by it and inspiring it, he enjoys the highest degree of spiritual health. If the vivifying principle be in part withdrawn, the christian languishes, and if it be entirely removed, why death must inevitably follow. We are no more able to advance in our heavenly journey without the constant inspiration (breathing) of the Holy Ghost, than we should be able to accomplish some long journey upon earth without the perpetual inspiration of the atmosphere; to be deprived of either is equally fatal.

Jesus compares the operation of the Spirit to the wind, and we can no more discern the one than the other; nevertheless, if we have received the Holy Ghost, our souls must be as sensible of its influence by its beneficial effects, as our bodies are to the impulse of the air when in motion. Unless this be allowed it is not very easy to say what we are to understand by such comparison of our Lord. The use of the one is necessary for language, and the Scriptures show plainly the use of the other for the effectual dissemination of God's truth. Impure air in one instance will not sustain life, because of its full vivifying principle being deficient; and to attempt to disseminate the word of God without the Holy (Ruach) Spirit, will also fail to vivify the soul. Says Jesus, (John 6: 63) 'It is the Spirit that quickeneth, (vivifieth) the words that I speak unto you are spirit (words) and are life (words).' 'Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water (spirit).'

Again, suppose we substitute the original or primary meaning, Holy Air in motion, in some few quotations. Acts 4: 31,—'And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together: and they were all filled with the Holy air in motion, and they spake the word of God with boldness. Luke 1: 67,—'And his (John's) father Zacharias was filled with the Holy air in motion, and prophesied saying." Ver. 41,—'And Elizabeth was filled with the Holy air in motion. And she spake with a loud voice." Luke 12: 11, 12, "Take no thought how or what thing ye shall answer or what to say. For the Holy air in motion shall teach you in that same hour what ye ought to say." "For it is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." Matt. 10: 20. "For it is not ye that speak, but the Holy air in motion." Mark 13: 11. "According to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy air in motion, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior."
Titus 3: 5, 6. "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in the Holy air in motion, and in much assurance, and ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy air in motion." 1 Thess. 1: 5, 6.

And now, dear Brn. and Srs., as Jude tells us to build up our holy faith, let us be praying in the Holy air in motion, "keep ourselves in the love of God," "looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." May the above prove a blessing to the branches of the vine.

Foreign News.

NEWS FROM EUROPE.

The Anglo Saxon from Liverpool, Feb. 10th, arrived at Portland Feb. 23d.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur publishes an official notification of the blockade of Canton river by the French fleet.

It is said some difficulty has arisen between the French government and Swiss Confederation on the subject of refugees. The Swiss are said not to be disposed to confine refugees in the interior.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The Bombardment of Canton.—The following despatch from Mr. Acting Consul Green was received at the Foreign Office, through Malta, Feb. 10, at 2 A. M.:—

Alexandria, Feb. 6, 1858. The Hindostan arrived at Suez on the 4th inst. She brings dates from Calcutta to the 9th of Jan., Canton to the 29th of Dec., and Bombay to the 13th of Jan.

Sir Colin Campbell has taken possession of Teruckabad, which was abandoned by the enemy on the 2d of January, and Gooruchpore was taken on the 6th of Jan., by the forces under Maharajah Jung Bahador. Seven guns were taken and 200 of the enemy killed. Our loss only two Ghoorka's killed, and seven wounded.

Rumored Resignation of the Pope.—A rumor has been afloat the last few days in Paris of an anticipated change in the temporal government of Rome, which will create surprise in the minds of every people in Europe. Some talk of the approaching abdication of the Pope as a certain thing, and already has Father Ventura been spoken of as his successor. The nomination of the latter to a cardinalate in preparation for this event, has frequently been announced. Upon an emergency such a measure would be considered indispensable. As general of the powerful organ of Ignatius, Father Ventura's position would enable him to accept the papal crown without probation.

Silver Bedsteads.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce reports that six bedsteads of silver have been ordered from one of the large furniture establishments of that city, by the Pasha of Egypt, in contemplation of the marriage of his son with the present Sultan's daughter. The cost of this set is estimated at $70,000.

An Ominous Sign to the Turks.—Among the reasons for the general belief which prevails among the Turks that their religion will soon come to an end, is the mysterious, and as they think, supernatural disappearance of the green coat of Mohammed, which is the sacred banner of Mohammedanism. They believe it to have been woven in heaven, and brought to Mohammed by the Angel Gabriel, who they think will retake it to heaven when the course of their religion is terminated. It has been guarded with the greatest care for centuries in a particular mosque of Constantinople, and has ever been regarded as their great sacred emblem, without which prayers would be unavailing.

The Pentateuch Confirmed.—A work has recently been published in London by an accomplished Egyptian scholar, who, in examining Egyptian records, has found traces of a history parallel to that written by Moses. He finds Jannes mentioned five times, Moses twice, and Balak son of Zipper at a place called Huzoth; that a people of whom Moses was leader marched towards Palestine by the way of Migdol and Zoar; that they were connected with the names Midia and Aram; that there was a contest at a place of a great water-flood; that a royal or noble youth meets a sudden and mysterious death, and that a royal order is immediately issued for the hasty departure of a people for their feast of "passing the dead;" and that miracles are named as being performed by their leader in Lower Egypt.

The America from Liverpool Feb. 13th, arrived at Halifax, Feb. 27th.

DENMARK.

A motion has just passed, by 44 to 7, in the Legislative Council of Denmark, for the instant fortification of Copenhagen.

RUSSIA.

A letter states that a violent shock of an earthquake was felt at Yrkoutsk, a town situated to the west of Lake Baikal in Siberia. The shock was so great that it extended as far as Kiakhta, on the frontier of China.

The journals of Moscow contain a list of 501 landed proprietors belonging to the Order of Noblesse, who have given in their adhesion to the liberal measures of the Emperor respecting the emancipation of Serfs, which it was expected at one time they would oppose.

The alleged submission of Schamyl is not confirmed by the latest intelligence.

Obituary.

Died, at East Litchfield, Ct., Feb. 2, Frederick T., youngest son of Bro. Hezekiah and Sr. Flora Johnson, aged 3 years and 2 months.

The Lord grant that the deep waters of affliction through which our Bro. and Sr. have been called to pass may be sanctified to their lasting good.

The funeral sermon was preached by the writer. Text, 2 Sam. 14: 14.

C. Goodrich.

Died, in Cheshire, Mass., Jan. 30th, Mrs. Betsey Parker, of Lunenbourgh, in the 76th year of her age.

Sister P.'s sickness was only of four days duration.

She was a consistent member of the Baptist church about forty years, but when she heard the glad news of Christ's second coming, (some five years since,) she received it with joy, and has since been anxiously waiting in hope of seeing her Lord ere she should be called to grapple with the monster death. But when she heard the summons she cheerfully yielded, and after warning the unconverted and entreating her friends to be faithful, with strong faith in the promises of God, she calmly fell asleep, in expectation of a resurrection to immortality when Jesus comes.

By the request of the deceased, an appropriate discourse was delivered by Eld. M. Batchelor, from 1 Thess. 4: 13.

"Farewell, Mother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When this day of life is fled,
Then with joy we hope to greet thee
Where no farewell tears are shed."

O. J. Brown.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise hey will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

General Conference.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a General Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, March 16th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters who attended the Conference one year since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who came to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be persuaded to come to the one now proposed may not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded by rich blessings. We are confident that the time ha come when we should make an extra effors to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet not as sectarians to advance pa ty interests but as Christians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we, like Caleb and Joshua, be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel? Brethren, arouse to the conflict! The victory is sure. Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldier, awake and gird thine armor! "Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the glad triumph upon Eden's plains of glory.

In behalf of the church,

GOD OF GLORY.

God of glory, when, O when
Will thy glory dawn on men?
Wait we longer? O, how long
Ere thy glorious kingdom come?
If at midnight or at dawn,
Gabriel's trump shall ope the scene,
May thy glory shadow us,
May our hearts be found in peace.

Then our hearts will cry Amen,
Come, our Savior! come, O come!
We have waited long for thee,
But thy glory now I see,
Filling heaven and earth and sea;
Glory, glory unto thee!
Now no longer shall we groan,
For thy kingdom sure hath come.

But while glory shadows us,
"Rocks and mountains fall on us,"
Cries the sinner in his grief,—
But in vain he seeks relief.
Rocks and mountains cannot hide
From that pierced, that bleeding side;
Painful as the sight must be,
Sinner, 'tis for you to see!

See! whom you have set at nought,
See, O see, but all too late!
Now no pardon is for thee,
Through a long eternity!
O how bitter is thy cup,
Death eternal now thy lot,
Sinking in your agony,
For you find no way to flee.

While the rock is cleft for thee,
To its shadow flee, O flee!
Jesus now will be thy shield,
From the tempest fierce and wild.
Can you, will you risk that storm
Sure as heaven and earth to come,
And on thee as sure to fall,
If you will not flee at all?

Shall a Savior's dying love
Never move thee, never save?
Can you steel your heart to him,
Bid him near thee never come?
Come to Jesus, come, O come!
Flee the sinner's dreadful doom,
Which may burst upon a world,
Ere another day is told.

The Earth Burned; and the Sanctuary Cleansed.

No. VIII.

7.—The second resurrection, Satan loosed, destroyed, and all the wicked in "the lake of fire."

Having presented some of the most striking texts that describe the opening of the day of judgment, as was proposed at the commencement of this article, and those of the state of the blessed during that period of a thousand years; I come now to the last number, which will describe its closing scenes.—Here the saints seem to have no share, nor fear; though their gates are not "shut at all by day, and there is no night there." "And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night, forever and ever. . . . And death and hell (or hades) were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death (the lake of fire, Whiting.) And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 7-10-15.

Many questions may here be asked, and much unbelief expressed; but for me it is enough to know what God has revealed, and I must believe it.—I see many figures and mysteries, which I cannot comprehend, but nothing but what may be harmonized with the whole of God's Word, so far as I can understand it. The question has been asked, "If the wicked were burnt up at the beginning of the thousand years, how could they come upon the breadth of the earth?" i. e. Where were they all this time? Perhaps Isaiah will enlighten us a little on this. Let us hear the voice of Jehovah speak through him. "The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro, like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall and [illegible] high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit; and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited. Then shall the moon be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before the ancients gloriously." Isa. 24: 19-23.

In the next chapter is the description of the "feast of fat things;" of the destruction of death. In the 26th of the resurrection, and in the 27th of Satan. Thus; "In that day the Lord with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea." Says Paul, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil." Heb. 2: 14. It has also been questioned whether Satan would be suffered to marshal his hosts on the new earth, and there invade the camp and the beloved city; intimating that it would be a defilement to the new creation. All I can say to this is, Satan was once in heaven; for the Savior affirms, "I beheld Satan fall as lightning from heaven;" which he could not have done had he never been there; and I do not read of any thing that was corrupted there, by him or his associates; and whatever was impure was "thrust down to hell," (2 Pet. 4,) where they are "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." Jude 6.

My task is now done. I have given what I believe to be a consistent view of some of those thrilling prophecies relative to the great day before us. I may not have presented the event of the binding of Satan late enough; but sure I am that the marriage of the Lamb will not be till after the indignation is past. And now we leave the wicked in the lake of fire; and "he that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still." Whether their sufferings will be perpetuated, or their being extinguished, I leave for others to discuss, as my time is too short and too precious for speculation now. But sure I am that many texts in the Bible go to sustain the former view, particularly Matt. 25: 46. Punishment means suffering; but certain it is, I should feel some relief if I could know that it was God's will to extinguish them at once; but when I ask, "Thy will be done," I do feel that I ought to submit to it. We do not all see alike, and why is it? In many things we cannot agree; but we can agree to love and serve God, and each other, and we shall if we are christians. Let us not wrest, nor throw away the Scriptures, lest we bring "leanness into our souls." Let us beware lest we strike from the prophet's hand that weapon which God has put into it; that we may not at last be "weighed in the balance and found wanting."

God bless you all, dear brethren and sisters, and prepare us to meet him in the kingdom. Amen.

B. P. HILDRETH.

For the Crisis.

Jesus is Coming.

Jesus is coming! heart-cheering, soul-rejoicing words to the waiting ones. How could we endure the storms and ills of life, were it not for this hope—"Our Deliverer is near!" How often when the trials of earth press heavily, should we sink in despondency, were it not for this thought,—"Jesus is coming."

Some of us are suffering with disease and pain; some of us have loved ones sleeping beneath the turf. But Jesus comes as the Life-giver. His voice shall reach the depths of earth's charnel-house, and call the sleepers forth, strong in the vigor of immortality. We, too, shall be changed—changed to the image of the heavenly. Instead of this frail, diseased organism, we shall be fashioned like the glorious pattern—the Lord from heaven. Never again shall we feel pain or weariness; never again shall we say, "I am sick;" the spirit of an endless life invigorates the system, and death can no more molest us.

Again, there is joy in the thought that Jesus is coming, not only to give us life, but to bring back an "exiled Paradise." Six thousand years have wrought their desolating changes in this once fair world, and now, blight, decay and death meet us at every step. But we believe the promise of Jehovah. The great Restorer comes. Nature shall again wear her primal robes, and rejoice in her recovered Eden beauty. Unwithering verdure shall again clothe her soil. Crystal waters shall once more lave her fertile plains. Undying songsters shall warble their notes of praise in her richly foliaged groves. The now ravenous beasts of the forest shall peacefully graze on the mountain side. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree, and earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord.

And this is no wild chimera, no vain imagining. Blessed be the name of the Lord, we know it is reality! We cannot be mistaken. The word of the Lord justifies us in expecting such a home as this, and that very soon.

Brother, sister, look up! Look not behind you! The word of the Lord stands fast. Redemption is surely coming. "When ye see these things come to pass, know that he is near, even at the doors."

Are not the great events delineated in the word of God, recorded on the pages of history? Are not the signs given by our Lord to immediately precede his coming, events which our eyes have beheld? Are we not witnessing the fulfillment of the last items of the prophetic chart?

For what then can we look but for the speedy coming of our King! Now, he bids us watch; to take heed lest our hearts be overcharged with the cares of this life, and that day come upon us unawares. "For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the earth." "But ye brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." MARIA.

The Future.

The future, as confined to time and the transitory things of this life, is dark and uncertain. In vain has the wisdom of man been employed to search out the future; and the most sanguine anticipations of youth have failed to penetrate its myteries.

Hope often lends its brightest rays, and seems to lift the veil of obscurity, and displays stores of happiness and joy to the eye of zealous man. But oh! how futile is earthly hope; too often ending in disappointment. The brightest prospects are liable to fail. Those who laugh today may weep to-morrow; the rich may be poor; the great and honored may be abased; and those who are alive and well to-day, may be sick or dying to-morrow. Thus verifying the words of our Savior, that we "know not what a day may bring forth."

But there is a future which to the Christian is always bright. He can look beyond the dark night of time to eternity, and view scenes of bliss and immortal glory which can never be darkened by a single cloud. And the "blessed hope" which never fails is the guiding star which illumes his pathway and points to those joys. The prophets of old, and the apostles, too, have told of a beautiful world, the home of the christian, where all is pure and good—the land where sickness and death can never enter. A faith in these promises is the foundation of a hope, which "is like an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast."

The past may have been trying; the present, sad and gloomy, and the prospect of the future in this world cause him to tremble; but let him by an eye of faith look beyond this world, and the glorious future of a better world rises before him; its brilliant light reflecting back so completely dispels the clouds around him, that he presses his way onward in the path of duty, resting in sweet confidence upon the promises of God.

THE CITY OF GOD.

To thee, O dear, dear country!
Mine eyes their vigils keep;
For very love beholding
Thy happy name they weep;
The mention of thy glory
Is unction to the breast,
And medicine in sickness,
And love, and life, and rest.
O one! O only mansion!
O Paradise of joy!
Where tears are ever banished,
And joys have no alloy;
Beside thy living waters
All plants are, great and small,
The cedar of the forest,
The hyssop of the wall.
Thy ageless walls are bonded
With amethyst unpriced,
The saints build up its fabric,
The corner-stone is Christ.
Thou hast no shore, fair ocean!
Thou hast no time, bright day!
Dear fountain of refreshment
To pilgrims far away!
Upon the Rock of Ages
They raise thy holy power;
Thine is the victor's laurel,
And thine the golden dower.
They stand, those halls of Sion
Conjubilant with song,
And bright with many an angel,
And many a martyr throng;
The Prince is ever in them,
The light is aye serene,
The pastures of the blessed
Are decked in glorious sheen:
There is the throne of David,
And there from toil released,
The shout of them that triumph,
The song of them that feast;
And they, beneath their Leader,
Who conquered in the fight,
For ever and for ever
Are clad in robes of white.

Extracts

From a Funeral Sermon, preached on the death of David Marks. who died Dec. 1st, 1845, in Oberlin, Ohio, by Professor Finney.

Text—1 Tim. 4: 7. "Exercise thyself rather unto godliness."

In discussing the subject presented in the text, I shall consider,

I. The spirit of the injunction it contains.

II. The conditions of obeying it.

III. The reasons for the injunction.

I. Taking into view the whole of the verse of which the text is a part, it is obvious that there are two prime ideas involved in the spirit of the injunction:—namely,

1. A caution against giving attention to things that are idle and profitless. By "profane and old wives' fables," Paul may have referred to the doctrine of the Rabbins, than which, nothing can well be more worthless and ill befitting a sensible and christian man, who has the gospel to preach to perishing men. Take heed, Paul would say to his son Timothy—take heed that you be not ensnared by any reading; or any legends of tradition which can only amuse without instructing, and therefore waste time without profit. Let "old wives' fables" alone. A man of God to be thoroughly furnished must store his mind with better things than those. If thou wouldst keep thyself pure, take care to avoid such things. Fables and stories for amusement, fit only for such as are in the first or second childhood, will pollute your mind, and grieve the Holy Spirit of truth. From all such things turn away.

2. "Exercise thyself rather unto godliness." This is the more excellent way. Practice godliness;—not only learn what it is, but put it in practice; bring it into your daily spirit and daily life. Godliness is being like God. Of course the meaning of this precept is—become Godlike. Adopt the spirit of Jesus your Master, and live a life like his. Exercise yourself in this. The word exercise seems to be an allusion to the ancient Elysian and Olympic games, in which various exercises were carefully practiced, to discipline the body for victory in the hour of conflict. The next verse sustains this allusion—"Bodily exercise profiteth little." Yet those candidates for contest in the games, shrink not from any severity of discipline—they keep their body under and are temperate in all things,—only to obtain a perishable twig of laurel. How much more should you exercise yourself to be like God, since the prize is an immortal crown of glory, and the profit is beyond measure great, both in this life and the next?

These two points then—(first avoid all diverting and polluting influences; and, secondly, discipline yourself to become like God,) constitute the spirit of the injunction of our text.

II. We pass to notice some of the conditions of obeying it.

1. True and thorough regeneration—a new birth which transforms the moral character, causing old things to pass away and all things to become new. This is a change not merely of opinion, or of intellect, but of the heart. There is no beginning to exercise one's self unto godliness without this change. This change itself is from the image of Satan to the image of God.

2. The baptism of the Holy Spirit. This is perfectly indispensable to success and even to diligent effort. The being like God, which is required and implied in exercising one's self unto godliness, demands a deep study of God and of godliness. But none will ever learn God except as taught by the Spirit. And none will exercise themselves in this study and in the practice of living like God, unless the Spirit of God mightily imbues their hearts.

3. A deep and abiding sympathy with God. There is substantial and rich meaning in this language. There is such a thing as having sympathy with God. Nay, every real christian must and does have such sympathy—he enters into the feelings of the Deity—adopts the same great end of life—has the same objects of supreme affection, so that heart beats in unison with heart. This is sympathy—such as man must have with his God. This is plainly involved in exercising one's self unto godliness. To obey this precept effectually, you must have so strong and deep a sympathy with God as shall,

1. Overcome the love of promiscuous reading. By "profane," in the verse of our text, is meant whatever is not sacred; just as we call all history profane history which is not sacred history. The true spirit of the requirement therefore enjoins christians to forego, at least in general, all profane reading, and certainly all that in the least interferes with exercising themselves to godliness. No profane works are to be read or studied only so far as their reading and study will make you more like God, and thus help you in exercising yourself unto godliness. You must have so much sympathy with God as shall annihilate all relish for reading that tends not to make you like God. Nothing can be more certain than this.

2. Again, so deep must be your sympathy with God, that it shall quite overcome the disposition to useless speculations and vain philosophizing. There is a vast amount of this among men whose minds are more intellectual than spiritual, and who love the amusement of curious speculation more than the luxury of studying the depths of godliness. This state of mind must be changed. Those studies which furnish neither the head nor the heart with any thing really useful to God or man, must be put away;—nay, you must have so vital a sympathy with God, that it shall quite eradicate that vile taste for things profitless and implant a vigorous thirsting of soul after the better things of God.

3. So deep must be your sympathy with God, that it shall destroy your love of popularity with men. Surely you must have enough of God to effect this or you cannot in spirit obey the injunction of our text. You never can exercise yourself to be like God until you value his favor incomparably more than the favor of man. Indeed, according to the Bible, you cannot even believe so long as you "seek honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only." Plainly, you must have so much sympathy with God as shall overcome alike the love of applause and the fear of reproach—for while these prevail, you will do any thing rather than exercise yourself unto godliness.

4. Of sympathy with God you must have enough to overcome the thirst for worldly gain. So long as this thirst bears sway in your heart, you surely cannot exercise yourself to be like God. You must be satisfied with the comforts of life, and content with the awards of divine providence—content moreover to live by faith in God for future good, so as to have no anxieties, except for the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Else you cannot exercise yourself for the christian strife.

5. Your sympathy with God must be so strong as to overcome your love of ease. Those men of the Olympic games had to crucify their love of ease. So, and much more, must you, if you would contend with principalities and powers, with the rulers of the darkness of this world, with wicked spirits in high places. So, and much more, if you would exercise yourself unto godliness. Did Christ indulge his love of ease, or did Paul? Have any of those men ever done so who have achieved much for God, or for their generation according to the will of God?

6. You must have sympathy with God in such a degree as shall suppress a self-indulgent spirit. Even Christ pleased not himself, nor did Paul, nor have any of those men whose life and labors have blessed the world, and have secured the favor of God. No man can live for the end of self-indulgence, and yet do any thing great and good for God or for his race.

7. Your sympathy with God must beget a self-sacrificing spirit. The doctrine of the gospel on this point is—"Present your bodies a living sacrifice unto God." All must be laid on his altar. He demands a whole burnt offering. A man needs to have his heart so set upon his work as to beget a thirst after truth and an intense desire to know what he shall do to honor and serve God. Unless a man has this spirit he cannot do much for his generation.

Again, a man must have great honesty, and a child-like spirit, if he would attain the truth and avoid all error. "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Once more, let me observe, you must have so much sympathy with God as will overcome ungodly ambition. Else you cannot live for God, for this ambition can never be blended with godliness.

Again, an essential condition of obeying the injunction of the text is great love for spiritual labor, love for every sort of labor to which the Lord calls you.

I only add further that any man to comply with this requirement needs a most controlling love for souls. Such a love for souls had Paul, and such had his great Master.

III. I must next adduce some of the reasons for this requirement.

1. This world is a place of training for the next. This is its chief business. The characters of men are here being moulded either to be like God, or like the devil.

2. The apostle subjoins as another reason for exercising one's self unto godliness—"For bodily exercise profiteth little." It is of small avail to chastise the body and to discipline it as the ancient athletes were wont to do; and all the usual results of physical labor now are of small account; but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of all needed good here and all possible good hereafter.

3. It is indispensable to doing much in this world. No man will ever do much unless he accustoms himself to work with all his might, and sees to it, moreover, that his work be indeed exercising himself unto godliness, laboring to become, and be, like God. Then something great and good will be done.

4. This is indispensable to true peace of mind. A man may have an Antinomian peace of mind without it—a peace delusive and baseless, resting on that strange notion, that Christ's righteousness imputed to us while we live in sin, avails for us, instead of Christ's righteousness wrought in us. How many such there are now, filling the church with numbness, with spiritual lethargy, and fatal delusion! Ask such—Are you personally holy? "O no, I know I am not; but I trust in Christ's imputed righteousness." Are you indeed walking with God and living for God daily?" "O I do not expect to do that myself; I believe in an imputed righteousness. Christ has obeyed the law perfectly; his obedience answers instead of mine." Thus a man may cry peace, peace, and his conscience be quite at ease in his sins; but assuredly unless he exercise himself unto godliness, he can have no solid peace here nor hereafter.

5. It is indispensable to peace with God. It is absurd that God should be at peace with a man who is not holy; who does not exercise himself unto godliness, and is not perfecting holiness in the fear of God. It is indeed a marvellous fact that men should thus pervert the gospel—should thus dream of being in such a covenant with Christ that God will except them while they are living in sin. Is Christ the minister of sin? Did he come both to save his people from their sins, and also to quiet their consciences, and give them peace in their sins by his imputed righteousness? What can be more absurd? It would not be easy to name a sentiment fraught with more mischief to the souls of men than this.

Again, it is indispensable to salvation. No man can be saved who does not exercise himself unto godliness. It is the only consistent course. Every christian professes to be a follower of Christ. Consistency, therefore, requires that he should be. It is indispensable to a right understanding of the spirit of the gospel; also to true spirituality of mind. Persons may talk about being spiritually minded; but it is all a dream unless they exercise themselves unto godliness. Unless they vigorously seek to live for God, and exercise themselves to do all his will, it can avail them nothing.

Again, this is the only comfortable course of life. There will indeed be many trials, but those who meet and endure them in the spirit of faith and patience, can bear a full and glorious testimony that this is the only way of comfort. Let me add that this is the only course that is honorable to God, also that this is the only course of usefulness.

The Scriptures and the Fathers.

Those very parts of the writings of the early Fathers, which seem least valuable for style and matter, have this incidental advantage, that they set in a clear point of view the immeasurable superiority of the Scriptures of the New Testament. The inspired books were written principally by men who had not the same advantage of education and literary training as some of the ecclesiastical writers enjoyed; yet they are totally free from the blemishes which disfigure the most elaborate productions of later ages of the church.

Had not the pens of the evangelists and apostles been guided by a wisdom superior to any which those writers possessed by ordinary means, they never could have produced a work which, even as a specimen of plain and majestic narration, and of consistent, sober, rational discussion of the most abstruse questions, is entirely unrivaled. We should have found—as we do find in the writings even of those who had been thoroughly instructed in Scriptural truth, and had deeply imbibed the spirit of Christianity—some error mixed with truth; some inconclusive reasoning; some vague declamation; some incautious overstatement of doctrine or fact; some merely mystical application of the Scriptures of the Old Testament; some exaggerated sentiment.

In uninspired writers we should have detected the prejudices of their education, and of the age in which they lived. We should have found some extravagant eulogies of martyrdom; some fanciful notions respecting spiritual beings; some captious and scrupulous objection to practices in themselves indifferent. And, in their public defences of their faith before their adversaries, we should have perceived them, not only speaking boldly, as they ought to speak, but sometimes displaying a subtlety too nearly allied to the craftiness of the disputer of this world; and on other occasions indulging in sarcasm or invective against the various errors of heathen worship.

In the Scriptures of the New Testament we find none of these faults; they are uniformly dignified, simple, and reasonable. But a very limited acquaintance with the writings of those who endeavored to follow their steps will show that, if the apostles and evangelists were preserved from such extravagance and error, they owed it to a wisdom which was not of this world.—[illegible]

Poetry.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS.

The gloomiest day hath gleams of light
The darkest wave hath bright foam near it,
And twinkles through the cloudiest night
Some solitary star to cheer it.

The gloomiest soul is not all gloom,
The saddest heart is not all sadness,
And sweetly o'er the darkest doom,
There shines some lingering beam of gladness.

Despair is never quite despair;
Nor life nor death the future closes;
And round the shadowy brow of Care,
Will Hope and Fancy twine their roses.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER SEVEN.

In my weekly visits to several places, I have been made glad to see the happy faces of the Lord's children, as they greeted me and expressed their joyous hope in Jesus, the Savior of sinners, and spoke of his coming again to make them immortal and give them his glory and an eternal kingdom. I love the society of such ones in this world, and shall I not delight to dwell with them in the world to come?

The Christian union,—the strong attachment formed here for the pardoned sinners,—the happy heirs of the kingdom of God,—serves to bring upon my heart the solemn vows I have made to God that I would "be faithful unto death," that I might with those receive "a crown of life." But then the thought often steals upon me, you may yet fall from your steadfastness and make a fatal end. Others have done so. I inquire of Bro. A., and find he has lost his hope; returned to his cups; meets no more with the little flock. I ask after sister C., find she has taken a place in the ball-room, or in other places of sport; lost her interest in Christ, and talks no more with the praying company. I ask for the prosperity of Bro. E., he has become discouraged and left off praying; become a speculator, and a gambler. I ponder, What could induce them to act such parts? Perhaps they were never truly converted, yet they appeared well—"run well for a season." But somebody has possibly bewitched them. They had not given due heed to the exhortations of the apostle. "Refuse profane and old wives' fables," and again, "foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do but gender strife." Or it may be some "evil communication has corrupted good morals." They have not guarded against "the appearance of evil." They wished to please a friend or not to offend a relative who desired to do a little wrong; they yielded; the bond with Christ was broken; they were led astray. Or they were tempted to do wrong and they yielded; lost confidence, and instead of humbly confessing it, tried to cover it until betrayed into more gross sins; forgetting that "he that covereth his sins shall not prosper." Far better to listen to Christ. "He that confesseth and forsaketh shall have mercy."

On inquiring of some about the prosperity of Zion in their locality, I am always glad to learn the state of the cause of my Master, even if it is suffering from the apostacy and bad conduct of some of its professed friends. It is well to hear a correct account of the cause of trouble. But to sit and listen to a list of evil surmisings, backbitings, and tales of frivolous items of human weakness, or foibles and errors such as many are subject to, is only adding evil to evil. I have often been treated with such a dish, but refused to be entertained with it. I have wondered that Christian persons, who love to deal in such commodities, could live on such food, yet I suppose the more they talk it, the more deeply they become interested in their topics. Far better to have a "charity that beareth all things," and to "consider thyself, lest thou also be tempted." I have read, "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." There is a wide difference between seeing and properly reporting certain evils, with a pitying, praying heart, and being a religious tattler.

As I have visited from house to house to try to encourage, strengthen and instruct the disciples of Christ, and to teach sinners the way of life, I find many, very many who know much more about some new, or even some old novel, than they do about the Bible. Novels are in great demand among a large class of professed Christians. Such ones usually despise the clear, plain announcements of the word of God, about a holy walk or a future day of rewards, especially if it is said to be near. Why is this love for fiction? The sayings of Christ are too hard for them. The light discloses their darkness. "They will not come to the light, lest their deeds be reproved." They want smooth things. This class are fulfilling 2 Tim. 4: 3–4, "They will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." They love these fable makers much before the humble ministers of Christ, and look to them for instruction,—religious instruction too. The peculiar trait in nearly all modern novels is, they are religious.

No. IV.

TO UNCLE FRED:—I promised that in my next communication I would give extracts from the writings of learned men, who had given attention to this subject. I referred in my last to the ceremonies attending the consecration of the priest, to the holy office of the sanctuary, and showed that washing of the body with water—pouring of the sacred oil on the head, and sprinkling of blood upon the altar, &c., were different parts of the ceremony shadowing forth "good things to come," and were fulfilled in the spiritual priesthood.

I will now give you the thoughts of Dr. Robinson, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Andover Theological Seminary, respecting another passage in the Old Testament, connected with the ritual law. He refers to Lev. 4: 6, where he says, "The Septuagint has this term. It reads thus: 'And the priest shall DIP his finger in the blood, and SPRINKLE of the blood seven times before the Lord; and shall POUR (ver. 7,) all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar.' Here are three different words, bapto, rantize, and ekkeo, to express the three different actions, dipping, sprinkling, and pouring."

The same writer also refers to John 13: 26, where Jesus used the word "Bapto, to dip in, to immerse," when he spake of dipping the sop into the dish, before giving it to Judas.

Rev. William Hague, who has been engaged in the baptismal controversy, says, "It is evident at a glance that the turning point in this the baptismal controversy, is the meaning of the Greek word Baptiso. The circumstances connected with the administration of the rite, the places chosen, such as Jordan and Enon, the force of the Greek prepositions eis and ek, which express a descent into, and a rising up out of the water as definitely as any preposition in the Greek language can do it, are all strongly corroborative of our position, that the act of baptism denoted by the term in Christ's commission is perfectly and adequately translated in English by the word immersion, which comes from the Latin, or by the word dipping, of Anglo Saxon origin. Nevertheless, if it be clearly proved before hand that the active verb baptizo, the name of an action, is, when used with reference to water, so indeterminate as not to denote any particular kind of action, but rather all possible modes of use, of which water is susceptible from that of a single drop to an ocean, then it follows that however much of doubt the circumstances and prepositions might occasion to tender consciences, the baptismal law from the lips of Jesus Christ, contained in the commission, presents a great variety of modes to the choice of the individual, or leaves it, as the Pope of Rome would say, to be determined by 'church authority.'

"The main question is, whether the word used by Christ to enjoin baptism, in the last exercise of his legislation on earth, in giving that commission which is binding 'to the end of the world,' denotes a specific act or not? If it does not, then there is no law which certainly holds us to immersion, or defines what act the Savior meant, whether it were the application of water to the head, or the feet, the face, or the hands. If it does, then all objections drawn from supposed difficulties, or improbabilities, or from the greater convenience of sprinkling, are no more to be regarded as arguments, than those questions which skeptics sometimes ask in order to throw discredit on the very letter and spirit of revel tion."

We find the whole matter here presented in a nut-shell, and if we can find out what kind of a kernel it is, we shall know just what sort of a tree it will produce. If it consists of a variety, why it will produce various kinds of trees, and if it prove on examination to be an acorn, an oak only can grow therefrom.

And now as I can not examine it through a Hebrew or Greek microscope for myself, why I must take the testimony of various reliable men, who have critically examined the kernel and pronounce it to be positively an acorn.

I have not room in this letter but for one or two witnesses. "Stakeias (Leipsic ed., 1752) is thus full and explicit: Baptizo generally, and by the force of the word, indicates the idea of simply dipping, and dyeing; but properly it means to dip, or immerse in water.' Of baptism he says; 'It generally denotes immersion and dyeing; but by the innate force of the term, it properly denotes immersion, or dipping of a thing in water. that it may be washed or cleansed. This word is transferred to denote the first sacrament of the N. Testament, viz. baptism, in which sacrament those to be baptised were anciently immersed in water, as now-a-days they are only sprinkled, that they may be washed from the pollution of sin."

Scapula, who wrote in 1579 says: "Of bapto, the root of baptizo, 'it means to dip, to immerse, and also to dye, because that may be done by immersing.'"

Henricus Stephanus, an earlier writer, says: "To dip or immerge, as we dip things for the purpose of dyeing them, or immerge them in water."

Schleusner says: "Properly it signifies, I immerse, I dip, I immerse in water." "He also says that it signifies to wash, or cleanse by water, and gives this reason, 'for the most part a thing must be dipped or plunged into water that it may be washed.'"

And now Uncle Fred, I will leave you for the present, to digest what proof I already have presented, and in my next will introduce to your notice the testimony of several English Lexicographers, respecting the true meaning of the word Baptizo.

For the present, adieu.

Divine Testimony

CONCERNING THE FINAL DESTINY OF IMPENITENT SINNERS.

On this solemn subject, my brethren, "many are the decrees of men's heart, but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand."

There are three classes of passages of inspired truth, relative to final judgment, which demand our serious and candid consideration.

1. Passages which teach a general future judgment of the human race.

2. Passages which declare a general resurrection for the purpose of judgment, or a general future accountability of men, which necessarily implies a general resurrection.

3. Passages which teach future conscious suffering and the second death of the wicked.

The last class will more particularly occupy our attention. We may notice a few passages of the first class. Heb. 9: 27. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." The most obvious import of this passage appears to be, that death and a subsequent accountability or conscious judgment, are appointed to men in general. It has been remarked that the apostle does not affirm that it is appointed unto men twice to die. True, and if there is no revelation of a second death for any, let us not believe it. If there is, the fact that men in general die once, surely does not contradict it. Acts 17: 30, 31. God "now commandeth all men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

My brethren, does not this solemn assurance unto all men, indicate that all men will have a conscious part in this final general judgment? Acts 10: 42. Jesus Christ was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead. Rom. 14: 10. We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. Is it to be supposed that men are to stand there literally dead, and utterly unconscious of the righteous judgment of the Son of God?

I shall now present to your consideration a few of the second class of passages, which teach, not simply a general judgment, but a resurrection or accountability necessarily implying a resurrection. John 5: 28, 29. "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth, they that have done good, to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, to the resurrection of condemnation." The import of the term life here, manifestly, is eternal life, as in other passages. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John 5: 12. Temporary existence compared with eternal is not worthy of the name of life. Now let us consider whether the wicked can hear Christ's voice and come forth to the resurrection of condemnation, without a temporary vitality? Can they know anything about a judgment of condemnation without such vitality? I am aware that in the Prophet's vision of the dry bones, which was figurative of the house of Israel's deliverance from captivity, that these dry bones are said to hear the word of the Lord. But the passage before us is no figurative vision. It is a plain declaration of literal truth, which we have no authority to figure away. Both characters are represented as hearing Christ's voice and of coming forth to judgment. Why so, if not to a conscious judgment?

Acts 24: 15. Paul said concerning himself that he had "hope towards God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and the unjust." 2 Tim. 4: 1. "I charge thee before God and our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." Eccl. 12: 14. "God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing." Rom. 14: 10, 12. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Can dead men give account of themselves? Matt. 12: 36. Jesus said, "That every idle (or pernicious) word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Rev. 22: 12. "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man as his work shall be." John 12: 48. "He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken the same shall judge him in the last day." 1 Peter 4: 5. The apostle declares concerning those who lived in his day and spoke evil of the saints, that they "shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead." This implies their future life.

Our brethren who dissent from us in respect to the temporary re-living of the wicked, admit that they will be judged. And we admit that God, if he pleased, could judge them as unworthy of eternal life without raising them from their graves. In this case, however, we should not expect to find any thing in the Bible about a resurrection of the unjust, or of their giving an account to God, or appearing at the judgment seat of Christ, or of their second death, or of any future conscious suffering. If then, my brethren, we find plain inspired declarations that the wicked, who have lived in past ages, (whom we all acknowledge will be judged,) are actually to suffer "tribulation and anguish" to issue in a second death, must we not admit that their resurrection will be to a temporary life?

I proceed, therefore, to present to your consideration the third class of divine testimonies, which teach us these facts, viz., that the final judgment of the wicked in general, will be a judgment of conscious shame, and suffering of "few" or "many stripes," and of a "second death."

I commence with the testimony of the true prophet, whose "word shall not pass away." Luke 12: 4, 5. "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do: but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, fear him." Now, my brethren, if there is to be no consciousness after the first death, the wicked need no more to fear being cast into hell, (or gehenna,) than to be cast on a bed of roses. This awful testimony shows what our Savior meant when he said that the wicked "shall come forth to the resurrection of condemnation;" even to be cast into the lake of fire. Matt. 10: 28 confirms this teaching, that soul and body will be destroyed in gehenna, not in the grave. Compare Rev. 20: 12, 14, 15. "And I saw the dead small and great stand before God: and the books were opened and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (hades, the grave) delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

In this awful vision of the future judgment, John saw the dead, i. e., those who had died, stand before God. Do you say, that they were dead when they stood before God to be judged? Now consider what this implies. It implies that the righteous stood, dead men, (corpses) before the living God. Both characters stand before God. There is not the least intimation that one class stood dead and the other alive. Both stand to be judged, as conscious, accountable, intelligent beings, to receive their eternal destinies. This is confirmed by two other proofs. First, their being cast into the lake of fire, which would be no punishment if they were unconscious. Secondly, that this lake of fire is to be to them a second death, which it cannot possibly be, if there is no revival from the first. Moreover, the Sacred Scripture represents that men will be hurt by the second death, which you know cannot be without consciousness.

2 Thess. 1: 6, 7;—"Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints," &c.

Observe, my brethren, that the plain teaching here is, that those men who lived 1800 years ago, persecuting the Thessalonian believers, are to be punished with tribulation, which implies conscious suffering and an everlasting destruction not before and at their first death, but when "the Lord shall be revealed from heaven." The apostle declares (whatever our sympathy may be,) that this future tribulation and fiery destruction is a righteous thing with God, who reveals himself as "the just God" as well as "the Savior."

PILGRIMS AND STRANGERS.

Though not long I've wandered a pilgrim and stranger
In this dark world of sin, and sorrow and strife;
When the pilgrim's bark is ofttimes a lone ranger
Tossed on the tempestuous billows of life;

Yet ofttimes have I tasted earth's bitterest cup,
When loved ones were folded in death's cold embrace;
When friendship grown cold by the vile slanderer's lip,
When cast far away from my kindred and place.

My trust is in Jesus, how sweet and consoling
His promises are—they never will fail;
Though dark be the clouds that around me are rolling,
Thy presence sustains me, thine arm will prevail.

Death.

NUMBER ONE.

BRO. GRANT:—It is quite amusing sometimes to hear people talk about death. They make it one of the most mysterious things in the universe. They attach a false meaning to it altogether. As if I were to claim that "cut off" means to add on, or to extend and enlarge; so they claim that death is but the expansion of the vital functions into a more perfect sphere of life and action. And this again they will mystify with another explanation or contradiction.

Ask them what is meant in this declaration to Adam, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," and they will say, "spiritual death." Ask them again, Why do men die and go into the grave? and they will say, "because Adam sinned." How is it now, if spiritual death was the penalty that literal death is the result? This seems but to add dust and smoke to the already cloudy air instead of clearing the sight and brightening our vision. This is the result of not believing God means what he says.

But how shall we know what kind of death he means when he only says, "Thou shalt surely die?" Surely we ought to understand what is meant when God explains it himself. And it may be of great use to us,—a great benefit,—for one wrong step leads to another, and so on until one gets so far away that he cannot satisfy himself where he is. One wrong step at the outset, although small, and almost imperceptible, will soon lead into deep, boggy swamps of mysticism. Hence the importance of getting a right start. The way to get out, or rather, to keep out of the swamp on this subject, I will show in my next.

From Sr. V. N. Cudworth.

Bro. Grant:—As I have been permitted to witness the work of God in Goshen, I desire to publish it to all around, that men may be apprised of his wonderful works. "Praise ye the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever." His truth has had a glorious triumph, and many hearts have been made to rejoice, in pure Bible doctrines, who have long loved the Lord, and served him according to all the light that had shone in their pathway, praying for their unconverted children, and waiting patiently to see the salvation of God. The union among this little band has reminded me of the primitive christians, and blessed days of '53 and '54.

Bro. Pratt and Hemenway have been laboring harmoniously together. Bro. P. first went to Goshen, and finding the fields white for harvest, prayed God to send another laborer into the harvest. Bro. H. came to his aid; and like Paul and Silas (though not in prison) at midnight, they have been constrained to rejoice and sing praises together. Fifty-seven have been baptized. Although the weather was cold, their faces emerged from the symbolic grave shining with hope and love. There has been no undue excitement, no false colors hoisted, to blind and entice, but the naked truth, in all its eloquent simplicity and unadorned beauty, has been presented to the mind. Life and death have been set before the people, without the extra touches of fancy and human reasonings. All glory be ascribed to Israel's God forever. Let the heavens rejoice, and the angels raise another anthem of praise! Hallelujah! And the righteous will say Amen!

From W. Sheldon.

Eld. Grant:—I am now holding a protracted meeting in this place, commenced over a week ago. Its results, so far, have been as follows:

1. The Christian Church of which I am pastor, are all engaged.
2. Backsliders have been reclaimed.
3. One sinner converted.
4. The interest is fast increasing. Last night ten or twelve rose for prayers, and several others wept bitterly.

Our meetings are all deeply solemn. Multitudes have as much conviction as they can resist. We expect a great move. Have an overflowing house, and the best order I ever witnessed.

From Sr. M. H. Thayer.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—The salvation wrought out by Christ looks great, and the conflict great through which we must pass before we obtain the end of our faith. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, and while we have this faith, our anchor is cast within the veil whither our forerunner is for us entered. Hence it is easy for us to set our affections on things above and not on the earth, for where our treasure is there will our hearts be also.

I must still plead grace for grace, that the same spirit which first called after me and made me feel the need of a Savior, and has admonished, reproved, and comforted me ever since, will perform the good work in me, until the strength of corrupt human nature shall have been overcome on every point, and Christ fully formed.

I long to be like him; but often do I feel my weakness and poverty to that degree that I am almost ready to sink, but still dare not say there is no hope, for again I am lifted as with a strong arm and feel a blest security while resting in the Rock of my salvation. This dying daily is very profitable. Thus we have strength to meet our outward foes; we fear not the reproach of men, neither are afraid of their revilings, for He that is in us is greater than he that is in the world. [illegible]

From Bro. W. M. Ingham.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to give a short account of my tour to the Aroostook Co., Me. Left Woodstock, N. B., Jan. 21st. Had one meeting on the way.

23d. Arrived at the Aroostook river. Unexpectedly met with a number of preaching brethren—three Christian preachers; Bro. Pitcher of Monticello, Me., Bro. Durgan of Newbury, Me., Bro. Beluinin of Aroostook, Bro. Reed, Advent preacher, of Old Town, Me. Had a union meeting. All took a part in it. Bro. Pitcher's appointment, but he gave free liberty to Bro. Reed and myself to preach. We had a number of meetings together. The Lord blessed the word spoken, and I trust a number have been hopefully converted to God. Bro. Reed left two weeks or more ago. I have had meetings in quite a number of places in this county. Quite an interest to hear. Some believe and some believe not. There have been twelve baptized by different preachers. Two by Bro Durgin (Christian preacher), three by Bro. Siperal (Christian Baptist), three by Bro. Pitcher, and four by myself. Had one baptizing together. This looks more like Christianity than we sometimes see. Hope that union will continue and many more will be brought to a knowledge of the truth, that they may be saved in the everlasting kingdom.

Feb. 25th. Had social meeting in company with Bro. Pitcher at Christy school-house. Quite a number spoke. About twenty arose for prayers. After meeting repaired to the river, and Bro. Pitcher baptized two sisters, who went on their way rejoicing. We then separated to go to our several homes, having been absent five weeks. Had meetings all but four or five evenings. Seen some few, I trust, made heirs of the kingdom, by believing and obeying the truth, for which I give God all the glory, and hope I am thankful.

From Bro. E. Dexter.

Bro. Grant:—I would say for the encouragement of the way-worn travelers to the kingdom, that the Lord in mercy is reviving his work in this place. There has been quite an interest among the children of God for some time past, and their prayers have been that the Lord would revive his work. Last week we commenced a protracted meeting, and the result has been that sinners have been converted, and are praising God; and many are anxiously inquiring the way to Zion, saying, "What shall I do to be saved?" Our prayer is that they may believe on the Lord Jesus, that they may be saved from that destruction that awaits the ungodly, and will soon be upon them.

Yours in tribulation, waiting and praying, "Thy kingdom come."

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. F. Converse writes:—"In a little while from this Jesus will be here. Do we realize it? Are we making every preparation possible for the solemn and glorious event? We want to be watching as a man would be that knew the watch in which a thief would come to break open his house and take his goods. Do we occupy this wakeful position? None other is safe. We know not the day and hour in which he may come; therefore we want to be all ready, every moment, with loins girt about with truth, our lamps trimmed and burning, and we ourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord. Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and perfect holiness in the fear of God. Let us be perfectly awake now. He that sleeps now knows not his danger. Signs loom up from every quarter that speak Jesus near. O my brethren, shall we be ready when he comes?"

—:o:—

Sr. S. E. Teeple writes from Roxbury Ct.:—"The cause of God is low in this place, and there is but little to encourage; yet I feel I must go on. I do not want to go back, nor even look back, for I often think of the many precious seasons I have had with the dear pilgrims on the way to the better land, and as we have got so near, I want the privilege of having an abundant entrance. Praise God! my soul is happy at the thought. In a little while from this deliverance will come. I groan, I sigh, come Lord Jesus, restore the kingdom, and clothe thy saints with immortality. Amen and amen."

—:o:—

Bro. A. A. Tupper writes from Scot's Bay, N. S.:—Although we are tired, we are not cast down, for our hope is in the soon coming of Him whose right it is to reign, and when he doth appear we shall be like him.

But while we are in the flesh we expect to have persecution and trials, for they hated our Lord and they will hate us; they persecuted him, and they will persecute us; for the servant is not greater than his Lord. We have trusted him and he has upheld us in six troubles, and in seven he will not forsake us. If our help lay in an arm of flesh, we should indeed be discouraged; but it does not; it lies in Him who has conquered death and hell, and led captivity captive. We solicit the prayers of the brethren that we may be kept from the evils to come."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 13, 1858.

Spiritualism.

We purpose to give some facts connected with Spiritualism, with which all of our readers should be familiar. We look upon this system of error as one of the strong and certain evidences that the great day of the Lord is at hand; indeed, if we had no other proof, we see in this sufficient to convince us that Jesus will not tarry long. Still we think the church of Christ is not half awake to her danger from this greatest of all antagonists to christianity. This is the Gibralter of infidelity,—the Goliah among the Lord's enemies. It may look "like a lamb," but it speaks "as a dragon." The time seems to have fully come when "the spirits of devils" are "working miracles." In immediate proximity to these wonder-workings, the Savior comes "as a thief," when these deceivers least expect him. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." Why not? Because, as Peter says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." We have great reason to be thankful for the light of prophecy, now shining upon our pathway. But for this all would be darkness around. As the prophecy gives the light, those who do not "take heed" unto it, must of course walk in darkness.

We now come to notice the Political object of Spiritualism.

On March 10th, 1857, a convention of Spiritualists was commenced in Boston, one object of which, as expressed in their call for the conference, was,

"To consider the wisdom of taking incipient steps toward forming a new confederation, wherein distinctions of clime, of color and of sex will be no bar to equality."

In the Spiritual Telegraph, of June 20, 1857, we have an account of a similar convention held in the city of New York. The report says, their

"Object is to overturn the supposed inharmonies and evils of the present condition, and in their place to establish 'a new social order on the earth.'"

This "new social order" is more fully set forth in the Telegraph of June 13th, 1857, under the head of "Practical Spiritualism—Purposes and Plans." The writer remarks,

"For the last four or five years, a movement has been going forward, comparatively unobserved by the public at large, whose central purpose is no less than the entire regeneration . . . of the whole human race. . . . It is hardly to be supposed that an enterprise so startling to the world as the last eight years have proved the spiritual movement to be, would have for its grand end any thing like the presentation of mere pheonomenal exhibitions, abstract philosophies, the incidental re-union and gratification of long severed and lacerated affections, or even the generation of a new, a broader and more living conviction of the truth of immortality. All these, indeed, and more, in the same line, have been, and still are, very useful, and are not in the least to be undervalued; but if the movement itself rested in them as an end, it would seem that the end itself was quite unworthy of such a grand commencement, such a wide spread interest, and such hopes and aspirations as have already been created.

The great purpose of the spirit world, then, is of a much broader nature, and a more thoroughly practical spirit. . . It aims, in short, at the establishment of a new social order on the earth, through whose mediatorial harmony alone the Divine truth and its good can descend in blessing only upon and into a waiting and responsive race. . . .

It is also the purpose of Spiritualism to so educate a class of persons in certain practical functions, that they shall become pivots of groups in the coming new social order. . . About two hundred and fifty persons have already been selected. . . These persons are scattered all over the United States and the provinces. . .

Another purpose of the movement is the establishment of a new system of government. It is a combination of the two elements of monarchy and republicanism, making, therefore (partly because of the combination, and partly for other reasons,) a new idea in government. It has already matured its plans to quite an extent. . . .

[This looks like a two horned beast.—Ed.]

All these things grow out of a New Church—a church of principles—not of dogmas. This church is to be both interior and exterior, or individual and organic. It is to reconcile both the Catholic and the Protestant phases of the religious idea, not overlooking the three great religions (See Rev. 16: 13,) which dogmatic Christianism does not recognise, viz., Hindooism, Mohammedanism and Judaism. It is the grand unitizing church of the spiritual age, and blends into harmony the antagonized elements of the analytic ages. It is the mother of all institutions for external uses—therefore, the mother of the States, and in the combination takes place the "Union of Church and State." [This looks like an image to the beast.—Ed.]

What is necessary in order to become a member of this "grand unitizing church?" The answer is given in a resolution passed at a Spiritualist Convention, held last year, at Rockford, Ill.

Resolved, That Spiritualism, according to the modern acceptation of that term, embraces all those who believe in the immortality of the soul. . . Beyond this common faith there is no doctrine or creed necessarily incident to Spiritualism."

You see, brethren, that some of us must be excluded from this great church. Thank the Lord for the truth that has caused our exclusion. "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering." Let us "fight the good fight of faith." Our warfare will be earnest, but victory is certain to the faithful.

Conference.

Our meetings, during the Conference at Chapman Hall, will commence at 10 o'clock A. M., 2 and 7 o'clock P. M. Those who may arrive in the city at hours when the Conference is not in session, can call at our office, 167 Hanover St. Remember, Chapman Hall is in Chapman Place, out of School St., near Tremont Temple. Almost any one residing in the city can give you directions to our place of worship.

Not Correct.

A report has been put in circulation of late, that Bro. Elwin Burnham has left the position of an Independent Evangelist, and joined the Baptists. This is not true. Bro. Burnham is just what he has been all along, for years; but recently, God has opened a wide door for him, among the denominations, with whom he is preaching to crowded houses, and seeing extensive revivals. His views and position are unchanged.

Particular Notice.

1. That new book,—"The Great Controversy between God and Man,—its Origin, Progress and End," by H. L. Hastings, is now ready for delivery. It is a neat 12mo volume of about 170 pages—large type, pure white paper, and neatly bound in cloth. There are none of them in paper covers; as cloth is so much more durable it was thought best to bind up the whole edition in that binding. The price of the work is 60 cents, for which it will be sent to any address by mail, post-paid.

2. As to the merits of the work there is a difference of opinion, some thinking it valuable, some saying it is the best thing from the author's pen yet, some regarding its arguments as conclusive, and others regarding it as "a rapid and hasty glance at the more prominent events involved in historic prophecy without any attempt at logical argument or demonstration of disputed points." Some think it "easy and pleasant reading for those who like such a style of writing," while others pronounce it a very good book with the exception of five or six lines; and others still probably regard it as being as full of heresy as an egg is of meat!

3. As to deciding the case I shall not presume to attempt it, for I think likely one side may have just as good ground for an opinion as the other, at least in their own estimation. I would not advise any one to go without a Bible, or bread, or shoes for the sake of buying the book before they know what it is. I think however that I may safely say that a copy of it won't be likely to do more damage to a family than a pound and a half of tea,—two pounds of tobacco, three pounds of coffee, or sixty cents worth of snuff. So I think people generally would run no great risk in buying a copy with the money which they might otherwise expend for these and kindred abominations. If after trying both arrangements for a year, they think that they have made a losing bargain I will refund them the sixty cents on condition that they give it to the poor or take it to spread the gospel.

But enough. Who wants the book? The price is for

One copy, post-paid, 60 cents.

Eleven copies by express at the cost of the purchaser, $5.

Those who buy to sell again can have it at 45 cents a copy, with a discount on large orders accompanied by the cash.

Now till March 16th, address orders to H. L. Hastings, care of Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

After that, H. L. Hastings, care of J. J. Reed, 16 Spruce street, New York, until March 25th. Then after that, H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

I prefer receiving orders in New York, as I can usually send more direct from N. Y. to any part of the country, and I am also saved the trouble and expense of packing and repacking them and frieghting them to Rochester.

I shall be glad to receive large orders for tracts and books when in N. Y. from all quarters. Let brethren send in for their summer's stock. I have just issued another edition of Pauline Theology, or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the epistles of Paul, of which, though it was first published in 1853,—only four and a half years ago, there have been printed more than eight thousand five hundred. Persons wishing this can now have their orders filled at 15 cents single, $10 per hundred.

Tracts on hand as usual. Send in your orders. A few copies of the Voice of the Church on hand—price $1; $9 per dozen. Let the orders be sent in at once. Send the money if you can. If not, send part of it—if not, tell when you think you can send it. All these books and tracts are free to the poor. If you want to read them, send in your orders speedily.

My health is improving slowly. Friends who are indebted for books will confer a favor by remitting to me at Boston or N. Y. Postage stamps are always current, as good as gold, better than western or southern bills. I must close. God bless you all.

H. L. Hastings.

For the Crisis.

Reminiscence of the Past.

No III.

It requires a strong and well-grounded hope of a happy resurrection to make a death-bed scene any other than one of fearful interest. The christian with dying eyes upraised and confidently crying "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God," can gather his garments closely around him, and calmly step down into the grave, assured that the eye that never sleepeth shall watch his slumbering dust, and call him forth again clothed with new life imperishable and immortal.

When even with these appliances death is not shorn of all his horrors, how much more dreadful indeed is the presence of the grisly monster when the hapless victim has not one ray of glad anticipation thrown athwart that worse than Egyptian darkness of the valley of the shadow of death, his whole soul filled with a "fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation!" I call to recollection such a scene, in sad contrast to that of the young believer mentioned in my last; and I trust it will be a warning to all young persons who tamper for a moment with the damning doctrine of infidelity.

The subject of the following sketch, whom I shall call James Leinster, had once been a youth of much promise. I knew him well. His father for more than forty years had been the "doctor" of a small country town, and, on dying left his widow much younger than himself, and his only child then ten years old, a moderate competence.

It had always been the hope of the bereaved wife that her son would choose the ministry, and labored hard, as only a Christian mother can labor, to bring up her child in the fear of the Lord. His rapid progress in his studies soon advanced him above many boys older than himself; the injudicious praise bestowed upon the ardent youth begot in him a love of adulation and desire to excel, which in time ripened into inordinate vanity. His mother, blinded by her partiality, at first neglected to counteract the evil influence, and added her quota, till she saw too late the growing arrogance of the spoiled boy, and vainly strove to remedy it. James loved his mother, and despite his folly he had many sincere friends. He listened to his mother's warnings, but made light of her fears and said that he was only a little ahead of others, and as they progressed would discover that he was not very far out of the right track.

In an evil hour he joined a society of "free thinkers," where religion was called priestcraft, and the Bible a pack of improbabilities.

When once the straying footsteps cross the Rubicon the descent is fearfully abrupt. From blushing for religion the unfortunate youth soon learned to laugh at it, and in one short year this child of many blighted hopes and fruitless prayers was one of the most daring scoffers in that skeptical band. It was long before the broken-hearted mother heard of, and longer still ere she believed in, the dreadful apostasy of her only son. In agony she besought him to abjure his blasphemy; and warned him of the inevitable consequence of a persistence in his present course. Her prayers fell unheeded upon his ears—and she died.

From the period of his mother's death James Leinster grew worse and worse until even his wicked companions seemed to shudder at the unparalleled enormity of his profanity. The remembrance of his dying mother haunted him day and night; and so horridly was his nature perverted that when she was casually mentioned in his presence he would break out into insane maledictions upon her name and wish he had never been born. I once heard him exclaim—"If there be a heaven of happiness, I know that my mother is there; but I'd rather suffer everlasting torment than meet her eye, were my misery a thousand times greater than it is now!" And he struck his breast with a gesture of fierce despair. The never-dying worm of conscience was gnawing at his heart, and he plunged into dissipation and drunkenness to drown the feelings of remorse which were torturing him day and night.

At length debauchery and mental suffering had done their work, and the fiat had gone forth—"Put thy house in order for thou shalt die and not live!" The dark valley was before him and he must travel it—

Where he not even dared to pray,
And not a single heavenly ray
Shone on that gloomy path!

I had not seen him for the past five or six months, but having heard that he was sick I visited him as soon as I could. His house seemed to lack nothing of earthly comfort; and a young woman a few months his wife, sat sewing by his bed. She gave me a quiet nod of welcome and pointed in silence to a chair, which I took and inquired in an under-tone after the invalid. Before she could reply he opened his eyes and expressed his satisfaction at seeing me.

"There is nothing," said he "which annoys me so much as whispering. I feel as nervous as when a child I listened to legends and wild goblin stories."

"I thought you were sleeping James," replied his wife.

"Sleep," cried the unhappy man, "I never sleep! Sleep is the season of rest, and I never rest. Sometimes I am unconscious, but sleep and I have long parted."

I found that he had recourse to opium also to blunt the poisoned arrows of bitter thought. I mechanically looked around upon the table, in the window, and on the few book-shelves to find a Bible, but the word of God was proscribed, and "the blood of the covenant counted an unholy thing." The poor wife saw my glance, and gave utterance to a sound half groan, half sob, which seemed to come from a heavy heart. Leinster noted my look of inquiry, and promptly and sternly anticipated any farther advances on forbidden ground.

"C——," said he, "I am glad to see you; but if you are come to trouble me with any of your religious cant, the sooner you go the better, that's all."

"James," I replied, as calmly as I could "if I saw you about to destroy yourself by poison or the knife, I should deprive you of them without asking leave; and will I see you going headlong to perdition without stretching out my hand to stay you? God forbid! O Leinster, there may yet be time! Your sins have been great, but so is the mercy of the Saviour. One cry for mercy may be your salvation."

I drew near and took him by the hand, and methought a tear glittered in his haggard eye. I slowly sank upon my knees and his wife did likewise. The wretched man appeared to hesitate. The Spirit of God seemed to flutter a moment around his stony heart as if it sought an entrance; but it was furiously driven off and returned to him no more! The hand which I had retained was torn fiercely from my loving grasp and the sick man screamed—

"Leave me with your confounded sniffling! I'd rather hear the yelling of a thousand devils than that puny cry for mercy. Mercy! hell! damnation! O God! O God!"

He was seized with a dreadful fit, and wallowed foaming. I ran for assistance, but all in vain. A blood-vessel had burst in his lungs and ere the doctor arrived the blasphemer was a livid, horrifying corpse.

JNO. F. COTTON.

The Lord at Work.

The following from the N. Y. correspondent of the Boston Journal under date of March 4th is an item of interest to the praying ones:—

The John street church was crowded to-day in all its parts, and among the thrilling incidents of the service it was announced that a noted bully and "Short Boy" of New York, known as "Awful Gardner" was under deep conviction and had been forward to the altar three times for prayer. He had under his charge several persons training for the ring; these he dismissed and said he was resolved to "seek the Lord,"—then he would visit his old haunts and take leave of his old companions.

The N. Y. Tribune says still further;—

He is now at a small town in the vicinity of New York, where his brother was recently converted, and where he himself has been led seriously to consider the subject of religion. He attended an inquiry meeting held in a Methodist church, and to the surprise and pleasure of the better class of his friends, requested the prayers of the congregation—a request which on three different occasions he repeated. Having some unimportant business to do in this city, a friend asked him if he would "jump into the cars and go down and attend to it." He replied, "I have more important business to attend to first, and I shall not go to the city till it is done." He has at present under his training three men for a prize fight. On being asked if he would give them further lessons, he replied that he would go to them soon, but on a different errand from that of boxing or training," and that he would "try to persuade them to give up their fighting, to reform their character, and to embrace religion." We learn that his earnestness and seriousness are undoubted, and that he has become hopefully converted.

The Value of Prayer.

Prayer is a haven to the shipwrecked man, an anchor to them that are sinking in the waves, a staff to the limbs that totter, a mine of jewels to the poor, a healer of diseases, and a guardian of health. Prayer at once secures the continuance of our blessings, and dissipates the cloud of our calamities. O blessed prayer! thou art the unwearied conquerer of human woes, the firm foundation of human happiness, the source of ever-enduring joy, the mother of philosophy. The man who can pray truly, though languishing in extremest indigence, is richer than all beside; whilst the wretch who never bowed the knee, though proudly seated as the monarch of all nations, is of all men the most destitute.—Chrysostom.

For the Crisis.

Plain Truth.

A man may hate sin and yet be a sinner still.

1. A man may hate sin because of the evil it brings upon him. Thus it was with Absalom.

2. A man may hate sin more in others than himself,—the hypocrite hates hypocricy in others,—so doth the drunkard hate the sin of drunkenness in others;—the liar also hates falsehood in others.

3. A man may hate one sin as being contrary to another sin. As for instance; pride and covetousness;—they are contrary.

Secondly; we remark that there is a hatred of sin, which is a true sign of grace in the heart of the believer. Such hate sin as follows:

1. Because it is offensive to God.

2. Because it is a transgression of the holy law of God.

3. Because it does in a degree crucify the Son of God afresh.

4 Because it quenches the Spirit of God, and grieves it away.

Hence, we infer, that all true christians hate all sin.

Oh may the Lord help us, who have named the name of Christ, to hate all sin, as sin!—that our sins may go to judgment before hand; and not follow after to condemn us there.

BRO. GRANT:—SIR.—By some mistake, my letters have been mislaid, and I have just received a package of letters inquiring what my recipes are, &c. I would say to those brethren who have written me that I have but just received their letters, and will answer them as fast as I can find time. C. C. BROWN.

Debt and Grace.

AS RELATED TO THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.—BY C. F. HUDSON.

Notices of the Press.

"We have here a work surpassing in elaborateness and completeness the most of modern theological productions... The author is mild and candid in the statement of his views, correct in his representations of others, and exceedingly full and impartial in his exhibition of the various phases of belief and conjecture that have prevailed, both among philosophers and christian writers, from the Fathers down to the present time.... Far broader in its views than Beecher's 'Conflict of Ages,' more scriptural and thorough, though less impressive and eloquent, it will probably evoke as much criticism and as greatly disturb the stream of religious controversy."—Zion's Herald.

"The following communication is from one of the best informed theologians of America. 'The earnest, religious spirit which pervades it must command the respect of candid minds in every denomination of christians.... It is a work with which no one who feels an interest in the subject can afford to dispense, whatever may be his views.... It is not merely a work of learning; it is full of thought; it everywhere bears the mark of an acute and vigorous intellect.... I cannot help believing that it will be regarded by those capable of appreciating it as one of the most valuable contributions to our theological literature which has appeared for many years.'"—Christian Register.

"His work shows very careful and extensive research, and on many collateral points his suggestions will be found instructive and important.... The aim of the book is, by showing the limitation of evil, to vindicate the goodness of God. There is scarcely one of the numerous positions of the writer for which he does not find collateral support in passages from the writings of distinguished Christian authors of past centuries."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"This is unquestionably the most candid and the most able work yet produced in our theological literature against the doctrine of eternal suffering... The book cannot fail to make a stir among theologians, and we hope to see it elaborately answered in our critical periodicals."—Christian Advocate and Journal.

Health Department.

Tobacco.

No. XIV.

We were conversing the other day with a good brother in Christ, who has now totally abandoned tea and coffee, and tobacco, who said, he had been tormented with delirium tremens, as the result of using tobacco. Many others can give the same sad testimony; but every one who abstains, finds himself improving physically, and spiritually too, if he is trying to serve the Lord.

Says Dr. R. T. Thrall, "It is difficult to find, among the thousand ways that human beings have worked out the problem of sensual depravity, a habit more intrinsically filthy and indecently disgusting than smoking, chewing and snuffing this noxious weed. It has been the handmaid of intemperance, and ranks next to alcohol in its depraving influence on the moral and physical constitution of man. It seems to be a law of perverted appetency, that the more 'foul, strange, and unnatural,' the artificial excitant to which mankind resort, the more potent and fascinating is its spell, when once the organic sensibilities have been subdued by it. The greater the resulting depravity, the stronger will the depraved appetite cling unto the instrument of such depravity." Dr. Thrall further remarks of tobacco,—"That its general employment in civilized society is one of the most efficient agencies at work in disordering the machinery of human life, every intelligent physiologist knows; and it is really surprising that so many medical practitioners, who are presumed to know something of the nature of poisons, as well as the laws of life and health, commend its use to the community by their own examples.... I have known more than one man who considered himself too poor to afford his family a newspaper at three cents a week, yet who was able to smoke half a dozen cigars a day at two or three cents each.

There is a still stronger motive than I have named, which ought to be brought to bear against this bane—the christian principle.... How can christians, whose 'better world' contemplates the full development of both feeling and action, the perfect employment and full enjoyment of all the moral and intellectual powers, reconcile with their theory a system which perverts and paralyzes both?

A little more than a year ago a gentleman was boarding at my establishment, where his wife was under treatment for a paralytic affection. Though in delicate health, he was able to attend to his regular daily business in one of the banks of this city. Observing him to be troubled with a dyspeptic cough, and ascertaining that he chewed tobacco constantly, besides smoking several cigars a day in the streets, I took repeated occasions to admonish him of the stern necessity of entire abstinence from 'the weed,' if he wished to keep consumption off many, years. He allowed that the habit was somewhat injurious, but ridiculed the idea that death was among the possible consequences. A few months after, he was the subject of confirmed bronchitis; and being suddenly prostrated by an attack of hemorrhage from the lungs, he became alarmed, and left off tobacco entirely. For three or four months his health improved, and he gained considerable flesh, when, strange to say, he took to smoking cigars again. He is now in his grave. His history is that of scores, whose cases have come under my observation.

It is difficult to make the confirmed 'tobacconist' understand its mischievous effects on his own organism by referring to his own feelings—they are perverted. After the habit is established his habits become so metamorphosed that he feels better with it than without it. To make him have a realizing sense of the truth, he must see its operation upon an untainted organism. And if he will carefully observe the modus operandi of the first quid, or the first puff of a cigar, or the first pinch of snuff, upon any person whose nerves have not been corrupted by narcotics, he will have demonstration strong enough that tobacco properly ranks among the most virulent poisons.

Obituary.

Died, in Granby, Mass., Feb. 16th, Lorenzo Albian Robinson, youngest son of Lewis and Ruth M. Robinson, aged five years, one month and twenty-four days.

The subject of this notice, our own beloved child, suffered very much during his sickness, (caused by the croup in its most aggravated form,) yet with patience far beyond his years. The day before he died he whispered, "I can't go now, I can't go now:" but an hour or two before his death he again whispered, "I want to go home, I want to go home." A little after, he called his mother to him and gave her his farewell kiss. Individually he called upon a number of other persons, especially those who had attended upon him in his sickness, and gave them his last embrace and farewell smile, and soon the lamp of life went out.

We sorrow, but not without hope. We grieve, but not without blessed anticipations of the future; for we believe that Jesus died and rose again, and that they who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

L. ROBINSON.

Died, in Lunenburgh, Feb. 5th, Susan W. Hale, aged fifty-nine years.

Sister Hale, in early life, consecrated herself to the service of the Lord, joined the Congregational church in Waterford, Maine; afterward removed to Lunenburgh, Mass., and became a member of the Congregational church in this town. Here she continued an acceptable member, till in '42 embracing the Advent doctrine as then taught, and being greatly revived in the faith and power of godliness, she devoted much of her time in visiting her friends, far and near, to set before them the evidences of the near coming of Christ; and thereby persuade them to get ready for that event. She continued firm in the doctrine and spirit of the approaching Advent, and in her last sickness her faith was buoyant and victorious, and her death peaceful and triumphant.

She had previously anticipated tarrying here and sharing the instantaneous change, without the passage of death; but as the Lord had otherwise determined, she cheerfully submitted.

She dwelt with great delight upon the doctrine of the resurrection, expressing a feeling of assurance that she should soon return from the grave, be glorified, and live forever.

Foreign News.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

NEW YORK, March 6.

The steamship Europa, Capt. Leitch, from Liverpool the 20th ult., arrived here at 12 o'clock.

MONEY AND BUSINESS IN ENGLAND.

The Liverpool Times of 20th ult. says: "Further news from India this week shows that the work of pacifying Bengal is progressing satisfactorily, and our advices from the manufacturing districts indicate the faith the india houses have in the early improvement in business in India generally, for large transactions would have been entered into but for the high prices demanded by the spinners. Money still continues most abundant, but there does not seem to be the inclination to use it for commercial purposes.

FRANCE.

The fact of an intimate understanding between France and Austria is regarded as probable.

It is said that a determined crusade is to be carried on by the Prefects of Departments against all persons enterraining Republican opinions.

A notice from the British foreign office says that no person is henceforth to be permitted to land in France without a passport.

There is a rumor of an intended meeting between the Emperors of France and Austria early in the Spring.

A report was current that the trial of Orsini was deferred, in order that the French government might apply to the English government for the extradition of Mr. Bernard, the refugee arrested in London.

CHINA.

There is nothing later from China, but the China correspondence gives ample details of the bombardment of that place. The assault and capture of Gough's Fort took place just as the mail was leaving, so that no particulars are received. All the hill defences of the city were in possession of the English and French. The whole of the operation had been conducted with a view to occasion the smallest possible sacrifice of life. At the last moment the Chinese showed no signs of surrendering, but continued to fire at their adversaries from the tops of houses. The position of the allies is such that they could easily destroy the city in case of continued obstinacy. The official dispatches report that the city was escaladed and captured with trifling loss on the morning of the 29th December.

INDIA.

Bombay dates to Jan 24 are received. The capture of Furruckabad and Futtyghur by Sir Colin Campbell is confirmed. The Nuwab fled across the Ganges into Rohilcund whither Sir Colin was about to follow him, and after the subjugation of Rohilcund, the commander-in-chief was to advance again upon Lucknow

The Rajah of Kotah is said to be anxious to make terms All well in Punjaub and in the Madras and Bombay presidences.

On the 12th and 16th January, Sir James Outram, at the Alumbagh, was attacked by the rebels, who on both occasions were driven back with great slaughter. In the last engagement the leader of the rebels was taken prisoner.

The Bhowal contingent was disarmed at Sehore by Gen. Rose, and 150 of the mutineers were tried and shot.

The Governor General was said to be on his way to the Northwest Provinces.

Strong forces were marching on Saugor and on Rajpodtana.

The Indian papers state that the country all over was being tranquilized by degrees, but that a vast amount of work was still to be performed.

EGYPT.

The correspondent of the London Times, writing from Alexandria on the 5th of February, says: The United States corvette Constellation, after a sojourn here of about ten days, has taken her departure for Messina. It was at one time thought that she would first steer for the coast of Syria, in order to give the support of her presence to the American Consul General, who left for Java a few days ago for the purpose of making an investigation into the circumstances attending an outrage of a most ruffianly nature, of which an American missionary, stationed at Jaffa, and his family, have lately been the victims. This gentleman's house was broken into during the night; he himself was stunned by a blow on the head; his son-in-law killed outright; and his wife and daughter subjected to the grossest indignities at the hands of the assassins. The atrocity has been ascribed to an outbreak of Mohammedan fanaticism, but it seems likely that it was merely an aggravated case of burglary, and Mr. DeLeon, the United States Consul, will, no doubt, find the Turkish authorities fully disposed to second him in his efforts to trace out the authors of the crime without the necessity of the threat that would be implied by the presence of a ship-of-war.

Domestic Summary.

FROM KANSAS.

[illegible] Thursday, Feb. 25, 1858.

A party of Free State men, led by Captains Montgomery and Bayne, marched into the town and took possession of it. Clark and his marauding band of Missourians had fled on their approach. The Free State men had writs for their arrest The people earnestly entreated that their property might not be destroyed, and made a treaty with the Free State men, in which they promised faithfully to restore all the property which had been taken from Mr. Johnson, and to do nothing hereafter to provoke hostilities. They disbanded upon the conclusion of this treaty.

But a few days later, when the time arrived upon which the Fort Scott people had promised to restore Mr. Johnson's property, he went into the village for it, with his two sons. He found the place in possession of Clarke and a force of eighty men, mostly from Missouri. He and his sons were chased from the town and followed three miles by the Missourians, but succeeded in making their scape.—Boston Journal.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise hey will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

General Conference.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a General Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, March 16th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters who attended the Conference one year since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who came to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be persuaded to come to the one now proposed may not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded by rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet not as sectarians to advance party interests but as Christians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we, like Caleb and Joshua, be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel? Brethren, arouse to the conflict! The victory is sure Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldier, awake and gird thine armor! "Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the glad triumph upon Eden's plains of glory.

LINES.

AIR.—"Fairy-like music."

What seraph-like music steals soft on my ear,
And floats on the breeze in melody clear!
'Tis the voice of the ransomed; how sweetly they sing
Their anthems of praise to Jesus their King!

Methinks now I see them, in heavenly bands,
With crowns of bright glory, and palms in their hands;
Which in eternal triumph they wave 'mid the crowd,
As ever they chant their hosannas aloud.

In majestic splendor amid the glad throngs
Stands He, who in mockery was once crowned with thorns;
His voice, O how charming! how noble his mien!
The royal equipage around him is seen.

All nature rejoices and welcomes her King;
With songs of redemption Heaven's arches now ring;
The angelic harpings blend soft with the strain
And sweetly re-echo o'er earth's wide domain.

Truth Gaining Ground in Erie, Pa.

Having just returned from the above place, by request I write a few lines for the encouragement of the scattered ones, who with us are looking for immortality through Christ, at his appearing and kingdom.

For a number of years past, Bro. James W. Roberts and wife have been holding up the truth in that city, and have borne the scoffs and sneers of this wicked and perverse generation, and had become discouraged, at times, thinking they would have to travel alone.

About one year ago, Bro. R. united with a church professing great freedom of views, called "United Brethren in Christ," thinking by that means he might advance the truth, and also glorify God. After being with them awhile he was chosen class leader among them, and therefore had a better chance to advocate the truth. The seed had taken effect, notwithstanding he has had to meet with some opposition. He has endeavored to be wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove. Through his instrumentality the majority of the class have decided in favor of truth. (To God be all the glory.) Also, a young brother has been licensed to preach among them. The truth of God in relation to immortality through Christ, the sleep of the dead, the kingdom of God yet in the future, the saints' inheriting the earth, &c., were so glorious that he could not hold his peace. He soon found that he could not proclaim such truths in the church to which he belonged, and concluded to withdraw from the same. The class unanimously voted him a letter, and received the same from the preacher in charge. Being the Secretary of the Quarterly Conference, he had to attend, and therefore had to stand a trial before their tribunal. He contended that he had not varied from his license, which reads as follows:—"This is to certify that B. W. Braddock is an approved preacher of the gospel among the United Brethren in Christ, so long as his doctrine and deportment are in accordance with the word of God," and then signed. He was asked by the Presiding Elder what he believed in relation to the immortality of the soul. He stated that eternal life was obtained through Christ, and not through Adam. That "the wages of sin is death." The "soul that sinneth it shall die," &c. &c., referring also to other Scriptures on the point; when he was stopped by said P. E., and the following words proceeded from his mouth: "We do not allow you to give the interpretation. We are the Tribunal; we put such meaning to it as we please, and you must subscribe to it."

The Conference then tried to get him to give up the papers he had in his possession. He told them they could have the papers they had given him, viz., his license. But the letter given him by the church in Erie was his own private property. They would not take the license without the letter, therefore he retains both.

Bro. Roberts was next called upon to give an account of himself. He, knowing their desire to entangle him in his talk by saying something in favor of his faith, [illegible] himself before such a tribunal. They tried four different times to get him to speak on the subject, but every time would refer back to his class, and thereby foiled them. Last Saturday the preacher in charge came to Bro. Roberts' house, to talk with him and get him to do something. Bro. R. said he was willing to take the articles of faith in their discipline, and stand a trial upon it. But that did not suit; they did not want to give that a trial. Bro. R. would have proved that they had departed from their discipline instead of him. Bro. R. finally concluded to withdraw. We had been preaching there through the week and the Bro. went to hear us in the evening, took some objections to our faith, and talked with us some about Bro. R. and others, and thought it would be best, as our views were different, to separate; for how could two walk together unless they were agreed? Sunday in the forenoon was his regular appointment. After the preaching Bro. R. and six others withdrew from the United Brethren Church. (Others will soon.) The Bro. spoke very affectingly on the occasion, stating that there was nothing brought against their christian character, that he still loved them as his brethren and sisters in Christ, though they differed with him on doctrine. What I saw of him I believe him to be a christian.

In the afternoon I spoke to the friends on the subject of the Christian hope, and at the close of the meeting, organized according to gospel order, ten gave in their names, and more will soon follow. Bro. Roberts was chosen Deacon. We then attended to the Lord's supper, and the good Lord's blessing rested upon us. We spoke to them again in the evening. My prayer is that there will be a goodly company in the city of Erie, that will be prepared for and have an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of our heavenly Father. The few that have come out in the faith, and have agreed to take the word of God as their only correct rule of faith and practice, are among the poor of this world. They love to hear the word preached, yet they do not expect to hear much, as they are not able to remunerate those who could come. I have come to the conclusion to go there once in five weeks and trust the good Lord for my support. We have of late been in entire new places, where they have heard of, but not heard the doctrine. Praise the good Lord, the truth is taking effect. To him be all the glory.

Yours as ever, praying, "Thy kingdom come." JOHN T. ONGLEY.

"Ask."

"Again I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." And this promise is for us to-day—true as when it fell from the lips of our Master on the listening ears of the Judean disciples. Yes, the God of Daniel and of Elijah lives! The God of our Fathers—of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—yet hears and answers prayer, and his people can yet witness that his ears are open to their cries.

The candlestick was well nigh removed out of its place—the enemy had done his work. From little seeds of envy, distrust and wrong, had grown strong roots of bitterness. Love had waxed cold. Piece by piece the "whole armor" had been taken off. First the gospel shoes were put off, then the shield laid down, then the helmet removed, lastly the sword given up, and prayer restrained before God. The flock had scattered, sheep and lambs wandered from the fold, and no shepherd, watching for their souls, sought to win them back. The lame were turned out of the way, and no pitying hand was extended to help and restore to the path of peace. Sinners thronged the road to ruin and death, and no warning voice was raised, nor prayer or tear followed to save.

Yet a few wept when they remembered Zion and the days when the candle of the Lord shone upon them. The arm of flesh had failed to deliver. In our distress our eyes rested upon the promise—"If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven." Together we approached the throne of grace. The tempter came. We heard the roaring of the Adversary, but faith increased—laughed at impossibilities, and cried, it shall be done!" We asked that the slumbering might be aroused to duty, [illegible] of fault-finding and backsliding; that love and union might be increased, and the church "built up in their most holy faith." And the dry bones began to move. We heard the prayer—"Create in me a clean heart and renew a right spirit within me." The mangled and dissevered members came together, and our ears were greeted with the testimony, "These christians love one another."

We asked that the wandering might be restored, and we heard them say, "I will arise and go to my Father." We asked that convictions might reach the sinner's heart. And we heard the inquiry, "what shall I do to be saved?"

Brethren and Sisters, pray. The prayer of faith will carry on the work of healing and salvation. O thou that hearest prayer,

"Long as we live, when troubles rise,
We'll hasten to thy throne!"

Church Order.

Since we have come out, run awhile, and smashed up in part, in the confusion of ideas, nothing has met the minds of the brethren in general, and probably nothing ever will. There is a certain class that every reformation has set afloat, that live on debating about disputed questions, tying the mint, cummin and anise together, and leaving the more weighty matters. But we have arrived at a point where it is necessary to know who to depend upon, and who are our brethren that will be agreed in carrying forward the work in harmony. This is apostolic.

If the church numbered 120 at the Pentecost, there were so many agreed and acted in concert; and received the blessing. I am not in favor of a long, stringent discipline. God forbid. But the more I travel and observe the present movement, the more I am persuaded we need some kind of Church Order. In many places it has been adopted, and works well, and in unison with those who love peace and good order. Many of the brethren see and acknowledge this. Bro. Edwin Burnham fully endorses this as being something called for at this time, to unite together in some form to strengthen one another.

I have just read a Christian Covenant which strikes me favorably. It is short, easy to be understood, and strong enough to bind Christians together. I therefore recommend it to the notice of the brethren.

"CHRISTIAN COVENANT.

"We, whose names are subjoined, do hereby covenant and agree, by the help of the Lord, to walk together as a church of Christ; faithfully maintaining its ordinances, taking the Bible as our only rule of faith and practice, church order and discipline; making christian character the only test of fellowship and communion.

We further agree, with christian fidelity and meekness, to exercise mutual watchcare, to counsel, admonish or reprove, as duty may require, and to receive the same from each other as becometh the household of faith."

The Seventh Day Sabbath---Is It Binding Now?

BY J. GIBSON.

No. II.

In a former article, I attempted to show that the law, given by Moses, which embraced the ten commandments, was given to Israel, or the literal descendants of Jacob, and them only, and they were all circumcised; therefore it never was binding on the uncircumcised Gentiles. The law was given to circumcised Israel only, "till the seed should come, to whom the promise was made." It was their "schoolmaster, to bring us (them) unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith (or its object—Christ,) is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." Gal. 3: 24, 25. This agrees with what Jesus Christ that "prophet" said. "Hear ye him."—"The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached." In the time of John, we all know, the "seed came to whom the promise was made." Here were the limits of the law that was given by Moses. Do we not hear some say, that the ten commandments were not the Mosaic law, but are the commandments of God? Let us hear Paul, Rom. 7: 6, 7. "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of the spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said thou shalt not covet." We find this was written and engraven on stone, and I can find it nowhere else, and Paul calls it "the law;" and it is that law from which he had just said they were delivered.

I would call the attention of my brethren to the 2d and 3d verses of this chapter. The apostle here represents the condition or relation of the Jewish church to the law, to be like that of a woman to her husband, and says, "So then, if while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; . . . wherefore my brethren ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we might bring forth fruit unto God." Therefore I understand that whosoever claims to be married to Christ, and at the same time is under the law, is in the same condition as the woman who married another man while her first husband was alive. And, according to the apostle's reasoning, he is an adulterer.

Again, Rom. 10: 4, Paul says, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Then, when a person claims to be under the law, have we not reason to think that he is not a believer in Christ? Paul says, Gal. 3: 10, "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse." Ver. 13, 14. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us:" (who are Israelites.) . . . That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles, (who were not under the law) through Jesus Christ: that we (Israelites) might receive the promise of the spirit through faith." Therefore, I understand by Paul's reasoning, that Jesus Christ has become the second husband to the believing, circumcised Israelites, the law or first husband being dead; while he is the first to the uncircumcised, believing Gentiles, who never had been married to the law. I find by reading the 15th chapter of the Acts, that there were some in the apostle's days that desired to have the Gentile believers circumcised and commanded "to keep the law of Moses." And we learn that the Apostles and Elders went up to Jerusalem "to consider this matter; and when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know that a good while ago, God made choice among us that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel and believe." He goes on to show that the Holy Spirit was given to them even as unto the Jews, "and put no difference between them;" and asks, "Now therefore why tempt ye God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?" After Barnabus, Paul and James, among others, had considered the matter, they came to the conclusion to write letters to all the Gentile believers; a part of which is found in the 24th verse. "Forasmuch as we have heard that certain which went out from us, have troubled you with words subverting your souls, saying, ye must be circumcised and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment." 28th ver. "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication; from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well." Not a word do they say to those Gentile converts about remembering "the Sabbath day to keep it holy." If it was not enjoined on them then, I cannot understand why it should be enjoined on us in the nineteenth century. It is somewhat surprising to me, that any one should try to enforce the keeping of the seventh day as a Sabbath, while it is not mentioned in the New Testament. The other nine are; but they are all swallowed up in the two commandments given by Jesus Christ, on which "hang all the law and the prophets."

Paul in Rom. 13: 8, 9, gives the same idea. "Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment it is briefly comprehended in this saying; (found in Matt. 22: 39,) namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

I dare not say that Paul was mistaken, and urge the brethren to keep the fourth commandment as highly necessary to their salvation. For he says again to the Galatians 5: 14, "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this;—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." O my dear brethren, let us cultivate this principle of love in our hearts. I think we have a greater lack of this, than any other of the christian graces.

A PRAYER FOR ISRAEL.

TUNE.—America, or the English National Anthem.

Lord save thine Israel;
Restore thine Israel,
To thine own land!
May Jacob's seed return;
While scattered now they mourn,
Oh give them soon their own
Beloved land!

They have been long cast off,
Long been the Gentiles' scoff,
Without a home;
Their land by strangers trod,
Their tears bedewed its sod:
Oh they have felt thy rod,
Now bring them home!

Their Temple is cast down,
Profaned is the crown
E'en to the ground;
Their Law they cannot keep;
In exile long they weep,
And nought but sorrow reap,
No rest is found!

Oh end the "little while,"
And on them shed thy smile,
And loving word.
Remember Abram's seed,
And make him great indeed,
As long ago decreed,
Oh righteous Lord!

Oh Zion build again!
Erect thy Temple's fane,
With glory bright!
The Palace-city raise,
Where men shall give thee praise,
The nations learn thy ways,
By truth's own light!

Appoint their priests anew:
The Sabbath-rest renew,—
The Jubilee!
Cause Trees of Life to grow,
And Living waters flow,
The Eden land out through,
From sea to sea!

Make Sharon's roses bloom,
And Carmel's wastes assume
Their glorious dress.
His vineyard may each own;
Their fields with plenty crown,
To shake like Lebanon;
Oh thus them bless!

They wait their promised king,
Redemption for to bring:
Soon may he come;—
And end the long delay,
His saving power display,
And reign through endless day:
Soon may he come!

Stray Sheep.

Look them up, hunt them up. Look after the stray sheep if any wander from the fold. Every member on the church list should be looked after. Is there one absent from the fold, the church, the house of prayer, or conference? even once? Rest not till you know the cause of detention—whether sickness, affliction of any kind, the loss of friends—the hand of poverty, destitution, or what is still worse; the tempter may have tempted them from the path of duty. Are they in the dark? the slough of despond, doubting castle? Are they stumbling on the dark mountains of sin and error? Have they fallen among thieves? Look them up, search them out, bring home the wanderers, the lost sheep, whatever is the cause of absence from duty, the privileges of God's house. Rest not till you know the utmost of the causes. "Bear ye one another's burthens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

"Take heed that ye despise not one of those little ones that believe in me, for I say unto you, that in heaven, their angels do always behold the face of their Father, who is in heaven."

"What think ye if a man have an hundred sheep and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine and goeth into the mountains and seeketh that which is gone astray? And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you he rejoiceth more of that sheep than of the ninety and nine which went not astray." "Even so it is not the will of our heavenly Father, who is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

The Shepherd sought his sheep,
The Father sought his child;
They followed me o'er vale and hill,
O'er deserts waste and wild;
They found me nigh to death,
Famished, and faint and lone;
They bound me with the bonds of love,
They saved the wandering one!

Look up the stray sheep. Some churches are remiss on this point, neglect to carry the lambs in their bosom—consequently they wander off into forbidden paths—lose their first love, till by and by—they dishonor their profession or fall to rise no more!

Whereas, had these wanderers from the fold of Christ been timely looked after, watched over, prayed over, provoked to love and good works, they might have been saved from these pitfalls, the wiles of Satan, led on from strength to strength, become bright and shining lights. "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye who are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." "Feed my lambs."

I was a wand'ring sheep,
I would not be controlled;
But now I love my Shepherd's voice—
I love, I love the fold!
I was a wayward child,
I once preferred to roam;
But now I love my Father's voice—
I love, I love his home!

—Golden Rule.

A Child's Truthfulness.

I witnessed a short time ago, in one of our higher courts, a beautiful illustration of the simplicity and power of truth. A little girl nine years of age was offered as a witness against a prisoner who was on trial for a felony, committed in her father's house. "Now, Emily," said the counsel for the prisoner, upon her being offered as a witness, "I desire to know if you understand the nature of an oath?" "I don't know what you mean," was the simple answer. "There, your Honor," said the counsel addressing the court, "is any thing further necessary to demonstrate the validity of my objection? The witness should be rejected. She does not comprehend the nature of an oath."

"Let us see," said the Judge. "Come here, my daughter." Assured by the kind tone and manner of the Judge, the child stepped toward him and looked up confidently in his face, with a calm, clear eye, and in a manner so artless and frank, that it went straight to the heart. "Did you ever take an oath?" inquired the Judge. The little girl stepped back with a look of horror, and the red blood mantled in a blush all over her face and neck as she answered, "No sir." She thought he intended to inquire if she had ever blasphemed.

"I do not mean that, said the Judge, who saw her mistake, "I mean were you ever a witness before?" "No, sir, I never was in court before," was the answer. He handed her the Bible open. "Do you know that book, my daughter?" She looked at it and answered, "Yes sir, it is the Bible." "Do you ever read it?" he asked. "Yes, sir, every evening." "Can you tell me what the Bible is?" inquired the Judge. "It is the word of the great God," she answered. "Well, place your hand upon this Bible and listen to what I say," and he repeated slowly and solemnly the oath usually administered to witnesses. "Now," said the Judge, "you have sworn as a witness, will you tell me what will befall you if you do not tell the truth?" "I shall be shut up in the State Prison," answered the child. "Anything else?" asked the Judge. "I shall never go to heaven," she replied.

"How do you know this?" asked the Judge again. The child took the Bible and turning rapidly to the chapter containing the Commandments, pointed to the injunction, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." "I learned that before I could read." "Has any one talked to you about your being a witness in court here against this man?" inquired the judge. "Yes, sir," she replied, "my mother heard they wanted me to be a witness, and last night she called me to her room and asked me to tell her the Ten Commandments, and then we kneeled down together and she prayed that I might understand how wicked it was to bear false witness against my neighbor, and that God would help me, a little child, to tell the truth, as it was before Him. And when I came up here with father she kissed me, and told me to remember the ninth commandment, and that God would hear every word that I said." "Do you believe this?" asked the Judge, while a tear glistened in his eye and his lip quivered with emotion. "Yes, sir," said the child, with a voice and manner that showed her conviction of its truth was perfect. "God bless you, my child," said the judge, "you have a good mother. This witness is competent," he continued. "Were I on trial for my life, and innocent of the charge against me, I would pray God for such witnesses as this. Let her be examined."

She told her story with the simplicity of a child, as she was, but there was a directness about it which carried conviction of its truth to every heart. She was rigidly cross-examined. The counsel plied her with infinite and ingenious questioning, but she varied from her first question in nothing. The truth as spoken by that little child was sublime. Falsehood and perjury had preceded her testimony. The prisoner had entrenched himself in lies, until he deemed himself impregnable. Witnesses had falsified facts in his favor, and villainy had manufactured for him a sham defence. But before her testimony falsehood was scattered like chaff. The little child, for whom a mother had prayed that strength might be given her to speak the truth as it was before God, broke the cunning devices of matured villainy to pieces like a potter's vessel. The strength that her mother prayed for was given her, and the sublime and terrible simplicity (terrible I mean to the prisoner and his associates) with which she spoke was like a revelation from God himself.—S. H. Hammond.

TO DISPUTANTS.—It is possible that many of the opinions for which we persecute one another, relate to matters which our faculties are unable to comprehend. It is possible that, if our controversies could be submitted to beings of higher knowledge and intelligence than those of man, they would tell us that, for the most part, we are disputing about words which signify no realities, and debating propositions which, being unmeaning, possess neither truth nor falsehood. One thing at least seems clear—that, if the being who inspired the texts on which different sects found their arguments, had intended us to agree in one interpretation of them, he would not have left them susceptible of many.—Archbishop Whately.

A PRESENT HELP.

O God, our everlasting Rock,
Our shelter from earth's warring storms,
To thee we fly from every shock
For shelter in thy mighty arms.

Hope of the weary and the lost,
To thee our yearning hearts incline,
When by earth's stormy billows tost
We sail along the tides of time.

In every hour with peril fraught,
Grant us, O God, to know thee near;
In every fight with Satan fought,
Do thou in our behalf appear.

And when we count our conflicts o'er,
When from earth's warring strife set free,
O may we meet to part no more,
And rest in Paradise with thee.

Divine Testimony

CONCERNING THE FINAL DESTINY OF IMPENITENT SINNERS.

[Concluded.]

The apostle taught the same awful truth to the Christian church at Rome. See 2d chapter. Referring to the hypocrite of his own time, who condemned others and did the same thing himself; he writes, verse 5, "After thy hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God: who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them, who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life. But unto them which are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first and also of the . . . Gentile (see ver. 16) in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." This tribulation and anguish, to be rendered the false professor of his own time, "when God shall judge the world by Jesus Christ," the apostle set before them as a motive to repentance.

Now, my brethren, if we say that they have no conscious suffering to fear after the killing of the body, do we not take away one motive to repentance, which the Holy Spirit of God presents to perishing men to turn to God and live? He presents the same motive to the Corinthian church, 2 Epis. 5: 10, 11. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in the body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." Observe, brethren, that this terror was to be felt by the sinners of his day who did not repent, when they appear at the judgment seat of Christ.

The Old Testament teaches the same doctrine. Let us examine the 73d Psalm. Asaph, considering the prosperity of the wicked in this life and also that they had "no bands in their death," was ready to impeach the justice and righteousness of God; "until (he says) I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their end. Surely thou didst set them in slipery places, thou castedst them down to destruction. How are they brought unto desolation as in a moment! they are utterly consumed with terrors." Here the solemn truth is manifest that the first death, in which they had no bands, was not their final end. They are to come forth to the resurrection of condemnation, to be utterly consumed with terrors in the lake of fire, which is "the second death."

Matt. 11: 24. "But I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee." Not only does the grammatical construction of this passage require its reference to a future judgment in respect to the people of Sodom, but this is confirmed by the fact that no judgment in the present state could be more intolerable than that of Sodom.

Rev. 20: 6. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power." Does it not appear that the second death will have power over those who have not part in the first resurrection? What power, brethren, can the second death have over men if they are never raised from the first?

Ps. 9: 17. The wicked shall be turned into Sheol. The Hebrew word always denotes return to a former state or place, which proves a second death.

Luke 13: 26–28. "Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not, whence ye are; depart from me all ye workers of iniquity. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out." What is the teaching here? It is that men who lived in the days of our Savior's first advent and heard his personal teaching will be addressed by the Judge and depart from him to weep and wail. Certainly then, they must awake to a temporary conscious existence. Jesus Christ will not address men nor can dead men enter a plea at the judgment, or weep or wail, or see persons in the kingdom of God.

Heb. 10: 26–31. "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law, died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment suppose ye shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant an unholy thing and hath done despite to the Spirit of grace? For we know him he that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense saith the Lord. . . . It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

These solemn words were addressed to the christians who had then professed faith in the Son of God, which profession they were exhorted to hold fast by these serious considerations. The fiery indignation which is to devour the apostates, evidently refers to the lake of fire into which they will be cast at the final judgment. Be this, however, as it may, the "sorer vengeance" than the first death, which first death the transgressors of Moses' law suffered, proves their resurrection to a temporary life, without which no "sorer vengeance" can be inflicted for their aggravated guilt. It is matter of fact that great sinners escape this "sorer vengeance" in the present life. See also verses 30, 31, which refer to the general judgment.

Our Savior himself plainly teaches this righteous doctrine of different degrees of conscious suffering in a future state.—

knew not his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not and did commit things worthy of stripes shall be beaten with few stripes." The 43d verse shows that our Lord refers to his first coming, and not to any judgments antecedent to his death. It was addressed to those then living as a motive to holiness, which proves their resurrection and capacity to suffer in different degrees at the future judgment.

See Jude 14, 15. "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of their ungodly deeds," &c. Dead men cannot be convinced. The 14th verse clearly proves that Enoch prophesied of those who lived in Jude's time.

John 2: 28, "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. This proves that if the professed christians of John's day did not abide in Christ, they would be ashamed at the coming of the Lord, which implies their future consciousness, for dead men know no shame. The apostle declares that there were some who did not abide. "They went out from us because they were not of us, for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us."

Dan. 12: 2 affirms that both classes will awake at the resurrection. The 73d Psalm and other inspired testimonies; and indeed reason and common sense, appear to me to require the future consciousness of the wicked for the purpose of a just retribution. It may indeed be said, that if the wicked are doomed to eternal death and the righteous to eternal life, both classes are dealt with according to their characters. It must be admitted, however, that a just retribution, or a judgment according to works, must have reference, not only to the quality, but to the amount of our works. It requires that they who sow bountifully should reap also bountifully, and that they who sow sparingly, whether of good or evil, should reap also sparingly. All courts of justice, as well as the Sacred Scriptures, require this principle.

What should we think of a Legislature that should affix the same punishment to the passing of a counterfeit dollar, as they do to murder? Will not the Judge of all the earth make a difference between the man who has committed one murder and the great butchers of their fellow men who have sacrificed hundreds of thousands of human lives on the altar of their pride, ambition and revenge? With man, indeed, one murder makes a villain, millions a hero. It is not so with God. Will he not make a difference between the man who hides his one talent in the earth, and the man who actively abuses ten to defraud the widow and the fatherless?

It will not do to say that degrees of mental suffering of remorse in the present state accompany crimes in proportion to their number and enormity, for the reverse of this is the fact. By the repetition of sin the voice of the internal monitor becomes weaker, until conscience is seared as with a hot iron. The keeper of the Connecticut State Prison pointed out to me a man there who would not hesitate to kill a man for a dollar.

The objections of our brethren who dissent from us demand attention. These objections are founded upon a few passages of Sacred Writ, but principally, I apprehend, on the supposition that it is inconsistent with the mercy of God to raise men to suffer in a future state.

Isa. 26: 13, 14. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise, therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Our brethren, who admit that the wicked will rise, not to life, cannot adduce this passage consistently against us. The reference appears to me to be to those nations which formerly had dominion over Israel. "Other lords have had dominion over us." The connection of these words with the preceding [illegible] the future state, when God will visit them and destroy them by a second death. Please read chapters 25th and 26th.

Another passage is Luke 20: 35, 36, where the children of God are said to be "the children of the resurrection." Now, my brethren, will you say that this proves that the wicked shall not come forth to the resurrection of condemnation, when Jesus Christ positively declares that they shall? If you admit any resurrection at all of the wicked, you must admit that when our blessed Lord speaks of the saints as being the resurrection, he refers to a peculiar resurrection, i. e., the first resurrection, which term appears to imply a second. Thus the Son of God, signifies his being Son in a peculiar sense, not that no other beings are "sons of God." 1 John 3: 1.

The objection founded on the mercy of God proves too much, even for a Universalist. You say that it would be more merciful if he would raise them and give them another probation for eternal life. The Universalist appeals to us, and says, what father would not save even a disobedient child from the devouring fire, if he was able? If such reasoning is sound, it follows that the Father of mercies is a merciless being, because he now allows lightning, and tempest, and earthquake, to destroy men when he could prevent it if he chose to do so. Tell me not that these things are according to the laws of nature. The laws of nature are the laws of God, perfectly under his control. If man had never sinned they never would have hurt him.

The truth, brethren, is, that God is JUST as well as merciful, and his own word is the only sure test by which we can determine the proper manifestation of these attributes. Read Ps. 136: 10–20.

Christian Union.

Oh how is the Christian's soul thrilled by that one word—"union!" And we may well put on the adjective, as all efforts to union are miserable apologies, when Christianity is not their basis.

But what is union, and how is it effected? As these are important questions let us consider them with a spirit of earnest inquiry after the truth. Christian union is not the union in heart of those only whose particular tenets were run in the same mould, and who have subscribed to the same denominational name. No! neither is it extended to every (so-called) Christian denomination. Christian union is the union of Christians. Now to know who are to receive the "right hand of fellowship," we have only to ask, who are christians?

According to the Bible, (and in spite of modern revelations we are still so "set in our way" as to cling to that,) christians are those who have been converted; and we cannot be converted without repentance. "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Now who ever thought, with any degree of consistency, that a man could repent without seeing something to repent of; without seeing that SIN had ruined his soul; that the wrath and judgments of God, on one hand, and an INJURED SAVIOR on the other, urge him to confess and forsake that "abominable thing?" The christian is the man who has felt (oh how deeply,) the truth of this. He is not the man who has seen so little of his heart as to say that he cannot do enough to cause a merciful God to punish him, and thus throw away all idea of mercy. Those, and those only, who have felt the guilt, who have fled to Christ, can claim our fellowship.

However much others may talk of sincerity, of an honest purpose, they have no claim on us for fellowship, for they are not of us in this sense. The division, then, is conversion; all outside the line are "of the world," and inside, "of God." To such as have "passed from death unto life," from the power of Satan unto God, I extend the hand of fellowship, and with a large, warm heart, welcome them as my [illegible] them, I am united to them in the glorious work of redeeming the world from sin.

Oh how good it is to find christians in all of these, who say, and feel, and ACT, a "God bless you," not for your particular doctrines, but because you are trying to serve God! This, this is Christian union, these are they who are bound together by the strongest, purest principles—

"Nor nature, nor time can remove."

Suppose there are different denominations; this may be necessary. Let me be understood,—they are the result of different ideas of church government, education, or circumstances, and may be necessary. Nature sympathizes with herself, and yet, while every particle of matter is excited by the strongest sympathy so that it clings closely to the other, the tree, the rock, the flower, the grass, and the water are all necessary to perfect her beauty.

Time it is true may reveal one form of church government to be superior to others and consequently be better received, but a few will cling to the old form who will be as deserving our fellowship as any other.

O brethren, let us

"Share each other's woes,
Each other's burdens bear,
While often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear."

I will soon try to answer the other question—How is this union effected?

Reminiscences of the Past.

No IV.

Ingratitude in all cases is a hideous monster; but when it makes its appearance in a child it assumes its most repulsive form. From the earliest ages veneration for parents, next to God, was considered a paramount virtue, and not unfrequently death, and always opprobrium followed a dereliction of the filial duties. Midway in the Decalogue, that code delivered to the people through Moses with such dreadful majesty upon the quaking mountain of Sinai, is found a commandment the strict obedience of which is the sine qua non of a lengthened possession of that "land of promise" whither the emancipated Israelites were journeying. So closely does God watch the fulfillment of our duties to the authors of our being, that any flagrant rebellion or acts of unkindness to them are visited upon our heads either in our own present sufferings, or not unfrequently in the ingratitude and wickedness of our offspring.

Although the authority of parents is not at all times exercised with that mildness and consideration for the feelings and peculiar disposition of the child which might be; yet it is much better to submit with patience to a little parental tyranny, than throw off entirely the restraint and respect which a dutiful son or daughter will feel for a parent who strives to "train up a child in the way he should go."

It is only the aching heart of a father or mother who mourns over the waywardness of a much loved, much prayed for darling that can feel

"How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!"

Not more than a dozen miles from my father's house there lived a godly couple, whose hopes of eternal happiness rested in Christ, and whose earthly affections centered in their daughter. The old man, who had been for many years a soldier, carried discipline into his family to an extent bordering on despotism. And when far in the autumn of his life, he was brought to a knowledge of his sins and found a Savior, from his well read Bible he drew out a set of rules for the government of himself and home.

Mrs. Weston, who had enjoyed religion longer by a dozen years than her husband, was in disposition the reverse of him, and although she respected his uncompromising integrity in his dealings with his neighbors, yet blamed his frigid manner towards his beautiful and warm-hearted child. Not that he did not love her; but he [illegible] sunny-headed girl, as if it presaged levity and heralded destruction. The child, shrinking from the stern father's reproof, fled for sympathy to her mother. Remonstrance would be silenced by discipline, and the old soldier retained his authority.

As Susan grew up, the reins of government were held more tightly, and the young and high-spirited woman grew restive and in her heart longed for emancipation from what had now grown into absolute tyranny. Mrs. Weston, who of course knew better than her husband the nature of their daughter, pleaded with the inexorable father to relax the uncalled for, unjustifiable restraint, and allow her to mingle more with persons of her own age. Mr. Weston yielded, and Susan with certain restrictions was permitted to accept some of the numerous invitations which were sent her. At one of the parties she had the misfortune to form the acquaintance of a young man, whose good looks and gay manner were his only recommendations; for he was worthless, and a Roman Catholic. The heart of the innocent girl was trepanned, and fearing the disapproval of her father and mother, she kept her attachment a secret, and surreptitiously met young Murray wherever she could evade the vigilance of her parents. However, those clandestine meetings were at length made known, and the girl placed in confinement. But the spirit of her sire was aroused within her, and she met his threats with defiance, although she wept bitterly upon the bosom of her tender mother. The old soldier, exasperated at her contumacy, gave as his ultimatum, that she must instantly agree to abandon the fellow, or his house. She chose, fled, and for many days was not heard of. A priest had married them; but they departed from that part of the country and all trace of the stray sheep was lost.

It was on a Saturday evening in the latter part of October, after an absence of twenty-one months, that I arrived by the mail coach at D——, six miles from Sea-View Manor House, the residence of our family. Although the night was cold and stormy, I determined to set out afoot rather than await two or three hours for the lumbering conveyance to start, and being provided with a stout cudgel by the hotel keeper, I took the road, with my heart full of anticipations of a joyful surprise to my mother, who knew not of my coming, and of spending another blessed Sabbath in her sweet society.

For the greater part of the way the road was pretty well sheltered by high hedges; but when I arrived at the "strand road," a mile and a half from the house, there was not a single tree or bush to protect the wayfarer from the strong wind which now swept howlingly over this bleak and unprotected heath. Strong and active as I then was, and inured to storm, it required my utmost power to make headway against the increasing violence of the gale which amounted almost to a hurricane. I had accomplished well nigh half of this moor, when I thought I heard, in a lull of the tempest, a cry of distress. I stopped—listened; but I heard nothing further, for the flouting and buffeting of the wind, and I concluded that it was the lugubrious whoop of the owl or mournful cry of the bittern. I might have gone an hundred rods further, when a moan so deep, so unearthly, and so near, made me start with fear and surprise. I required only a moment to regain my self-command, and advancing to the verge of the deep ditch, which bounded either sides of the road, I looked down into the darkness. It was several minutes before I could distinguish anything, but at last I could see the form of a woman crouched under the lee of a stunted hawthorn or some other dwarf bush, which grew out of the side of the ditch. Another instant and I was beside her. The poor creature's feet were covered with the water in the trench, and she was [illegible] with the cold.

"Thank God," [illegible] per, "I shall see the [illegible]

[illegible]

her [illegible] finding her so benumbed that she could not stand, and fearing a longer exposure, I took her up without much difficulty, for she was terribly emaciated. I waded along till I got to a spot where I could step up into the road. I bore her along, very slowly, about a quarter of a mile, resting and resuming my burthen till I came to a little hut by the wayside, where we found shelter. Warm milk and such like simple restoratives as the cottagers had at command were freely administered to the sufferer, whose woe begotten face and scanty and travel-stained garments rendered a fit subject of commiseration.

Leaving her in their hands and accompanied by the good man of the house, I started again for home, and after the surprise and greetings were over I soon enlisted the sympathies of my dear kind-hearted mother on behalf of the stranger. Such cordials and articles of clothing as were deemed necessary, the countryman was despatched with, and in half an hour, accompanied by a doctor, I drove off to bring the sufferer to our own home. In another hour the wanderer slept, and my mother and I kept watch beside her.

My readers will doubtless have anticipated who this wasted, weary traveler was. It was indeed the unfortunate Susan Weston. For a time the hapless girl had found in the endearment of her young husband a sort of equivalent for the loss of her parents; but soon, alas! he appeared in his true colors, and she saw too late the extent of the dreadful sacrifice she had made. He insisted that she should become a Catholic, and in hopes of ameliorating her condition she turned apostate to the religion of the gospel and become outwardly a papist. Poor soul! the humiliation was unavailing, and his conduct became more and more fiendlike and cruel. To hard words and reproaches followed stripes, and the cup of the unhappy Susan was full of sorrow. Far from friends, and far from God, a renegade from truth and light, where could the lost one turn? Hunger gnawed her vitals, and he for whom she had forsaken all, trampled upon her trusting heart and cast her from him with brutal contumely and scorn.

At length he came not home to his miserable hut, and after many days his bloated and disgusting corpse was floating in the river.

"I will arise and go to my father," said the wretched daughter, and for many miles she dragged her weary feet towards her deserted home. She wished to see the dear old spot once more, to obtain her parents' forgiveness and die. Night had found her toiling along; and too weak to stem the furious blast she turned aside for shelter into the ditch, whence through the providence of God I rescued her from certain death.

A letter from my mother to the old soldier and his wife soon brought them to the bedside of their repentant child. It was a blessed and exceedingly afflicting re-union; and in a week or two the long divided family returned to their now happy home, where their child yet lives a blessing to their declining years.

Who Will Be Saved?

How often we are reminded of the question recorded in the twenty-sixth verse of the tenth chapter of Mark. When we consider the straitness of the gate, and narrowness of the way, it surely seems as though only the "little ones" could possibly walk therein. Truly not many of the great and mighty and noble are called. But who will be saved? Certainly all who love and obey GOD, both Jew and Gentile, bond and free. All the poor broken fragments will be gathered up, and nothing worth saving will be lost. And the poorest, weakest, and least of all those "little ones" shall become far greater, wiser, and nobler than the proudest monarch ever seen upon an earthly throne. O, my brethren, do ye realize that ye are indeed CHILDREN of the KING of kings?

Let us strive to enter in at the strait gate, and we will soon have a shout in glory.

Spiritualism.

No. II.

We have noticed the political aspect of Spiritualism, and now come to speak of its moral bearing. What does Spiritualism claim for itself, and what does it propose to do morally? Let Spiritualists answer.

"The Spiritualism of the present day is that which Jesus preached eighteen centuries ago." "Christianism should then be synonymous with Spiritualism." "The doctrines of Christ," says a popular writer, are to be re-established "in their purity. This is to be done by Spiritualism, which embraces all that tends to elevate man, and will be to the New Testament what that was to the Old—a light thrown on its obscurities."

A spirit, which professes to be that of John Adams, says:—

"I was happy . . . in the religion of Christ which he taught eighteen hundred years ago—in Spiritualism as it is now called."

Says Mr. Partridge, Editor of the Spiritual Telegraph, when speaking of the permanency of Spiritualism:—

"It is likely to pervade and absorb all denominations of christians, exert a moral and reformatory power among the nations, and inaugurate the millennial era." "We feel that our advance will be irresistible, and our conquests speedy and sure. To Spiritualists is committed the gospel of the present age."

In the Spiritual Age of July 4th, 1857, we read:—

"Christianity and Spiritualism stand upon the same foundation. . . Spiritualism has given it (Christianity) a vitality which it had not possessed before since the time of the apostles."

Read the following, and judge whether it harmonizes with what Christ "taught eighteen hundred years ago."

In a speech at the Spiritual Convention, at Ravenna, Ohio, July 4th and 5th, 1857, Mrs. L—— says:—

"To confine her to love one man was an abridgement of her rights. . . . Although she had one husband in Cleveland, she considered herself married to the whole human race. All men were her husbands, and she had an undying love for them. What business is it to the world whether one man is the father of my children, or ten men are! I have a right to say who shall be the father of my offspring."

Are the following doctrines in harmony with what Jesus taught? In the Investigating Class, at the house of Mr. Partridge, New York, May 21st, 1857, the question arose, "Is there any such thing as evil or sin?" "Dr. Weisse . . . enforced his proposition . . . that therefore there is no sin." Hear the word of the Lord.—"If we say that we have not sinned, we make him (Christ) a liar, and his word is not in us."

Says another who distinguishes himself at conventions of Spiritualists, "Nothing is true because Jesus said it, nothing erroneous because he condemned it." Does this harmonize with the teaching of Jesus? "Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away."

Mr. S. P. Andrews says,—"God has not communicated any infallible standard of truth to man." Jesus declares the opposite,—"Thy word is truth."

It is a well known fact that most Spiritualists hold that the Bible is no more authoritative than the productions of A. J. Davis, or any other modern seer; indeed, they consider the new revelations the best. They tell us, the writings of "Job, and Isaiah and Shakspeare, with innumerable others" are all alike inspired; and that the miracles of Christ and the Apostles were done by the same agency as those of these last days among Spiritualists; notwithstanding the Bible declares that the former were from the Spirit of God, and the latter from the "spirits of devils." If we did not see what we do at the present time, we should not be so confident that we are near the great day of the Lord, when we shall see the "same Jesus" which was taken up into heaven—the one whom God "raised from the dead" "so come in like manner" as he went "into heaven." Acts 1: 9-11.

The Spiritualists reply, "Christ has come again in like manner as he came before." How has he come? They answer, in the manifestations exhibited in the various circles in private rooms. After the "great tribulation," mentioned in Matt. 24: 21, which may be clearly shown to have taken place during the dark ages, when some [illegible] of christians were slaughtered [illegible]

Rome, the Savior says in verses 23-26,

"Then if any man shall say unto you lo here, is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, behold, he is in the desert; go not forth; behold he is in the secret chambers; believe it not."

Thank the Lord for this caution. But why not believe he "has come" in modern Spiritualism? Because they declare he has come in just the way in which he foresaw that false prophets said he would, whose instructions he has taught us to disbelieve. We accept no one as our Savior but the one whom God "raised from the dead, even Jesus," and no coming but a personal and visible one; as truly so, as his ascension; and such a coming, we believe will immediately transpire. Are we all ready? Can we say, "Come, Lord Jesus," and "come quickly?"

Revival in Boston.

The Lord is doing a marvelous work in this city. All seem astonished at what they see and hear. Crowds attend the morning meetings, and at noon, a thousand business men may be seen in the prayer meetings at the chapel of the Old South Church. They are such meetings as devoted christians can enjoy, and well calculated to bring sinners to Christ. At 3 and 4 o'clock similar meetings are held at Park Street Church, and at the Meionaon Hall. A cloud of mercy seems to be settling over the whole city. We do not discover any undue excitement, but on the contrary, a deep and solemn feeling. The interest is rapidly rising every day.

One interesting feature of the meetings is the spirit of christian union felt between all denominations. The contracted spirit of sectarianism appears to be vanishing like dew before a summer sun. All are uniting to persuade men to prepare for the judgment. The same spirit pervades the whole country. It looks like the last waking up of the children of God. More may be accomplished now within a few weeks, if we labor earnestly, than we have seen for years. Let every christian be faithful, and do all he possibly can to turn men from sin to holiness—from the road to death, into the path that leads to eternal life. It seems as if we were doing up our last work for this world. O God be merciful to sinful man!

Rutland.

Our meetings in this place have been deeply interesting and have been seasons of great refreshing. The spirit of the Lord has moved some of the most stubborn hearts in the place, and they are now rejoicing in his love, and the glorious hope of the coming kingdom. Thirty-eight have covenanted together to take "the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice, church order and discipline; making christian character the only test of fellowship and communion." The interest has spread into all the churches in the place, and many have been converted, while others have been reclaimed from a backslidden state.

We have been often astonished at the willingness of the Lord to forgive when the people are ready to ask his pardon, with a determination to obey him. Truly "the vilest may return." The Lord is very merciful. Two Methodist ministers have been brought from bondage into the liberty of the gospel, and take an active part in the meetings, rejoicing in the truth of the Lord. One of them had seen the truth on the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked, but had met with such opposition from his brethren, that he had become discouraged, and had stopped preaching. Now he is resolved to play Jonah no longer. The other had been confined within the prison walls, but is now free from the prison of men and of the devil, and resolved to consecrate himself again wholly to the service of the Lord.

The first time we heard his voice was in a conference meeting, when he arose to warn the young converts of the dangers that surrounded them. "But," said he, "I am a lost man." Prayers were offered in his behalf, and the next time we heard from him, he thought there was a little hope in his case. The next day, he narrowly escaped with his life while at work upon the Green Mountains, and the day following this, he had another narrow escape, but was so injured he could not get out to meeting for several evenings; but when he came again, he was resolved to forsake his backslidings. [illegible]

☞ We would call the attention of our readers to the article on "Christian Union" by "Ho Tis," in another column of this paper. We fully endorse the sentiments of the author. Hope to hear from him again.

☞ In compliance with a very earnest request of the churches of Newark and New York, we enfold their address to the churches scattered abroad.

Another Voice

From one of the rejoicing ones in Rutland.

And still the work goes on. The Lord has been pleased to speak to us through our faithful Bro. Grant in such a plain and comprehensive manner that many of us are fully persuaded to love the Lord and obey him in all things. The Bible seems like a new book to us, and we read it with new delight. The fog of fables is cleared away by the sunlight of truth. Twenty-four happy souls have been buried with Christ in baptism, and many more intend to follow their example soon. We are receiving very rich blessings from the Lord. Sectarian walls are shaking, notwithstanding the efforts of many to keep them in good repair, and prevent the union of the children of the Lord. Some of us feel that there is a wide difference between being converted to a church, and to the Lord; between the form and the power of godliness. We are inquiring for "the old paths."

Wisdom.

"Wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

The above contains important instruction. We know from experience and scripture testimony that, naturally, we are destitute of that wisdom which cometh from above; and if we are ever endowed with it, we must seek for it as for hid treasure. I know of no place where we so much need to exercise sound wisdom and discretion, as at the prayer meeting, which is to a church what food is to the human system. If the nutriment it receives is regular and pure, it will thrive and become healthy; if not, it will languish and pine away. If all who attended the meeting were under the influence of the Holy Spirit, there would be no need of this caution; but in these last days, amid the prevalence of backsliding, luke-warmness, Mesmerism and many other isms, it is too often the case that meetings for prayer are disturbed and their influence paralyzed for the want of that wisdom which alone cometh from God. Many err in occupying too much time in prayer and exhortation; others, in singing too often and inappropriately; others, in replying to something that has been said, and thereby open a discussion; others, in being too hasty; others, too dull; others are introducing something not in harmony with the meeting. Many other things might be named that serve as a drawback upon the efficacy of the meeting.

I know of no better way to have a good meeting, than, before leaving home, to spend a few minutes in secret prayer for a blessing upon it, and when you get there, be prompt, short, and to the point; and when the minister or leader is on his knees wrestling for a blessing, let every christian present be in the same position lifting up his heart in prayer for the answer; and when the unconverted are under conviction, and invited to the anxious seat, they should have a chance to pray for themselves. Ten words from their own lips would do more to strengthen them, than a dozen prayers from others; but it is too often the case that a succession of prayers is made for them, and in the height of excitement they cannot get their minds settled enough to lay hold of the promises and be blessed. May the Lord give us that wisdom which is profitable to direct, and prepare us for that meeting where all will be in perfect harmony.

D. N. SMITH.

For the Crisis.

Consider This.

Dear Brn. and Srs. who are looking for the return of Jesus:—I wish to ask a few questions, and make a few statements for your consideration. Are we not bound by our relations to Christ to do all we can for the advancement of his cause? All will be obliged to answer, "Yes." Are all doing what they can to lead sinners to Christ, and to build up believers in Christ, in union and love? Some could probably answer this in the affirmative, conscientiously, did they not feel that it is more than [illegible] titudes who do but a small part of what they could do.

Again. Are we acting in that relation one with the other, that gives us all the advantages that gospel principles afford us in using our time and means judiciously, economically, and forcibly, to accomplish the end we are called of God to do?—To these interrogations some may be disposed to answer that "if we love God, have his Spirit, and believe his word, we shall be in union and be led to all right action, and of course all our work will advance the cause we are in." My answer to such is, there is an exhortation to "keep yourselves in the love of God," and some rule is to be observed to do it. There is an exhortation to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Again. We are taught to "obey the word" as well as to believe it. Christianity does not come and take possession of the heart without our action. The Spirit of Christ does not dwell in the Christian's heart and subdue the passions, control the mind, bring forth its fruits, and ripen the believer for God's kingdom, without diligent watch-care to "walk in the spirit," but give it place, listen to its voice, and obey its application of the word. A belief of and obedience to a part of the word, to the utter neglect of another and important part, will not give us a right and healthy position to labor successfully for the upbuilding of that cause we love.

While much has been done to proclaim the message of the Advent near, yet it is but little compared with what might have been done had the gospel plan of operations been adopted and rigidly adhered to, and its discipline properly enforced.—While we have been exceeding tenacious about the view we entertained of the great truths of the gospel on several points of doctrine, we have in many cases not only entirely disregarded, but have exerted all our influence against the plain and unequivocal testimony of the New Testament in regard to church order and the proper administration of its discipline. The results have often been most disastrous. Anarchy, confusion, contention, deception, "false brethren" fleecing the flock, defamation of character, &c., &c., have followed, while sinners have rarely been brought to Christ or saints led to a Bible knowledge of our hope. Some have been, it is true. But many of the disciples made to our views have not been properly educated in Bible rules of order and discipline, consequently have often been more to our injury and disgrace than the advancement of the truth.

I ask my readers to reflect for a moment, and cast their eyes upon the state of things in the various places where the Advent faith has obtained. Contrast the difference between the two courses that have been pursued. In one direction we see devoted, healthful, active, growing, useful societies, in love and union, with each other, and with all who are striving to live christians. There are exceptions to this, under the same rule, I admit. But remember, the instances are the exceptions, and the causes have generally been either injudicious measures to enforce gospel discipline, or else an over-ruling influence of disorderly persons misguided by some erroneous instructions against good order.

In the other direction we see equally devoted, self sacrificing, well disposed persons, and sometimes societies as active as others; but want of growth, health, union, love of the brotherhood; and fellowship for christians of other views are quite too frequent to form the exceptions. In making this statement I may subject myself to censure, and may be charged with error in my conclusions. But I have the kindest of feelings for each class named, have labored with and constantly held in good fellowship the last named class. As to the charge of error, I rest easy, because known facts are now too plainly out-spoken to be denied by any careful observer. I do not intend to charge hard things upon the brethren, but to remind them of neglect of some important duties. It has been quite common to speak of the neglect of churchmen to examine the great truths which distinguish us as a people. We have thought them deficient in knowledge. Is it not as wrong to neglect the order of God's house, and refuse its discipline, as it is to disregard its doctrine? It may be found so. Let us look at this and see if we cannot act more wisely and do more good.

Take a view of a few items of present practices. What is the condition of many of our ministers? One is spending his time and energies in tilling the ground; another is in his mill; another is in his [illegible] goods; another lets himself out as clerk; another becomes an agent; another travels the country to peddle goods; another goes into the factory, &c., &c. These preach on Sundays, generally, working at other business six days in a week, until they become disheartened and worn out. They then abandon the preaching, that they may obtain an honest living, and not become bankrupt. I am describing those called of God to preach. But some will say, if God calls men to preach he will sustain them in preaching, and they must spend the time to preach. I do not receive such doctrine as true. It is true Jesus says, "Lo I am with you alway, even until the end of the world," but this does not teach them that he will furnish them with food and raiment for themselves and families.

It is the duty of the ministry to teach the gospel, the order of the church and its discipline; (they have erred much who have not done it,) and it is the duty of disciples to believe and conform to it. When this is done they become "the pillar and ground of the truth," and sustain its proclaimers. These above-named working ministers find that they must do as they do, to be honest men; they must support their families or be dishonest; they must pay their debts or be dishonest. It has often been the case that dishonest and unworthy men have traveled through the societies with some new notion, preached it, defamed more worthy men, reaped a large harvest, lived on the money of the brethren, death and left desolation to follow in their train, while God's men get little, and yet their labors are needed to restore the aliens, build up what is torn down, and lead out of the troubles into which good brethren and sisters are often led. A large amount of these difficulties have arisen from a want of gospel order. Brethren are not always acquainted with men who come among them, and they are often deceived. Ministers who have to spend their time to earn their living by their hands can do but little in the work of the ministry.

Come, brethren, look well to this matter, and you will see that some of the most unworthy men in past days, as in the present, have been amply sustained, while some of the most useful men have not. The responsibility is, in part, on you. Arise and build. The Judge is at the door. Soon, and the work of mercy is over. God's people are calling for help. The world is fast sinking to ruin. Shall our worthy ministers use their time and strength in obtaining a living, while there is ten times more ministerial labor to be done than their whole time would allow, and abundance of means to keep them at the work if system and union were adopted? Shall we not be found in the fault, as a people, if we do not amend? Will not every one try to act to bring all our means into the work of spreading this gospel of the king dom? Your brother in Christ, still waiting for him.

I. C. WELCOME.

Brunswick, Me.

P. S. There is another point to be especially considered. Many of our small number, of both ministers and laymen, have become tired of confusion, and seeing the need of system to do anything, have become discouraged and joined other churches where they are circumscribed and often become absorbed in other interests,) thinking they had better save some of their labor than sow all to the wind. Perhaps they had better have continued their efforts for order.

Companions of them who Were so Used!

It has been the lot of Christians to suffer falsely for the name of Christ. This he himself declared should follow the endorsement of divine truth—the adhesion of the heart to "the Christ of God."—An apostle shows that we should be innocent, that we may have praise in being buffeted; for it is taken for granted that Christians will be buffeted, even without fault. True christians have always been unpopular, and upon the unpopular the world in general has been disposed to cast obloquy,—from the days of Christ in Judea, of whom his judge said—"I find no fault in the man." While popular clamor demanded his blood, and delivered him up to an ignominious death—with malefactors—the most innocent, the most deeply abused and cursed, for evil which they said he would bring upon the land,—Pilate, blind heathen as he was, said—[illegible]

ple has secured the same result—more or less fully—whether Nero sets fire to Rome that it may be laid to the charge of christians, and they destroyed, while innocent; or the Puritans of New England charge the bedevilment of a few unfortunate people at Salem, upon the better and more devoted worshipers of the time.

All history of the time concurs in showing that God's children have been in every age, accused unjustly, and have suffered for crimes of which they have not been guilty, while their relationship to each other has been a fruitful cause of trouble to others, when few or many have suffered. "Thou wast with him," is the cry! Men are ever ready to charge faults and crimes upon the persecuted. It serves to make them think better of themselves to see, or think they see, faults in those they hate, and hate because they are good, persecute because they hate. Moreover they want a cover for their own acts; hence, to make the world think that they cannot commit a crime; all the crime, or the most flagitious, must be laid to a certain despised or reprobated class—or when one shall have committed a fault or crime, then up comes the charge that they are all alike: and even in the face of judical decision, Editors will persist in placing the fault at the door of a christian sect. I have known men who seemed to be perfectly blind in their remarks in papers from the determination to throw odium upon an innocent people, because a popular feeling was raised against them.

None are perfect. The good will always have to suffer, and some will depart from Christ. Backsliders will be sure to proclaim the fact. It is a sort of excuse. If we suffer in this way we are the companions of early believers and of Christ. Amen.

He Will Come.

It is no dream. This groaning, signing, sinful, dying, dark and dreary dispensation must soon terminate. God has spoken and the thing must be. He wills and creation wide obeys. He speaks, and earth lifts her voice in a loud "so be it." He speaks, and the mighty waves of the foaming deep echo—Amen. Time must and will end. Nature should teach us this. God's holy word does. Do you ask why time must end? God has declared it, and it must be. Creation sighs, "Come," and He replies, "Behold I come quickly." Earth has long besought God to "remove the curse," and in order that it may sustain his chosen ones, he "will do it."

Church of Christ, awake! The day of labor on your part is nearly ended. How much has been accomplished through your instrumentality? Too little, too little. Then awake! "Put forth now thy hand" to the gospel plough. Defer not till to-morrow, but awake, arise now. See your field. There is a plenteous harvest, but alas! alas! where are the workmen! There is another, still another mind to be enlightened, and built upon the Rock, Jesus Christ; but where the enlightener? Another sinner to be brought to the foot of the cross,—where, O where the gentle Shepherd?

The work is not confined to ministerial duties. Brother, sister, however humble your circumstances, or however unqualified you esteem yourself, yet in God's estimation, there is a work for you to perform,—

"Something still to do or bear"

Kiss the sceptre of peace with your King, and there will be one rebel less in God's creation. Convert yonder notorious sinner, and there will be one more to sing the song of redemption. Gently lead that wearied and fainting lamb to the pastures of life, and there will be one more gem to sparkle neath the effulgent beams of Zion's Sun while it decks the crown of the King of kings. 'Tis not our day to rest at present. It is ours to toil. At it, then.—Don't be a drone. Bear an equal part of the burden. It will be for your eternal good, and the present and future good of your fellow men. God pleads with you to be faithful in the discharge of your every duty,—will you conform to his requirements? Questions of this kind we should bring home to our own mind.

Though heaven and earth should pass away,
Thy word shall stand through endless day;
Thy promises are just and sure;
Thy law is holy, righteous, pure.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been out in this region about two weeks, and I find a very interesting state of things. At Bristol with Bro. Turner I attended one meeting, and preached. There is a good revival here, with an interest to hear the word of life. I left here with a promise to return next week, and in connection with Bro. Turner have a meeting of days. The meetings out here are not those dry, lifeless, formal meetings, so stupefying in tendency; but the spirit, life and power of God is fully manifest among them. Some rose for prayers, inquiring the way of life. The voice of converts could be heard.

Thank God for the light and life of religion! O God, by the Spirit arouse the slumbering! Work like a wonder-working God! I long to see a more urgent inquiry—What shall I do to be saved?

I commenced meetings at Newfield. Had an interesting Sunday. The word did run and have free course. Tuesday eve, I also preached with seeming good effect, with appointments through the week, and over another Sunday, anticipating a heavenly time. But we know not what a day may bring forth. Thursday I was taken down with acute pain in the head over my eyes, which continued, causing much suffering till Sunday night, when by the help and goodness of the Lord we gained the victory over it, and now am comfortable, thanking, rejoicing, and praising the Lord for life and strength to preach the word. I shall commence again to-night, expecting help from him who is able and mighty to save. Like David I can say, "My lot has fallen in pleasant places." I was taken sick at the well known pilgrim house of Bro. Fyler, where every thing that a good heart could desire would be done for one's welfare and comfort. Here I could realize a little of the truthfulness of Christ's saying—"No man hath left houses and lands, wife and children, for my sake and the gospel's, but shall have in this time," &c.,—in the world to come life everlasting. What promises to the faithful!

Father, mother, and sisters are on hand, rendering all the relief possible, making severe affliction seemingly light. God bless and reward them, I can but say and heartily pray.

My heart is full, and hope is good, and it will soon be realized. We must work with our might, by grace, to save men.

Tobacco.

No. XV.

We shall conclude our extracts on this subject, by giving the testimony of O. S. Fowler, who has been for many years a most critical observer of the effects of tobacco upon the human system. He says:—

"Of all the descriptions of its evil effects, none have come up to the actual evils themselves. I have seen many disgusting pictures of the filthiness, especially, of chewing; but none compare at all with the reality. Street-sweeping and sink-cleaning are incomparably less filthy than tobacco-eating and smoking. The dog re-eating his vomit is disgusting, but tobacco spittle is far more so. What a concentration of vileness is a tobacco-puddle! How utterly nauseating and loathsome if RETAKEN into the mouth! Then was it not quite as vile when EXPELLED therefrom? Talk about a decent man chewing tobacco! What can be more body-defiling and soul-polluting?

I have seen glowing descriptions of its injurious effects upon digestion, by impairing the salivary glands; yet no description equals the reality. By scarcely any other means can the stomach be more injured, or more permanently deranged. Healthy salivary glands are as necessary to good digestion as healthy eyes to good vision. Now, this powerful stimulant, this narcotic poison, brought in almost perpetual contact with these glands, both by chewing and smoking, must, in the very nature of things, disease them. That it does disease them, is evident from the very enormous quantity of saliva which it causes them to secrete. It literally WORKS THEM TO DEATH, and at the same time vitiates their products. And vitiated saliva must, in the very nature of things, impair digestion.

But if tobacco chewers could spit out, with their quids, all the effects of tobacco, less damage would be done. But these salivary glands are literally SOAKED, by the day and year—aye, lifetime—in tobacco spittle, so that the tobacco used in saliva they manufacture during mastication, of course, finds its way to the stomach, deranging that organ, and through it the whole system.

It is claimed that tobacco prevents tooth-[illegible] ing the nerves; that is, by benumbing their sensory or life principle. For my part, let me suffer the painful state of any part of my system rather than have that part [illegible]. Tobacco-eating certainly does [illegible] the decay of the teeth, wears them rapidly away, and keeps the mouth in a perpetually fevered, filthy, and most disgusting condition. Of all things, the MOUTH should be clean. Of all other things, the tobacco eaters' mouths are the very essence of defilement!

The breath, especially, of tobacco smokers shows that their systems have become steeped in this narcotic poison. The lungs are one of those doors through which the system casts out noxious matter. Thus the system abhors alcohol, and accordingly ejects it by every breath of those who drink. From what source does the breath of smokers derive its fetid tobacco infection, or rather load? FROM THE SYSTEM; not from the mouth merely. Tobacco smoke held in the mouth, and throat, and nostrils, infuses the spittle—which smoking renders abundant—hence the copious spitting; and which, passing gradually into the stomach, and throughout the system, is expelled through the lungs. Since, therefore, it so abounds in the body as thus to impregnate the breath, it must make immense havoc of health, life, and mentality. Think of it: the entire system saturated with tobacco-essence! That even the brain is loaded with it, is evident by its opiatic effects upon the feelings and intellect.

But these influences, and many like influences, are but drops in the bucket, compared with the MORAL effects of tobacco-eating and smoking. If it were merely a filthy practice, or even detrimental to digestion and circulation, and stopped there, I would remain silent, because only a minor evil. But, by a law of things, whatever depraves or vitiates the body, thereby depraves the NERVOUS system, and through it the BRAIN, and thereby the MIND. To disease any part of the body, especially the nerves, is to disease the brain, and thereby to produce a SINFUL state of mind. Mental purity is compatible only with physical health. That alcoholic liquors deprave the mind, engender corrupt feelings, and sensualize and brutalize every moral principle of the soul, is not theory, but universal OBSERVATION AND EXPERIENCE, caused by that intimacy of relation existing between body and mind. All mental depravity consists in the abnormal, perverted exercise of our mental faculties. Such perversion is the natural consequence of the physiological disorder of the brain. And all physiological disease throughout the system disorders the brain and corrupts the mind. As alcohol engenders moral depravity, so tobacco produces moral corruption, by first disordering the physical system. Tell me a tobacco chewer is a virtuous man! I know better. He may not have broken the seventh commandment outright; but as "he that looketh on a woman to lust after her committeth adultery with her in his heart," so tobacco, in all its forms, causes that sinful, sensual tone or cast of the love-feeling, which constitutes the very essence of licentiousness. It vitiates combativeness, and accordingly tobacco eaters and smokers are universally irritable. How do they feel before they take their quids in the morning? Snappish to their wives, churlish to their children, and cross to every body and every thing. And this is true not only before breakfast, but throughout the entire day. Tobacco produces a perpetual souring of the temper; a cross-grained, ill-natured, repelling, or depraved state of combativeness.

It equally vitiates appetite, by producing a craving, corrupt state of both appetite and stomach. No man can have a healthy body, nor really enjoy food, who eats tobacco. It causes dyspepsia of body and dyspepsia of mind; that is, a diseased, gnawing, hankering, dissatisfied, craving state, of all the feelings, appetites, and passions."

Domestic Summary.

THE REVIVAL.

In New York the revivals are increasing in interest. In Philadelphia, as we learn from the Ledger, there was at one time two thousand persons in attendance at the noonday meeting, five hundred of whom were females. The male portion of the assemblage was made up largely of merchants and business men, with a fair representation of the professions, ministers, doctors, lawyers, &c. The most intense interest characterizes the meetings. At Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, and many other Western cities and towns similar gatherings are daily held. In Portland, Me., the Vestries have become so crowded that two Churches, the Free Street and Union have been opened to accommodate the multitudes who want to pray. The Advertiser says every seat was occupied in these churches on Thursday. In New Bedford and Newburyport the interest is increasing and deepening. From Lynn, West Cambridge, Roxbury, South Danvers, Milford, and many other places, we see accounts of revivals. The last Examiner, a Baptist paper of New York, says it had kept a list of conversions from all denominations the past three weeks, till it reached the number of 17,000, and then finding it too large for its columns, it discontinued further additions save from its own denominations, and abridged the list already prepared by striking out the Methodist. Had it continued the list as begun, the Examiner thinks the list of conversions would have been found at least 20,000, which would make about 40,000 in two months. The [illegible] number is probably [illegible] el in which no statement of the number of conversions is given.

From the Correspondent of the Boston Journal.

NEW YORK, Mar. 11, 1858.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

* * * *

The work continues with some marked peculiarities. No sooner is a new place opened for daily prayer than it is immediately filled; no matter where, no matter at what hour, and the place of public prayer may be found open in New York from 6 in the morn till 10 at night. The work is marked by the great desire for prayer. Some of the men in New York who are now under the influence of this work, have been accustomed to attend the Tammany Hall meetings; and one of the small rooms in which the meetings of wire-pulling politicians meet, has been long known as the "coal-hole." Some of those converted men not being able to go out at the hour of 12 for the house of prayer, resolved to hold one in the store where they worked. So for the want of a better place, at the time they were allowed to take their nooning, some dozen of them went for prayer under the side-walk. In other words they met, and still meet daily for prayer at 12 o'clock in the literal coal hole. In almost all cases where persons not friendly to the movement have been prevailed on to attend these meetings, conversion has followed. Yesterday a young man arose and said that his father was a merchant; that he himself had been greatly opposed to religion. His father had said on one occasion, "My son, I wish you could feel happy in the daily prayer-meeting at Fulton street." To gratify my father I went. He saw me at dinner and said, "Oh, my son, do you not know how happy it makes me to see you in the prayer meeting." On the third attendance he was converted.

FROM SALT LAKE CITY—A SKIRMISH WITH THE TROOPS.

ST. LOUIS, Mar. 12.

The Council Bluffs Bugle of the 3d, says that Mr. Wingate has just arrived from Salt Lake, Jan. 25th, and reports that there is no snow in Salt Lake Valley and very little in the mountains. He came by a route known only to the Mormons through the mountains, by which only horsemen in single file can pass. The Army has not discovered any trace of it. The route passes through perpendicular rocks for thirteen miles, in many places only three feet wide, and is completely covered by a roof of rock.

Mr. Wingate says the Mormons are manufacturing small cannon with percussion locks and telescopic sights, which will carry a two-pound ball, with much more certainty than a cannon rifle, 120 yards.

They are also making 500 revolvers, and manufacturing a coarse kind of gunpowder for mining purposes.

A skirmish had occurred between a party of Mormons and a picket guard of the army, in which two of the former were killed, and, it was reported, four of the latter were slain.

Mr. Wingate says that Brigham Young is willing that the troops should come into the territory and enter upon their duties, but, if the Utah army attempts to enter the valley, it will be resisted. On the 24th of January Brigham Young preached to 9000 people, all of whom arose when he said—"All in favor of giving the troops hell, rise."

An immense number of arrests are said to have been made recently in Paris, and the Provinces, among them three members of the Paris bar, belonging to the Republican party.

It is said several persons were arrested in Paris on the night of the 22d.

The trial of the conspirators commenced on the 25th, before the Court of Assizes of Seine. The indictment is very lengthy and circumstantial. The prisoners are all young men, with the exception of Pierri, who is middle-aged. They all seemed composed, and listened with attention to the proceedings. Gomez denied any participation in the act, and only knew of it at the last moment. Rudio confessed every thing—he threw one bomb—and incriminated the rest of the prisoners. Orsini accepted the full responsibility of the part he had taken in the affair; confessed he wanted to kill the Emperor, and was ready to die; he never confided his intention to Mr. Allsop; said Mr. Bernard brought the bombs to Brussels, but did not know for what purpose they were intended; would not say any thing as to the other prisoners.

Pierri denied all participation in the conspiracy until the day the attempt was made, and then repented.

Mr. Taylor, of Birmingham, maker of bombs, did not answer to his name.

LATEST.

PARIS, Friday. The jury has given a verdict of guilty as regards four of the accused. The Court pronounced the sentence of death on Orsini, Rudio and Pierri. Gomez was sentenced to penal servitude for life.

CHINA.

The China mail reached England, with the details of news advised per Kangaroo.

The Cantonese submitted, and evacuated the city on the 30th of December.

The Governor of Canton was taken prisoner, as well as Yeh, and the Tartar General. The Governor (Pihquer) was subsequently installed as Vice Governor of the city, with powers similar to those wielded previously by Yeh.

THE LEVIATHAN.—It is estimated that the total cost of completing her fittings, putting on board stores, etc., and making the Leviathan in all respects ready for sea, will not exceed £120,000, and that the time required will not extend beyond the month of July. It has been proved that eight anchors are not sufficient to hold her at moorings during only a half gale, and she has been supplied with ten, five at the stem and five at the stern. The masts are being made at Millwall; six in all, three square-rigged, and three rigged with fore and aft sails. They will all be composed of plates of wrought iron, an inch thick, and riveted together in the same manner as the sides of the ship, or a steam boiler of the strongest description. They will vary from 130 to 170 feet from the keel to the truck; each will be three feet four inches in diameter at the deck, the weight varying from 30 to 40 tons, exclusive of yards or rigging. In case of it becoming necessary to cut away the masts, an apparatus working by means of a powerful screw is made to compress the two sides together in such a manner as to completely crush them in, and let them fall over the sides immediately. All the main and topmast yards of the square-rigged masts will also be of iron plates. The main yard will be 130 feet long, and lighter than if made of wood. As there is no dock large enough at the entrance to take in the Leviathan, when she needs cleaning, she will have to be "gridironed;" that is, run aground on rows of piles along the Mersey's side for the purpose, and the tide, of course, will leave her dry at each low water.

Conference.

Our meetings, during the Conference at Chapman Hall, will commence at 10 o'clock A. M., 2 and 7 o'clock P. M. Those who may arrive in the city at hours when the Conference is not in session, can call at our office, 167 Hanover St. Remember, Chapman Hall is in Chapman Place, out of School St., near Tremont Temple. Almost any one residing in the city can give you directions to our place of worship.

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

General Conference.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a General Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, March 16th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters who attended the Conference one year since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who came to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be persuaded to come to the one now proposed may not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded by rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

Bro. C. Goodrich appoints to preach in Worcester, March 14th and 21st.

Providence permitting, I will be at Benton, N. H., the second Sunday in March. The week following and the third Sunday in March where Bro. O. D. Eastman may appoint.

J. G. SMITH.

Conference.

There will be a Conference holden on the 2d Saturday of each month, in Orrington, Me., at the Advent Chapel. Brethren in the ministry will please remember these meetings.

I. DAMMAN.

Brn. S. G. Mathewson, Bakerville, Ct., and Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., are requested to act as agents for the Western Mission Fund.

P. B. MORGAN.

[We will gladly forward whatever we may receive for this purpose.—ED.

Elder Thomas Smith, Eddington, Me., has on hand the different kinds of Dr. A. M. Higgins valuable Family Medicines, and will act as Agent for them. Brethren in Maine, desiring any of these medicines, can obtain them by sending their orders addressed as above.

EXPECTATION.

I am journeying to the better land,
The New Jerusalem;
My pilgrimage it soon will end,
Soon I shall reach my home.
And when my bark has reached the shore
My tears will all be dry,
For God himself with his own hand
Shall wipe them from my eye.

The scoffing world, the bitter taunt,
Will trouble us no more,
And scenes of misery all will end
This side that blissful shore.
The angel band we then shall join,
With all the ransomed throng;
With sleeping loved ones from the tomb
We'll sing redemption's song.

Toil on, dear saints, a few more days
Your work is almost done,
Your glorious King is coming soon
To bear his loved ones home.
It is enough, dear Lord, we'll cry,
When we're from sin set free,
When we shall never, never die,
But live eternally.

The Seventh Day Sabbath---Is It Binding Now?

BY J. GIBSON.

No. III.

In answering the above question, perhaps I have adduced testimony sufficient to prove that it is not binding on any believer, whether Jew or Gentile. But some are hard to be convinced of an early taught error; therefore I will give a few more testimonies why I consider it not binding, and leave the subject. I find in Deut. 18: 18, that the Lord said to Moses; "I will raise them (the children of Israel) up a Prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him." Did his Father ever command him to say to the people, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt do no work?" &c. If he did, where shall I find it? And has Jesus Christ ever said any such thing to the people, either to Jews or Gentile church? If he has, in what book, chapter, and verse shall I find it? The fact is, God the Father never commanded him to speak any such thing; if he did he was unfaithful to his Father. But not so, for Paul says, Heb. 3: 2, that he was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house." Read the 5th and 6th verses. But "hear ye him," John 12: 49, 50, "For I have not spoken of it myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak; and I know that his commandment is life everlasting. Whatsoever I speak, therefore, even as he said unto me, so I speak." Again, in the 15th chap. 15th verse, he says; "Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." Although "heaven and earth pass away" the above testimony will stand.

None but Israelites were bound to keep the fourth commandment, as it was written in the law of Moses, and was a part of the covenant God made with them at Horeb, which was to extend until John, as Christ said (Luke 16: 16,) or, as Paul said, (Gal. 3: 19,) "till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." Which was none other than Jesus Christ, and he being that Prophet that the Lord God told Moses he would raise up, who was to speak all the words that God the Father commanded him to speak. And in the days of John we have the record, that the prophet which was promised did come, who was to be like unto Moses. In what respect? In two respects. First, Moses was the giver of the law to the children of Israel, as he received it from God. And this prophet was to give the law to the people, which the Gentile church was to observe and obey through the Gospel dispensation, as God commanded him. And in the second place, Moses was, under God, a deliverer of God's people from Egyptian bondage. Also that prophet is a deliverer, who will deliver all who believe and obey the commandments he has given them. [illegible]

[illegible] are found picking up sticks to kindle a fire to warm ourselves, or to cook something to eat on that day, we must "surely be stoned to death." This is very unlike the words of that prophet, found in Matt. 11: 28, 29, 30. "Hear ye him." "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; (and not of Moses) for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

It appears evident to me that the fourth commandment in the law ceased to be in force in the days of John. For the law forbid all work, and the carrying of any burden on the Sabbath day. I find an account in John 5: 7–10, that Jesus not only healed a man on the Sabbath, but says to the sick man, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." I ask, does it appear reasonable, that if that command or law was then binding, that he would do that himself, and command the sick man to do that which the law forbids? I think every reasonable person will answer no. Read Matt. 5: 19.

Again, as Jesus Christ was then giving the second covenant, or law of love, which was "written not with ink, but by the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in the fleshly tables of the heart," and as all Christ's disciples were under its influence, they could not be under both at the same time. And when the man that was healed was reproved by the unbelieving Jews for carrying his bed on the Sabbath, he could have truly said, I am delivered from that law, for he that said unto me, "rise, take up thy bed and walk," has become the end of that law to me. See Rom. 10: 4.

Another evidence that none of the believers in Christ were under it, is, that it is nowhere denounced as a crime in the New Testament or covenant. Paul, in preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, says, Acts 20: 27, "For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." And he did not declare the keeping of the seventh day; but says, Rom. 14: 5, "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike." (Here is where he would have enjoined it, if it was to be observed by the Gentile church; but he only says,) "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." And in 1 Cor. 6: 9, 10, he gives a catalogue of crimes, which will shut one out of the kingdom of God; and not a word about Sabbath breaking. Also, in Rev. 21: 8, the angel gives John a list of crimes which subject men to "the second death." And it is not found there. Why? The only answer I can give is, because it is not found in the words of Jesus Christ. For we are to "hear him."

Then I ask, on whom is it binding? None but the unbelieving Israelites. For Paul says, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Therefore my conclusion is, that all those Jews who deny that Jesus Christ was the Messiah, are "under the curse."

For the Crisis.

"He Runs Whenever he Sees the Wolf Coming."

This saying had reference recently to the teaching of our Lord—"the good Shepherd"—as recorded in John 10. It is full of instruction for all.

"The hireling—who careth not for the sheep"—is he who runs.

"The wolf" is the enemy of "the flock," and of "the faith of Jesus." Now as the hireling has his own ease, emolument or ends, to secure, he runs whenever the wolf threatens and scatters the flock.

The faithful friend of Jesus, "who confesses him before men," and "counts all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord," never incurs the charge made against the hireling. He who sacrifices all his own, rather than contend with "the wolf," acts on the example of the apostle and of Jesus our Lord. The command is, "When they persecute you in one city, flee ye to another." This running is not wolfish; but christian. This suffering wrong for Christ's sake is essential to our "bearing all things—as the sons of God without rebuke, amidst a crooked and perverse generation—shining as lights in the world."

"The wolf" is he who catcheth and scattereth the sheep. Hence, "Mark them who cause divisions, and avoid them!" "The tree is known by its fruit."

They who stand by the truth, and vindicate the truth, may patiently endure [illegible] and throw our Lord's words against the wolf on those who suffer from their schisms. The Lord enable us to "endure to the end."

"Devouring Fire."

Some think the doctrine of endless torment is taught in Isa. 33: 14,—"Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" But does this refer in any sense to the judgment after the resurrection of the dead? I think not, and will give my reasons. In the first place, there is no reference to the judgment day, but it is an earthly judgment. This was admitted by Andrew Fuller in his letters to a Universalist. He gave it up as not referring to future punishment. By reading from verse 7th, we see that an earthly judgment only is spoken of.

Everlasting is used here in its limited sense, as "everlasting hills." In verse 16th, the promise is to the righteous; "bread shall be given him." &c., which shows that both the threatening and promises are earthly. No one can exist in devouring fire but the righteous, and that not in this state of being, unless a miracle is wrought, as was the case with the three worthies, recorded in Dan. 3: 20–27. These three men "dwelt" in "devouring fire;" and dwelt safely, and came out safe, without the smell of fire upon them; while their enemies were slain by the flames of the fire.

Wicked men are not immortal, they could not dwell in fire after the judgment, any more than they can now, unless God should work a miracle to keep them alive, which he has not promised he would do. Devouring fire will surely devour what is cast into it, that is sinful and not right in the sight of the Lord. The very nature of fire is to destroy or to purify, therefore if the wicked are to be punished with literal fire, they will either be purified, and universal restoration be true, or they will be destroyed, or burned up. If fire is to be kept burning continually, it seems to me that something must be continually feeding it afresh, or being thrown into it forever; this would make the judgment eternal in its progress, and never completed. We read of "eternal judgment," but we understand it to be eternal in its result, not in its duration; and as Isa. 33: 14 has its fulfillment on this earth, there must be an end of it or we shall never have the new earth, which is so plainly promised in the word of God.

For the Crisis.

The World.

It is full of wrong. The hand of oppression bears hard upon the lowly. The wicked triumph over the just. The rulers of the land are filled with evil. The rich man of yesterday, to-day sees his accumulated wealth of years vanish away. The bloom of health soon changes to the pallor of disease, and death robs us of those we love the best. The strong man is struck down by the dirk of the midnight assassin, or the bullet of the cowardly robber, and he escapes from the punishment man could inflict. We cannot take up a newspaper but the bloody list of murders and dark outrages meets our gaze. It is so all over the land.

A war—a sanguinary, exterminating war—now rages in India, and every gale that sweeps across the ocean's billows bears the dreadful tidings. We shudder and turn away. In our own country, in the far West, the Mormon hordes seem gathering blackness like a portentous cloud of the coming tornado. Nations seem preparing for deadlier conflicts. The ingenuity of man invents new and improved instruments of destruction. Men, lost in bewilderment, ask each other, "what next?" and turn in vain for a solution of the problem to their sages. Surely, all these things do not betoken "the good time coming," as spoken by poets, dreamers, and spiritualists. Everything betokens an unsettled world. Surely, if these are not the "last days" they are just like them; and why wonder there is longing for the "Prince of Peace" to reign, since he will restore peace, safety, health and joy, where now war, danger, sickness, death and sorrow hold sway?

We are weary and sad, homeless and in bondage; friends fall beside us, and the march of death goes on in the world. But soon we shall rest and be joyful; be restored to health and possessions; have a changeless home, free forever; [illegible]

Here flowers bloom, and then they wither; the howling storms and wintry blasts assail us. Soon fadeless flowers will bloom in immortal beauty, and storms will cease their tumult. No more unjust accusations will be made against us then, for all will be well, and He whose word can never be broken, who has promised to "come again," will surely return to take his people home. And then—

"From North to South, from East to West,
Immanuel's kingdom shall extend;
And every one in every breast,
Shall find a brother and a friend."

May we be among the redeemed in that day.

The Work in R. I.

Bro. Grant:—We have had interesting revivals in this part of the land for some months past. This work began in Pontiac Village. I went there in Nov. to baptise some few, not intending to stop but a day or two; but the work of reformation broke out. Fifteen in all were baptised. I went from there to Natick. Had some interesting meetings,—great crowds out to hear,—some converted. I ceased my labors to give the people a chance to go to the Plains. Here our beloved Bro. Champlin commenced a series of meetings, which continued over two months. It was the most powerful meeting they ever had in that place. Over two hundred came to the anxious seats. Most, if not all of them were converted. Over fifty of them joined the Adventists. Others are waiting to go forward. Many have joined other churches.

Bro. Champlin commenced a protracted meeting at River Point. The fire of reformation broke out. When they had continued some two weeks, the brethren sent for me to come and help on the good work, Bro. Champlin being worn down by incessant labors night and day. I have been here over a week, and the work goes on with power. Bro. Champlin's team from the Plains, have united with the brethren here, and they work well together. We have our meetings in the Odd Fellows' Hall, which will seat five hundred people. Most of the time it is jammed to its utmost capacity. Over a hundred have been forward for prayers,—some of the first men in the place. Great opposition from ministers and church members. Fifteen were baptized last Sunday.

FAREWELL.

Farewell—word of sadness, I breathe it to-day,
'Mid swift rushing mem'ries of joys passed away;
With affection's deep fount welling up in the heart,
And the quick tear-drop starting—dear sister, we part.

Farewell—'tis the saddest note mortals ere sung,
Breathed with sighs and regret by the aged and young;
How it flings o'er the heart its wild, saddening spell,
When whispered by loved ones far distant to dwell.

Farewell—oh how oft, like a funeral knell,
Our brightest hopes perished and gone doth it tell!
From the lips of the dying 'tis breathed on the ear,
While the beating heart trembles in anguish and fear.

Farewell—but they tell of a green sunny shore
Where they part not and farewells are uttered no more;
God grant me to roam where its pure waters glide,
And find thee eternally still by my side.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord is blessing us with a revival of religion in this vicinity. In Rome the interest is great. Since last spring thirty or forty have met with a change, and wanderers have been reclaimed. The work is still on the increase. I have been alone most of the time in the work. Do I say alone? I have felt that the Lord has been with me.

For a few weeks we have been holding a protracted meeting in the Town House. Bro. Tibbets, of the Christian order, has been with us, and Bro. Hammond. Blessings have attended the efforts. Sinners have been redeemed and backsliders reclaimed. The interest is yet good. We are of that faith that the Lord will work if we labor.

Dear brethren and sisters, hold fast; strive; work; do what you can. The time for rewards I believe is at hand—Praise the Lord! Rest remains for the people of God.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

H. B. Sevey.

A HYMN.

Since man by sin has lost his God,
He seeks creation through,
And vainly hopes for solid bliss
In trying something new.

The new possessed, like fading flowers,
Soon loses its gay hue;
The bauble now no longer takes,
The soul wants something new.

O could we call all Europe ours,
With India and Peru,
The mind would feel an aching void
And still want something new.

But when we feel our Savior's power,
All good in him we view,
Nor need we ever change again,
For Christ is always new.

CHAPTER XIII.

1. And Terah took his son Abram and his grandson Lot, the son of Haran, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, the wife of his son Abram, and all the souls of his household, and went with them from Ur Casdim to go to the land of Canaan. And when they came as far as the land of Haran they remained there, for it was exceeding good land for pasture, and of sufficient extent for those who accompanied them.

2. And the people of the land of Haran saw that Abraham was good and upright with God and men, and that the Lord his God was with him, and some of the people of the land of Haran came and joined Abram, and he taught them the instruction of the Lord and his ways; and these men remained with Abram in his house and they adhered to them.

3. And Abram remained in the land three years, and at the expiration of three years the Lord appeared to Abram and said to him; I am the Lord who brought thee forth from Ur Casdim, and delivered thee from the hands of all thine enemies.

4. And now therefore if thou wilt hearken to my voice and keep my commandments, my statutes and my laws, then will I cause thy enemies to fall before thee, and I will multiply thy seed like the stars of heaven, and I will send my blessing upon all the works of thy hands, and thou shalt lack nothing.

5. Arise now, take thy wife and all belonging to thee and go to the land of Canaan and remain there, and I will there be unto thee for a God, and I will bless thee. And Abram rose and took his wife and all belonging to him, and he went to the land of Canaan as the Lord had told him; and Abram was fifty-five years old when he went from Haran.

6. And Abram came to the land of Canaan and dwelt in the midst of the city, and he there pitched his tent amongst the children of Canaan, inhabitants of the land.

7. And the Lord appeared to Abram when he came to the land of Canaan, and said to him, this is the land which I gave unto thee and to thy seed after thee forever, and I will make thy seed like the stars of heaven, and I will give unto thy seed for an inheritance all the lands which thou seest.

8. And Abram built an altar in the place where God had spoken to him, and Abram there called upon the name of the Lord.

9. At that time, at the end of three years of Abram's dwelling in the land of Canaan, in that year Noah died, which was the fifty-eighth year of the life of Abram; and all the days that Noah lived were nine hundred and fifty years and he died.

10. And Abram dwelt in the land of Canaan, he, his wife, and all belonging to him, and all those that accompanied him, together with those that joined him from the people of the land; but Nahor, Abram's brother, and Terah his father, and Lot the son of Haran and all belonging to them dwelt in Haran.

11. In the fifth year of Abram's dwelling in the land of Canaan the people of Sodom and Gomorrah and all the cities of the plain revolted from the power of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam; for all the kings of the cities of the plain had served Chedorlaomer for twelve years, and given him a yearly tax, but in those days in the thirteenth year, they rebelled against him.

12. And in the tenth year of Abram's dwelling in the land of Canaan there was war between Nimrod king of Shinar and Chedorlaomer king of Elam, and Nimrod came to fight with Chedorlaomer and to subdue them.

13. For Chedorlaomer was at that time one of the princes of the hosts of Nimrod, and when all the people at the tower were dispersed and those that remained were also scattered upon the face of the earth, Chedorlaomer went to the land of Elam and reigned over it and rebelled against his Lord.

14. And in those days when Nimrod saw that the cities of the plain had rebelled, he came with pride and anger to war with Chedorlaomer, and Nimrod assembled all his princes and subjects, about seven hundred thousand men, and went against Chedorlaomer, and Chedorlaomer went out to meet him with five thousand men, and they prepared for battle in the valley of Babel which is between Elam and Shinar.

15. And all those kings fought there, and Nimrod and his people were smitten before the people of Chedorlaomer, and there fell from Nimrod's men about six hundred thousand, and Mardon the king's son fell amongst them.

16. [illegible] shame and disgrace to his land, and he was under subjection to Chedorlaomer for a long time, and Chedorlaomer returned to his land and sent princes of his host to the kings that dwelt around him, to Arioch king of Elasar, and to Tidal king of Goyim, and made a covenant with them, and they were all obedient to his commands.

17. And it was in the fifteenth year of Abram's dwelling in the land of Canaan, which is the seventieth year of the life of Abram, and the Lord appeared to Abram in that year and he said to him, I am the Lord who brought thee out from Ur Casdim to give thee this land for an inheritance.

18. Now therefore walk before me and be perfect and keep my commands, for to thee and to thy seed I will give this land for an inheritance, from the river Mitzraim unto the great river Euphrates.

19. And thou shalt come to thy fathers in peace and in good age, and the fourth generation shall return here in this land and shall inherit it forever; and Abram built an altar, and he called upon the name of the Lord who appeared to him, and he brought up sacrifices upon the altar to the Lord.

20. At that time Abram returned and went to Haran to see his father and mother, and his father's household, and Abram and his wife and all belonging to him returned to Haran, and Abram dwelt in Haran five years.

21. And many of the people of Haran, about seventy-two men, followed Abram and Abram taught them the instruction of the Lord and his ways, and he taught them to know the Lord.

22. In those days the Lord appeared to Abram in Haran, and he said to him, behold, I spoke unto thee these twenty years back saying,

23. Go forth from thy land, from thy birth-place and from thy father's house, to the land which I have shown thee to give it to thee and to thy children, for there in that land will I bless thee, and make thee a great nation, and make thy name great, and in thee shall the families of the earth be blessed.

24. Now therefore arise, go forth from this place, thou, thy wife, and all belonging to thee, also every one born in thy house and all the souls thou hast made in Haran, and bring them out with thee from here, and rise to return to the land of Canaan.

25. And Abram arose and took his wife Sarai and all belonging to him, and all that were born to him in his house and the souls which they had made in Haran, and they came out to go to the land of Canaan.

26. And Abram went and returned to the land of Canaan, according to the word of the Lord. And Lot the son of his brother Haran went with him, and Abram was seventy-five years old when he went forth from Haran to return to the land of Canaan.

27. And he came to the land of Canaan according to the word of the Lord to Abram, and he pitched his tent and he dwelt in the plain of Mamre, and with him was Lot his brother's son, and all belonging to him.

The Shadows We Cast.

Father, husband, wife, sister, brother, son, neighbor,—are we not casting shadows daily on some hearts that are pining for the sunlight of our faces? In all their infinitely varied relations men and women selfishly or thoughtlessly—from design, weakness, or ignorance, are casting their shadows upon hearts that are pining for sunlight. A word, a look, a tone, an act, will cast a shadow and sadden a spirit for hours and days. Speak kindly; be forgetters of self and regarders of others, and you will cast but few shadows along the path of life. The true gentleman is always tender of the feelings of others; always watchful lest he wound unintentionally,—always thinking, when with others, of their pleasure instead of his own. He casts but few shadows. Be gentlemen; be ladies, or, in a word, that includes all graces and excellencies, be christians; for it is the christian who casts fewest shadows along life's wearied pathway.

Thrilling Incident.

At a temperance meeting in Philadelphia, some years ago, a learned clergyman spoke in favor of wine as a drink, demonstrating it quite to his own satisfaction to be scriptural, gentlemanly and healthful. When the clergyman sat down, a plain, elderly man arose, and asked the liberty of saying a few words. Permission being granted, he spoke as follows:

"A young friend of mine," said he, "who had long been intemperate, was prevailed on, to the joy of his friends, to take the pledge of entire abstinence from all that could intoxicate. He kept his pledge faithfully for some time, though the struggle with his habit was fearful, till one evening, in a social party, glasses of wine were handed around. They came to a clergyman present, who took a glass, saying a few words in vindication of the practice. 'Well,' thought the young man, 'if clergymen can take wine and justify it so well, why not I?' So he took a glass. It instantly rekindled his fiery and slumbering appetite, and after a rapid downward course, he died of delirium tremens—a raving madman." The old man paused for utterance, and was just able to add:—"That young man was my only son, and the clergyman was the Reverend Doctor who has just addressed the assembly." [illegible]

REMEMBER ME.

Remember me, O God,
Who all my needs can see,
In every ill and every woe,
O Lord, remember me.

Remember me, my God,
By sin and woe distrest;
O hold me up beneath my load,
And give me peace and rest.

If sickness sore o'ertake,
And pain my portion be,
O Savior, for thy mercy's sake,
I pray remember me.

Remember me, my God,
In death's dread, shadowy vale;
Comfort me with thy staff and rod,
Let not my courage fail.

Remember me, my God,
When at the great white throne,
The trembling world awaits thy nod,—
O claim me as thine own!

My God, remember me;
To thee I lift mine eyes;
O grant that I at last may be
With thee in Paradise!

The Seventh Day Sabbath---Is It Binding Now?

No. IV.

In my last number, I remarked that I thought the law of Moses, which embraced the seventh day Sabbath, was binding on no one except the unbelieving Israelites; and I ought to have said, that it is not binding on them, unless they have been circumcised. I have already referred to Paul's testimony, Gal. 5: 2-4,—"Behold I, Paul, say unto you that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." I understand by the above, that if a person is not circumcised, he is not under the law: and also by Rom. 10: 4, that, although a man has been circumcised, and has considered the law binding on him, as soon as he becomes a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ his circumcision availeth nothing; he has become a new creature; old things are passed away; he is no longer under the old law or covenant, but under grace. He is under the new covenant, and instead of the law being lettered on stone, it is in his mind, and written on his heart. Heb. 8: 10. He also has passed from the Levitical priesthood, under which the people received the law, and is now under the priesthood which is according to the order of Melchisedec: "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." [illegible] commandment takes place on account of its weakness and unprofitableness, for the law made nothing perfect, but there is a bringing in of a better hope, through which we draw near unto God." (Whiting.)

Webster says "disannul" is to make void. Now the question is, what commandment, or law, is disannuled—made void? We are told that it is the ceremonial law. Do any of the inspired writers give us any account of a ceremonial law? If they do, I have not yet found it. Some make two or three laws of what Moses received from the Lord, and gave to the children of Israel, one, called by them the moral law. Did the Lord ever give any other? Was any of the law immoral? If so, it did not come from the Lord, and always was, and always will be, null and void. All of the inspired writers, when speaking of the Mosaic law, put it in the singular number, "The Law." Although a part of it was lettered on stone, and a part not, yet all of it is always called "The Law." Paul, in 2 Cor. 3: has particular reference to that part which was "lettered and engraven on stone" being "done away, abolished," &c., upon which I have remarked in a former number.

Much is said in these days, by those who profess to be giving, what they call the third angel's message, about them "that keep the commandments of God." See Rev. 14: 12. And it seems as though they thought that the salvation of man depends mostly, if not wholly, upon his keeping the fourth commandment lettered on stone. Query. Were not all of the commandments, found in the law of Moses, whether they are lettered on stone or not, the commandments of God? Again, are not all of the commandments given by Jesus Christ the commandments of God? They certainly are, as I have already shown in a former number. See Deut. 18: 18; John 8: 28—12: 49, 50. Paul says in Heb. 1: 1, 2, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." And one of the commandments of God which we are to keep, is, "hear ye him." Upon keeping this commandment depends our salvation; for the Lord makes a test of it by saying, "And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts 3: 23.

But there is one thing more that is necessary. The last clause of the text seems to be lost sight of by those that contend for the seventh day Sabbath, which is, "the faith of Jesus." The text reads, "Here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." I understand that "the faith of Jesus" is, to believe in him, not only as our Redeemer, but as the medium through which the commandments of God are communicated to us, as Moses was to the Israelites. Therefore it is necessary that the Gentile church believe that Jesus Christ is not only her husband, but her only lawgiver.

Here I leave the subject, hoping that the readers will be like the noble Bereans; "search and see if these things are not so."

A Little While.

Yes, "yet a little while and He that shall come will come and will not tarry." The apostle spoke these words nearly eighteen hundred years ago, to encourage and comfort the followers of Christ in their afflictions, and surely they ought to comfort them now. Only think how many years of that "little while" is in the past. Surely we are almost home. In a little while those tears that were shed on the account of sin and sorrow will be wiped away by our Redeemer's hand, and we shall be made immortal; our eyes will be lighted never to grow dim, and our faces will bloom with eternal life never again to fade. Death nor distance will never more hide from our sight those we love. We shall inhabit a city where no night [illegible] occasion will ever wind its way through the street; for death will have no power over the inhabitants. There will not be a lying nor deceitful tongue to pass cold and cruel remarks upon those who walk those golden streets, for they will be left without the gates of that "city" into which the righteous shall enter with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. "They shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Relationship to God.

Our relation as christians to God, both in this and in a future state, has been a source of deep and joyous reflection to me in my pilgrimage towards the promised land. In presenting this subject for the consideration of those who desire a knowledge of the truth, we inquire,

I. What is our present relation to God as christians? Often are we greeted in the Scriptures of truth by the endearing title of children, heirs, sons; but upon closer examination we learn that it is in prospect that we are thus addressed; as was Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Thus; "I am the God of Abraham," &c. Jesus says this was spoken "as touching the dead that they rise."

Nevertheless, there is an interesting relationship already existing between God and the christian, which has been made perfectly plain by the inspired writers. Concerning this relation Paul says this heirship is by "the spirit of adoption whereby we cry Abba, Father." Rom. 8: 15. This conditional adoption is granted to believers only, and is called by John (5: 24,) being "passed from death unto life." How do we know that we are "passed from death unto life?" 1 Jo. 3: 14,—"We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." But how do we know that we love the brethren? 1 Jo. 5: 2,—"By this we know that we love the children of God (the brethren) when we love God and keep his commandments."

The preceding verse shows our relation to God as children to be in an embryo or begotten state; for "every one that loveth him (God) that begat loveth him (the brother) also that is begotten of God." How are we as believers (children) the begotten of God? Certainly "not by the will of the flesh, neither by the will of man," but "Of HIS OWN WILL BEGAT he us, by the word of truth." James 1: 18. This word of truth Peter calls an "incorruptible seed." 1 Pet. 1: 23. From this we learn,

1. We are children of God only by "the spirit of adoption."

2. By believing on Christ through the Spirit we have "passed from death unto life."

3. In passing or being "passed from death to life" we do "love the brethren."

4. And loving the children of God (the brethren) involves the loving of God and the keeping of his commandments. And

5. This connection as children of God, is by virtue of being begotten of God and that by an "incorruptible seed"—"the word of truth," which shows perfectly our present relation and empowers us for a more endearing relation in future. This begetting does not throw us back into an unconscious state, but gives to us a new impetus towards another and better state.

II. What then will be our future relationship to God?

As Christ has stepped into our fallen condition, and shown us by his example the way of life, and a nearer relationship to God, as our elder brother, we will follow his steps and learn of him.

The first man, Adam, was made a living soul; the second Adam was made a quickening spirit. How did Christ become a quickening spirit? John 5: 26,—"For as the father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." Was this giving of life called a quickening? 21st ver. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Christ was raised from the dead, quick- [illegible] (1 Pet. 3: 18,) "being put to death in the flesh but quickened by the Spirit." This quickening of the Spirit from the dead brought him (Christ) into actual worship. Rom. 1: 3, 4,—"Who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the son of God by the spirit of holiness, (Holy Spirit,) by the resurrection from the dead." This resurrection of Christ is called a birth. Col. 2: 18,—"And he (Christ) is the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the FIRST born from the dead, that in all things (even in birth) he might have the preeminence." Concerning Christ we learn

1. That he (Christ) was "raised up"—"quickened" from the dead "by the Spirit."

2. This raising up of Christ was a birth; therefore a birth of the Spirit.

3. That Christ's birth from the dead by the Spirit was the FIRST BIRTH from the dead, hence the FIRST BIRTH of the Spirit.

4. And if Christ had the FIRST birth of the Spirit, then it follows that no body was "born of the Spirit" BEFORE HIM.

This Spirit birth produced in Christ a physical change. It gave him a spiritual instead of a corruptible BODY. A body quickened by the Spirit. He could then come in, "the doors being shut." He could then "vanish out of their sight," just like the going and coming of the wind. "Ye hear the sound thereof but cannot tell from whence it cometh, or whither it goeth. SO is EVERY ONE, (person) that IS BORN OF THE SPIRIT."

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh, that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." "Marvel not that I said unto you ye must be born again." But what has this to do with our relation to God? "Much, every way." Chiefly because "God is not a God of the dead." For if Christ has not been "born again" as the head of the body, the church, then there is no birth of the body, the church. Now if Christ be preached that he was born from the dead, how say some among you there is no birth from the dead? But if there be no birth of the dead, then is Christ not born from the dead. And if Christ be not born from the dead then is our preaching vain, and your faith is vain also; then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. But now is Christ born from the dead, and has become the first (born) fruits of the spirit birth from the dead. Now says the apostle "unless we have the spirit of Christ we are none of his, but if the Spirit that raised up Christ from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your MORTAL BODIES by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

This declaration does not teach that these mortal bodies are quickened by receiving the Spirit, but if the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead DWELL in you, it—the Spirit—shall ALSO quicken your mortal bodies, just as Christ's body was raised up from the dead and quickened. This quickening of Christ from the dead was a birth of the Spirit. Then if our mortal bodies are quickened in the same way we too shall have a birth of the Spirit. By this birth of the Spirit he was declared to be the Son of God with power.

This birth of the Spirit alone can change our relation to God to real sonship. And this is the relation which is promised to those who are counted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection (birth) from the dead, they are as the angels which are in heaven, and are the CHILDREN of GOD being THE children of the resurrection—neither can they die any more, being born of an incorruptible seed. 1 Cor. 6: 14,—"And God hath both raised up the Lord (by a birth from the dead) and will ALSO raise up us (by a birth from the dead) by his own power," "if the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead dwell in us." One birth of the flesh and we have "these mortal bodies." Another birth—"born again" "of the Spirit," and then comes the "spiritual body." "That which is born of flesh is flesh, and that which is born of spirit is spirit;" which when put together makes a body of flesh quickened by the Spirit. One birth for the body and one of the Spirit, and we have an [illegible] SPIRIT [illegible] being the CHILDREN of the RESURRECTION. Even so let it be.

Begetting only empowers us to become children. Jo. 5: 26,—"But as many as receive him to them he gave power (right or privilege) to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name."

Blessed be God for the privilege of being born again from an "incorruptible seed." O that Zion would travail and bring forth a (righteous) nation at once.

Familiar Letters.

No. IV.

TO UNCLE FRED:—I promised in my next communication to give you the opinion of several English Lexicographers respecting the meaning of the word baptizo.

Donegan. "Baptizo, to immerse repeatedly in a liquid, to submerge, to sink thoroughly, to saturate; baptismos—immersion, submersion, the act of washing or bathing; baptismoz—one who immerses, submerges; baptismer—an object immersed, submerged, or soaked."

Dr. John Jones, of England. "Bapto—I dip, I stain; baptizo—I plunge, I plunge in water, dip, baptize, bury, overwhelm."

Pickering. "Baptizma means immersion, dipping, plunging; metaphorically, misery or calamity, by which one is overwhelmed."

Greenfield. "Baptizo means to immerse, immerge, submerge, sink; to wash, perform oblation, cleanse, to baptize, and perform the rite of baptism."

"Bretschneider, a German scholar of distinction, and like Greenfield a most critical lexicographer of the New Testament, uses these strong and pointed words: 'An entire immersion belongs to the nature of baptizo; this is the meaning of the word, for as in baptizo is contained the idea of a complete immersion under water at least so is baptismer of the New Testament.'"

Prof. Stuart, a thorough Presbyterian. "Bapto, baptizo, means to dip, plunge, or immerse into any liquid. All lexicographers and critics of any note are agreed in this."

"Dr. Robinson, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Andover Theological Seminary. "Bapto—to dip in, to immerse." He illustrates this meaning by reference to John 13: 26, where Jesus used the word to designate the dipping of the sop into the dish, before giving it to Judas. The second example is from Lev. 4: 6, where the lexicographer has this term. It reads thus: "And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the Lord; and shall pour (ver. 7) all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar." Here are the three different words, bapto, rantizo, and ekeo, to express the three different actions, dipping, sprinkling, and pouring.

We think, Uncle Fred, that we have given sufficient and reliable testimony to establish the point, viz., that the primary meaning of the word baptizo, is to dip, plunge, and immerse. What think you?

And now permit me in addition to what I have already said, to give you the testimony of a few competent witnesses respecting the mode of baptism as administered by the early church.

Bishop Bossuet testifies: "We are able to make it appear by the acts of Councils, and by the ancient rituals, that for thirteen hundred years baptism was thus (by immersion) administered throughout the whole church, as far as possible."

Augusti, as quoted by Moses Stuart, in "Biblical Repository" pp. 359, says, in speaking of immersion, "I know of no usage of ancient times that seems to be more closely and certainly made out. I cannot see how it is possible for any candid man, who examines the subject, to deny this."

Mosheim, speaking of the first century, uses the following language: "The sacrament of baptism was administered in this century, without the public [illegible] in places appointed and prepared for the purpose [illegible] the whole body in the baptismal font." Again: "Those adult persons who desire to be baptized, receive the sacrament of baptism according to the ancient and primitive manner of celebrating that institution, even by immersion."

Bishop Taylor testifies: "The custom of the ancient churches was not sprinkling, but immersion; in pursuance of the sense of the word (baptizo) in the commandment and example of the blessed Savior. Now this was of so sacred account in their esteem, that they did not esteem it lawful to receive him into the church who had been only sprinkled in his baptism, as we learn from the epistle of Cornelius to Fabius of Antioch."

Dr. Neander, in his letter to Mr. Judd, observes: "As to your question on the original rite of baptism, there can be no doubt whatever, that in the primitive times it was performed by immersion, to signify a complete immersion into the new principle of the divine life, which was imparted by the Messiah.

In his "History of the Christian Religion" he says: "Baptism was originally administered by immersion," and he also says that "An exception was made only in case of sick persons, which was necessary, and they received baptism by sprinkling."

Prof. Stuart says: "The mode of baptism, the oriental church has always continued to preserve, even down to the present time."

Chalmers, in his lecture on the 6th chap. of Rom., and 4th ver., says: "The original meaning of baptism is immersion, and though we regard it as a point of indifferency whether the ordinance so named, be performed in this way, or by sprinkling; yet we doubt not that the prevalent style of administration in the apostolic days was by an actual submersion of the whole body under water." This is the testimony of a Presbyterian.

And now, Uncle Fred, I will forbear further testimony touching these several points, and after refreshing your memory with a few facts touching the history of sprinkling, I will submit the whole matter to your judgment for a verdict.

Yours as ever,

KATE.

Lazy Christians.

How drone-i-fied the sound! Will the Lord have such in his kingdom? Let us see. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." John 15: 14. What are the commandments concerning industry? Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time. Col. 4: 5.

And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you; that ye walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing." 1 Thess. 4: 11, 12.

"Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread." 2 Thess. 3: 12.

Here are three plain commandments that come right to the point; we will notice their import.

1. "Walk in wisdom toward them that are without." Why? That they seeing our "good works," may glorify our Father in heaven.

2. That we may walk honestly toward them that are without, for they watch us, knowing that if we would work, we would have "lack of nothing."

3. That we obey the command of our Lord Jesus by working with our hands, and eating our own bread, for if we do not these commandments, we destroy the confidence of those who watched us, who should be influenced by our good works, our honesty, our diligence in business, and fervency in Spirit, to become christians, too.

Now then, will we "work"? Will we "redeem the time"? Will we strive against the works of the flesh, and be found in all diligence [illegible] are watched by the world as you loiter around the bar-room, the store, the grocery, the streets, in idleness, when there is enough to do. Will you thus destroy your influence? Better be a helping your neighbor, the poor, the widows in their afflictions, these "hard times," than to bring a reproach upon the cause of Christ.

You like the "Crisis," do you? Well, remember there are some of the Lord's poor who would like it, too; and you might accumulate many pennies in your idle moments which would soon amount to dollars, and give those starving souls who hunger and thirst after righteousness and the knowledge of the Lord. By the way, how much do you spend yearly to gratify your eye, your pride, your filthy mouths and dainty stomachs? How much do you squander away for useless meats and drinks which do not glorify God nor yourself. Oh brethren and sisters, you that do these things I exhort to abstain from all filthiness of the flesh, and laziness while in the service of the Lord, that when he comes to make up his jewels, you may be found of him in peace, obeying all his commandments which are not grievous to be borne, if we but love him in sincerity and truth.

G. W. Gillespie.

From Sr. E. S. Fenn.

Bro. Grant:—As there are many scattered children belonging to the flock of Christ, with whom I have associated in days gone by, who perhaps have often inquired for me, I feel that I can give them information in no better way than to communicate it through the paper; which privilege I crave.

Well, I think that I can say that I have been making some little progress in the way of holiness. I have had a share in the afflictions which are common to mortals—sometimes termed chastisements—by which I have learned I am not my own, but am bought with a price and that to repay the debt I owe, my service is required. While I have endeavored to study the simple lessons taught in the Scriptures, I feel that I have gained an insight into greater ones; which increases an intense desire to know more concerning the deep things of God. Hence I feel resolved to make it my great business here to insure eternal life in the kingdom of God.

It is not enough for me to know that it is for me, unless I try to persuade others to fall in love with the cross of Christ, that they too may enjoy the rest that remains for the faithful. Not enough to know that I am walking in wisdom's ways unless I impart the knowledge I have received to others, that they may learn to love the same. Not enough to have the sympathy of friends, but must lend mine in return. Not enough to feel that the promises of God are verified to me, but must search out the suffering, and bind up the broken hearted with the same. Not enough to enjoy the good things of earth, but must extend the hand of pity to the needy.

I love to weep with those that weep, as well as to rejoice with those that rejoice. I can say with emphasis, Oh! how I love the truths of the gospel; and my daily inquiry is, what is truth? for it is to make us free. I love the pathway of the Christian, but have long since learned that it is not all joy. Had I found it thus I should never have known what it was to suffer with Jesus, hence I could not claim the promise, that such shall reign with him. But though I have not always felt joy, yet in the most severe trials I have had consolation, which the word of God most assuredly affords us.

In days gone by, I have spent many a weary hour on account of forbearing the word of the Lord; when, like Jeremiah the prophet, it was in my heart like fire shut up in my bones, until I became so weary with forbearing that I could not stay, and regardless of what others might say or think, who oppose the meek and lowly follower of Christ, I dared to venture to unburden my mind before the people, by giving them the instruction that the Lord gave me. Often, like the prophet, I have thought I could speak no more in his name, for it seemed that the story was all told, and I sought a place where I might rest my aching frame. As soon as I felt that the weariness with speaking was gone, again the word was burning within my heart, and I fain would seek a place where those who hunger might be fed with the words of life which should be freely given.

[illegible]

as stars in my crown, until I recount them in the kingdom of God, and know that they are safe and saved forever.

I beg the privilege of saying to any who may wish to know my address, that it is Brookfield, Conn.;—also, their prayers for their sister, who needs them,

SUMMER SAINTS.

As butterflies with gaudy wings,
Display themselves on sunny days,
So summer saints, more gaudy things!
Seek God's house for prayer and praise;
But if a cloud obscures the sky,
Or e'en a mist bedecks the ground,
These summer saints are weather-bound,
And stay at home like butterflies.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 24, 1858.

Spiritualism.

No. III.

In this article, we wish to examine more carefully, the cardinal doctrine of Spiritualism, as expressed in the following resolution, adopted at a convetnion of Spiritualists, held in 1857, at Rockford, Ill.

"Resolved, That Spiritualism, according to the modern acceptation of that term, embraces all those who believe in the IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL. . . . Beyond this common faith, there is no doctrine or creed necessarily incident to Spiritualism."

A belief in this lie of Satan, forged and taught to our first parents in their paradise home, was the cause of their fall; and we may expect a mighty effort, on the part of the Devil and his angels, to confirm and sustain this false doctrine, when the buried truth of the Bible begins to emerge from beneath the theological mire of these last days.

A demon appears, and professes to be the spirit of Emanuel Swedenborg. He is asked,

"Is it one of the principal objects of these communications, to convince men of the immortality of the soul?—Yes. Why are these communications made now more than formerly? Is it because that doctrine is more doubted now?—Yes."

Another spirit, or demon, says, "The visitations and manifestations from the spirit-world are to convince you of the immortality of the soul."

If this doctrine of Spiritualists is true, it is the only one which they hold in harmony with the Bible; for they deny that Christ is our Savior, only as he set us a good example;—that he is the Son of God in any sense different from other good men;—that his body was raised from the dead;—that he is coming again personally to this planet;—that there is any death—that the bodies of men will ever be raised from the dead;—that there is any devil or demons existing as intelligent beings separate from man;—or that God exists "as a being." Is it not strange indeed that they should be right in this cardinal doctrine, and at the same time harmonize with the great lie of Satan uttered to our first parents, when he taught them that they were immortal?

Can it be possible that the Author of truth has stirred up in these last days some of the most hardened and wicked men, who have for years rejected the word of God, and trampled upon every thing the christian holds sacred, to unite with demons to establish a great Bible truth? We are told that Spiritualism "has lifted the veil from the dark and mysterious future, and solved the difficult problem of man's immortality?" Most of the spirits, who bring communications professedly from our departed friends, have been proved liars; but they all declare in harmony with their great prince—the devil—that man is immortal. The further men go into Spiritualism, the less the authority of the Bible over them; till they can say,—"Each soul its own authority! Nothing authoritative outside of itself."

They claim to give "incontestable proof that the soul is immortal." We do not hesitate to say that whoever can do this, can overthrow the Bible. But in their attempt, they but confirm more fully the truth of the sacred volume. Why are demons so anxious to establish a belief in the immortality of the soul, and overthrow faith in the sleep of the dead? Because if men believe the latter, the true source of Spiritual manifestations would at once be discovered, and men would turn to the Lord and "seek for glory and honor and immortality" in the way pointed out; i. e., "by patient continuance in well doing." According to the Bible, there is no other way to obtain it. The devil and his angels wish to make us believe that we cannot die, hence we need not go to Christ to obtain eternal life. [illegible]

Our Conference.

Before giving an account of the Conference, we will speak of the interest manifested in our meetings for some weeks past. The Lord has truly been in our midst, and the work is still progressing in power. Several backsliders have been reclaimed, and sinners have been converted, who are now rejoicing in the blessed hope. We are astonished at what we see and hear. Those who have been slumbering for years, in an indifferent state, are now wide awake, and actively engaged in the christian warfare, exhorting sinners to come to Christ. It has been many years since we have seen such interest among our brethren and sisters. We think they have not stood where they now do within fourteen years. We can truly say glory to God in the highest for what he is doing for us in Boston. Bro. Munger is still with us and laboring effectually in the vineyard of the Lord.

The Conference commenced on Tuesday evening, March 16th; preaching by Bro. W. S. Campbell, of New Britain, Ct. The audience listened with interest while the plan of salvation was explained, and the importance of making our calling and election sure, enforced. Some requested prayers at the close of the meeting.

Wednesday, A. M. We met at 10 o'clock for a prayer and conference meeting, and were much blessed by the good Lord, while many testified of what the Lord has done for them recently, as well as in time past. We felt satisfied that Jesus was smiling upon us. Several requested prayers. In the afternoon we listened to a very instructive and practical discourse on faith, from Bro. J. Howell, from Ct. We hope it will not be soon forgotten. The evening was pleasantly spent in listening to the experience and exhortations of those who love the Lord. Several requested prayers.

Thursday, A. M. Our social meeting this morning was one of uncommon interest. A large number testified to the reality of the christian religion, and the great enjoyment afforded to its possessor. The testimony of some who have been recently converted in North Street (the Five Points of Boston) was thrilling and calculated to awaken the most stupid, and encourage the most degraded to hope. The fountains of our hearts were broken up, and the waters streamed from many eyes. Impenitent men and women, and the backslidden, trembled before the Lord, and some fifteen came forward for prayers, and were blessed. It has been our privilege to enjoy but few such meetings while we have been on pilgrimage. It is astonishing to see what the Lord is doing in our midst, and all around us. Preachers and devoted christians from other churches join with us in urging forward this great work, which is confined to no particular sect or locality. We feel that we are one in Christ Jesus. We would that all of our dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, were present to enjoy this feast with us.

Thursday, P. M. Bro. H. L. Hastings, from Rochester, N. Y., preached a very heart-searching and interesting sermon upon salvation, showing the necessity of entire consecration to God, in order to be accepted by the Lord, and that, even then, the righteous will only "scarcely be saved;" and if so, "where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" Those who heard, felt the importance of giving all to Christ, and consenting to be saved by grace alone. Several came forward for prayers at the close of the discourse. Great solemnity rested upon the minds of the people.

Thursday evening, we listened to an interesting discourse from Bro. S. G. Mathewson, Bakerville, Ct., showing the plan of salvation through Christ, and the greatness of this salvation. A good number requested prayers, and took a decided position for the Lord and his truth, determined to know by happy experience the full meaning of salvation through Jesus.

Friday, A. M. We had another delightful conference meeting. Some very interesting remarks were made by Bro. and Sr. Merriam, Sr. Hastings, Bro. Burnham and others, on the present aspect of things, as connected with the consummation of our hope. It seems to be deeply impressed upon the minds of many, that the great revival now in progress throughout our land, and in Europe, is the last before the coming of Christ. We learn that christian men and women in other denominations are coming to the same conclusion. As was remarked by several, this work looks like fulfilling the Scripture,—"Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in." We have never seen christians so anxious to help the [illegible] and women, as now. We had some very interesting testimonies from this class of people, who are truly like the returned from the swine feeding. The revival is going on in great power. We have never witnessed one that appeared more like the Lord's work, than the present. Such love and union among all christians, and anxiety for those out of Christ, most clearly show that the Holy Spirit is operating powerfully upon the minds of his children.

At the close of the morning meeting twelve came forward for prayers, and most were blessed. Some of them were professors of religion, who went away rejoicing in the Lord.

For the Crisis.

Watch!

"If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; . . . that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 4: 11.

Bro. Grant:—As I have not yet expressed my mind as freely as I desire to on the subject of "watching," and to my knowledge it has not been heretofore presented, I think, in its true light, I feel it duty to express myself more fully on this point. The Savior, after giving the signs of his second coming tells us that when we have seen them all, to "to know that his coming is near even at the doors," the same as we know that summer is nigh when we see the fig-tree put forth its leaves. He then says; "verily I say unto you, that this generation (i. e., the one that sees all the signs) shall not pass away till all (my coming) be fulfilled." "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." He tells us what we may know—viz., that when we see all the signs, that his coming is near even at the doors, and that the "generation" which has seen them all shall not pass till his coming be fulfilled. It seems that he has now given us all the information that he could about our knowing the time; "But of that day, and that hour, knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven; neither the Son, but the Father." Which may mean that we shall not know what time in the generation he will come. For if we can know nearer than what is told us, it would seem that we could teach Master if he were here. But says one, he has had a new revelation since he gave us the signs, and the time may be definitely revealed in that. We ought not to be so unwise as to suppose that Jesus has contradicted himself, which would be the case, if he has revealed the "definite time" since he gave us the signs. For when he gave us the signs, he told us to "take heed; watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is," (that is no more definite than what I have already revealed it.) And if any of his doctrine applies to those who are to be living at the expiration of his signs, certainly this does, as all must admit.

Then we may take the whole force of this, as though he was personally here, and said: "Take heed, watch and pray: (why?) for ye know not when the time is." "Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away." I believe it! Will his word fail? No, never! Shall we know the time before he comes? He saith, ye know not when the time is! Who does this apply to? To those that have seen his signs and are to be living when he comes.

But says one, ye are to watch and ascertain when the "definite time" is when he will come. Let us hear what the great Teacher says in regard to this matter. "But of that day, and that hour, knoweth no man, no, not the angels, which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Mark 13: 22. Is not this true to-day? Will it not be true till he comes and fulfills it? If it is not true to-day, when did it fail? Or when was it ever true? Or when was it ever fulfilled?—Verse 32,—"Take heed, watch and pray: (why?) for ye know not when the time is." Why cannot we know when the time is, Master? Verse 34,—"For the Son of Man is as a man taking a journey, who left his house and gave authority to his servants and to every man his work; and commanded the porter to watch." Verses 35, 36. "Watch ye, therefore." How? Do as the porter was commanded to do. What was that? to ascertain the "definite time" of his master's return? No. What then? It was to be in readiness to receive him at any time. Why? For ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning; lest coming suddenly he find you (not ready to receive him) sleeping."

Again, Luke 12: 39, "And this know, [illegible]

known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to have been broken through." Observe: If he had known, &c., he would have watched, (not to ascertain the time, for that he already knew, else he would not have watched) or done what the Lord has repeatedly told us to do; because he knew that we could not know the time, and that his coming would be in an "hour" that "we think not." The next verse shows that the idea of watching to ascertain the time, is not a proper exposition of the word as it is here used by our Lord. But it clearly shows that the implication of the word (watch) is to be in readiness for the event, not knowing the time. For it says: "Be ye therefore ready also." How? Just as the good man of the house would have been, if he had known the time, or the hour that the thief would have come: "for the Son of Man cometh in an hour when ye think not." It would not benefit a man merely to know the hour of the thief's approach, if he did not prepare to save his goods. Neither would it benefit us to know the time of the advent if we are not prepared for the event when it comes. But says one, let a man know the time and he will be ready! Doubtless he would try to be whether he had any principle to love or serve God, or not. Let the time pass, as has been the case, and it will show whether his pretensions are of a genuine character or not.

I know that there is nothing that would enrapture the soul of a poor, sorrowing, sighing, and weary pilgrim, like knowing the definite time when he would arrive home. And it seems to me if he knew the "definite time" when the lovely and glorious form of the Son of God, and all the angelic host, and shining retinue of heaven were to descend; that dreary earth could not contain him long! It seems to me he would almost rise and go up, he would be so enraptured at the thought! But God has in wisdom ordained, I believe, that we should not know the "definite time" of the advent. Therefore none but those who love and serve him, from a true Abrahamic principle, will be likely to be found ready. A person may desire to ascertain and know when the Lord will actually come, from a selfish motive, and not desire or love his appearing. Thus we see that there is quite a vast difference in watching time, or watching for the Lord, and desiring to know when he will come,—from being in readiness for his coming and loving his appearing. There are some professed Adventists that do not make much stir about religion, only when there is an excitement at a certain point of time. And when the time fails, they fail with it. May the good Lord deliver us from such a selfish principle, and grant us the true old Patriarchic principle,—who "saw the promises afar off, and embraced them, and confessed that they were pilgrims on the earth."

I do not believe it is giving meat in due season, to tell men, we shall know the time. But on the contrary I believe it will be meat in due season to tell them that we have doubtless already reached the last generation, and that the Lord's coming is nigh at hand, "even at the doors," and that we should be ready every moment, "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Says the Savior, Matt. 24: 45, 46,—"Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season." "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." I ask; is it speaking as the oracles of God, and giving meat in due season to the household, to tell them that the time will be known, we shall yet have the time, when Jesus has said plainly, and positively, that "ye know not when the time is?" And has repeatedly said; "of that day and hour knoweth no man," and that his coming will be in an hour that we think not." People go to sleep on such a doctrine, with apparently as little care and concern, but that they shall be ready, as a man would that is going a journey, and places himself under a watch or servant who is to give the alarm and wake him in season to take the train or boat. Such a doctrine, I believe, emboldens to lay down the "armor." The natural tendency of it is to lull the people to sleep. Instead of its exciting to vigilance and close walking before God, it makes people heedless, careless, unwatchful, and fosters the spirit of self indulgence and fleshly gratification. And it is to be feared that some will be emboldened under its influence to indulge in eating and drinking with the drunken, [illegible] draw on a sober face and so be ready!—But the Lord of such a servant will "come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and cut him asunder, and appoint him a place with the hypocrite."

I hope all will take their Bibles in hand, and look this subject right square in the face, and decide in favor that Jesus told the truth, when he said, "Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is." And believe that his word hath not failed—and will not pass away till every jot and tittle be fulfilled; and not be lulled to sleep by any peace and safty doctrine, to not awake until the trump of God awakes them, and find themselves in readiness to meet the Bridegroom. If you want to get people to delay to seek and get a preparation to meet the Bridegroom, tell them we shall yet know the time of his arrival. But if you would have them ready, tell them Jesus said; "when ye see all these things (signs of my coming) come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand; verily I say unto you, this generation, the one that sees all these signs) shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled." "But of that day and hour (in this generation) knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven, nor the Son, but the Father." "Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is (that is no more definite than what I have here revealed it.) Luke 12: 37, 38 says, "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching:" (not to ascertain the time, but ready to receive him, for I have shown that a person might desire to know when the Lord would actually come, and not be ready to receive him. Consequently such would not be called blessed.) "Verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself and make them sit down to meat, and will come and serve them." "And if he shall come in the second watch, or in the third watch, (this shows that we shall not know the definite time) and find them so, blessed are those servants."

Dear brethren and sisters, it is having readiness for that event that will give us an admittance into the kingdom of God when it comes. Let us therefore strive now with all our might to enter in when it comes; for many will seek to enter in and shall not be able!

For the Crisis.

"Two Immutable Things."

THE CHARACTERISTIC OF GOD'S PROMISE [illegible] BLESSING.

"We desire that every one of you do show the same diligence, to the full assurance of hope unto the end. . . For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater he sware by himself, saying, surely, blessing I will bless thee. . . Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." Heb. 6: 11–20.

We are exhorted to give all diligence to follow "the heirs of promise," because God has given us the firmest ground for faith. He has condescended to our form of speech for the sake of inspiring confidence, and justifying the fullest "assurance of hope unto the end."

I.—The sum of Revelation was given in the form of promised blessings,—blessings unfailing, abounding, and everlasting. The whole covenant of promise attracts, encourages and constrains us to love—to obedience and to co-operation.

II.—The Promised One—the Life-Giver and Redeemer—embraced in the covenant oath—came, "not to condemn the world but that the world through him might be saved." John 3: 16–17.

His coming was heralded by angels singing, "Glory to God in the highest, peace upon earth and good will to men." His "goings" on earth were in "grace and truth." He was "the Promise" personified—the promise performed, (so far as then due.) He dispensed life, light, sight, hearing, and strength! None could sicken, hunger or die in his presence, for the sick were healed, the hungry fed, and the dead revived. He did "all things well"—all "according to promise."

He was the living One of Promise [illegible] life then living [illegible] among men. [illegible]

Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory!"

III. "The Spirit," given on his ascension, was to abide in "the heirs of promise" and sustain their testimony to his most gracious promise, as yet to be completely consummated; for "He will send Jesus, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things." Then all things in the world to come will be subject unto him. Heb. 2: 5–9. His enemies shall be clothed with shame—the oppressor shall be broke in pieces; but upon himself shall his crown flourish. Men shall be blessed in him; "all nations shall call him blessed."

THE LORD WILL COME again the second time, to SALVATION. To this end—to salvation—was the oath confirmed—the promise given. To this end was the child born and the Son of God given, namely, to salvation. Nay, all that has been done "to perform the promise made to the fathers" has had the same blessed end in view. But the crowning consummation of all this gospel, preached before Abraham, remains to grace this triumphant REIGN! This promised One is "the Desire of nations"—the King who "shall reign in righteousness, and execute justice and judgment in the earth. "In his days shall the righteous flourish and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." All nations shall serve him for he shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper." Amen.

THE CURSE is incidental to the great ends of God's promised grace. The promise has ever occupied the foreground of Revelation. Thus it was in the gospel of God to Abraham. Thus it was in the promise, personified and exemplified in Jesus—the seed promised.

THE JUDGMENT, or Nimrod's Babel (the city counter to that seen in the promise,)—or Old Babylon, counter to Jerusalem,—or "Mystic Babylon the Great," the city of Anti-Christ and the old serpent,—is to restrain and put down evil, in order to establish the earth in blessing. Babylon falls; but "the bride" then appears. "O give thanks to the Lord for his mercy endureth forever. Who overthrew Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea; for his mercy endureth forever." Amen. Rev. 19: 1–6; Ps. 136; 1 Chron. 16: 30–34.

Let all know that they have as good cause to object to God's promise of blessing to Abraham, his seed, and the "all nations," as they have to Christ's coming "the second time to salvation." Sinner, repent! Believe, rejoice! Lord Jesus, come quickly! Amen. J. B. ——

An Appeal to the Church.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I am constrained to appeal to you again in behalf of Bro. Moulton. He has received some help from the church, for which he feels grateful; but he is still dependent upon the church, or he must suffer for the comforts of life. He has been sick for about three months, and, to all outward appearance, he must soon sleep in the dust; but his faith is that the Lord will raise him up again as soon as he has been tried sufficiently. Now, dear brethren, do not forget him; while you have the comforts of life, think of your afflicted brother in Christ, and remember that inasmuch as you do it unto one of these you do it unto Christ.

Direct your letters to D. E. Moulton, Ware, Mass. J. HEMENWAY.

From Bro. G. W. Denney.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I rejoice to learn by the last "Crisis" that Bro. Edwin Burnham is so free of sectarianism that he can labor in the churches, and that God blesses him in so doing. Paul became every thing to all men so that he might save some of them; that is, he adapted himself to their condition. May it not be true that we have too much sectarianism among us. I rejoice to see that the Lord is at work almost everywhere pouring out his Spirit upon the world; from every quarter comes the news of revivals upon revivals. All the newspapers are bringing the glad news from all quarters. The Lord seems to be doing up his last work and cutting it short in righteousness. I believe it is the last call to this wicked world to repent, and when this interesting season of saving souls is over, then I think the Lord will come. There is a great field here to do good. The Lord is converting sinners in the churches. Some seventy-five or a hundred are converted among the different denominations. There is a union prayer meeting daily in the Institute Hall. [illegible] ing for the conversion of this wicked city, and the work increases. The little advent church are praying for the Lord to send us a man of God to labor with us in saving men. Men will hear now. Their minds are more susceptible to truth.

Dear brethren and sisters everywhere, now is the time to work. I feel like working. I must work. I love to work. I will work. Let us all go to work, anywhere, everywhere. We can, if it is among the churches. If we are the means of saving souls there, the reward will be just as certain. They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as stars forever and ever.

Yours truly,
G. W. DENNEY.

A Mere Excuse.

A gentleman who had beeen active in aiding a mission by collection, was met the following day by one of different habits, who chided him for the folly of which he deemed him guilty, in giving to such an object, and in such profusion. It was folly, he said, to be sending heaps of money abroad to be spent, no one knew how, while there were so many unemployed starving poor at home.

"I will give five dollars to the poor, if you will give an equal sum," said the Christian friend.

"I did not mean that," replied the objecter, "but if you must go from home, why go so far? Think of the miserable poor of Ireland."

"I will give five dollars to the poor of Ireland, if you will do the same."

"I did not mean that either," was the reply.

So it is neither this nor that which this class of objectors exactly mean, but simply to veil their covetousness by blaming the proceedings of liberal men, whom, if they could not condemn, they must for very shame in some degree imitate.—Ex.

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

(Concluded.)

Mr. Fowler continues his remarks upon the moral tendency of tobacco, and says:—

"The influence of tobacco upon amativeness is powerful, and powerfully vitiating. No man can be virtuous as a companion who eats tobacco: for, although he may not violate the seventh commandment, yet the feverish state of the system which it produces necessarily causes a craving and lustful exercise of amativeness. Just as alcoholic liquors cause such amatory cravings, and for the same reason. As alcoholic liquors and the grosser forms of sensuality are twin sisters, so tobacco-eating and deviltry are both one; because the fierce passions of many tobacco chewers, as regards the other sex, are immensely increased by the fire kindled in their systems, and of course in their cerebellums, by tobacco excitement. Ye who would be pure in your love-instinct, cast this sensualizing fire from you. In fact, its perverting influence upon the entire mentality accords with the love-illustration just given. Mark the point! It corrupts and depraves the body, and through it sensualizes and sinfulizes all the faculties of our being; for moral depravity consists, not in the excessive exercise of our faculties, but merely in their perverted action. The constitutional effect of tobacco is to pervert and vitiate the entire being, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, in all the ramifications of mind and functions of body.

The inquiry next turns upon the best mode of breaking off a practice thus constitutionally filthy, destructive to health, and debasing to morals. There is but one way, and that is, to resolve resolutely to quit at once and forever.. To break off gradually, is only to tamper with the scorpion, and be stung more deeply thereby. Cut off the snake's HEAD! "But I cant," you reply. What! Can't stop, when you know that you are perpetrating such wide-spread destruction upon mind and body? Are you such a slave to a low-lived, disgusting passion, and can't give it up? Are you so pitiably weak, and own it at that? Then no more call yourself a man! Own it, aye, that your masculine energy is not sufficient to free you from your groveling passions. Own, that though you know you are doing wrong, you can't stop! Then own up, and done with it, that you are a poor, weak thing; that your manhood is emasculated, and your morals subjected. But you can break off. This one motive alone, if you will allow it its due consideration, will compel you to stop—the ravages you are perpetrating upon your body and soul. You have a conscience, and you are bound, by the highest obligations of your being, to follow its dictates. And that conscience warns you never to put another quid or another cigar into your mouth, because you thereby do violence to so exalted, so God-created and godlike a being as yourself. Think you no more of yourselves, no more of your moral purity, here or hereafter, than to defile and debase yourselves thus! Rise at once, O sunken mortal, in the high-toned dignity of moral principles. Put the foot of moral determination upon the head of the serpent passion, and cast him out forever from you, and in a few days your triumph will be achieved. Do not break off in part only, nor allow the lurking idea that if you can't do without it you can return to it, for such lurking will prevent the achievement of your object; but resolve, be the consequences what they may, to break off FOREVER; for the harder it is to break off the more you require to, because the more you crave it the greater the injury it has done and is doing you. BREAK off, and all the gold of California could not bless you as much as that single decision and practice. In a few days you will get habituated to do without it, and in a few weeks you will be a newly organized man—not in your physiology merely, but in your whole tone of feelings and cast of mind. A pure, virtuous, elevated, holy, aspiring state of mind will take the place of that corrupt, debased cast of your faculties which tobacco has produced, and your progress in all that is good or great will be tenfold more rapid than it now is. By all the value you place upon yourself, then; by all the solemnity of the laws of your being; by all the authority of the direct command from God, not to do violence to body or mind; you are thereby imperatively COMMANDED to ABSTAIN, AT ONCE AND FOREVER, from this body-destroying, soul-vitiating narcotic, in all its forms.

We now ask in conclusion, can we possibly use the poisonous weed—tobacco, to the glory of God, when it is producing such disastrous effects upon our physical, mental, and moral nature? Many have abandoned the use of tea, coffee, and tobacco, and are experiencing the most happy results. We feel like prisoners set free, or slaves loosed from bondage. We hope all of our readers will adopt the following pledge, and enjoy the consequent blessings.

OUR TEMPERANCE PLEDGE.

The undersigned solemnly pledge themselves, by the help of the Lord, to abstain from the use of tobacco; also, from tea, coffee, and all intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival in Boston and Elsewhere.

FROM THE BOSTON JOURNAL.

The religious interest in this city, to which we alluded at length last Saturday, and to which we have made frequent reference during the week, still continues. We have taken some pains to inquire among those who are so situated as to be well informed on the subject, and the impression is that the work in this city has not only extended over a wider surface during the present week, but that it has taken a deeper hold upon the hearts of Christians; causing them to feel more their dependence upon God to carry on the work, at the same time they feel the obligation resting upon them to be earnest laborers in the cause of the impenitent. There is the same earnest spirit of prayer of which we spoke last week; and that manifest feeling that the work is to go on more powerfully than it has yet progressed. Perhaps the most marked feature of the interest in the city during the week, has been its diffusive influence, by which it has extended from the large gatherings to the individual churches, and over many hitherto unreached by it. The members of the churches have felt more deeply that each must labor in the field where he is located. In many, perhaps most of the evangelical churches in the city, the evening meetings have been increased, and have been attended by large numbers. Another feature of the work is the increasing number of inquirers. One of the pastors who is heartily engaged in this work says it is not too strong to say that they are coming forward daily, by scores, and the cases of conversion are very numerous. Some of them are of a very interesting nature; showing the willingness of God to hear and answer special prayer.

During the week another new meeting has been started in what is known as Father Mason's Hall in North street, formerly Ann street. This hall was formerly a dance hall—one of the most disreputable places in the street—the scene of everything that was vile and wicked. These labors have been blessed. Four men, who were poor miserable drunkards, have become temperance men, and three of them are believed to be humble, praying Christians. Some of the abandoned women who infest that locality have come in and with tearful eyes and apparently penitent hearts, have knelt and besought the pardon of their sins—and in some cases there have been evidences of a complete reformation.

The New York Independent says that besides the many public prayer meetings, numerous meetings are held in various parts of the city in dwellings and stores, attended by small circles of friends or clerks who meet daily, or two or three times a week, for religious conversation and prayer. In some of the largest establishments on Broadway, many of the employees, at a stated hour, retire to a secluded room for this purpose, and many delightful and profitable meetings have thus been held. Prayer meetings are held also on board some of the ships in the harbor. Special religious meetings have been held on board the United States frigate North Carolina, lying at the Navy Yard. It is gratifying to know [illegible] temporarily in port. The work here, although it has spread rapidly from church to church, has not taken the character of impetuosity or excitement, but of a moderate, well regulated enthusiasm; and this fact, perhaps, furnishes a hope that the revival may be of long continuance, and that its power may be still more deeply and widely felt, not only in this city but in all parts of the country. It does not seem to be short-lived anywhere, but on the contrary the churches that were most early blessed are still among those that are most revived. The fires that were first kindled are still burning bright as ever.

In Newburyport, Mass., one of the places where the interest first manifested itself, it still continues with increasing power, and seems to be reaching classes who have heretofore been thought to be beyond the reach of such influences. The Herald of Thursday says—"We learn that the revival is yet spreading in different families and different sections of the city. Many of the converts brought out within a week or two past are among that class whose energy and influence are felt throughout society." The Herald says of the revival with much truth—"Judged as a human affair it would be wholly unaccountable; for there appears no reason upon the surface of things why this revival should break out at the same time in diverse communities scattered over thousands of miles of territory from Maine to the west of the Mississippi; nor can we see the means by which it could be continued from month to month.

The Christian Era gives an account of a very remarkable conversion of a gambler at Uxbridge. "While sitting at the table with the cards in his hands, he was smitten almost like Saul of Tarsus. He could neither hold his cards, nor play the game. His companions urged him to take another glass of liquor to quiet his nerves. He refused; and, leaving them at their games, he started at once for home," and found no peace until he felt an inward evidence of forgiveness.

The Philadelphia Inquirer says: "The all-pervading religious movement gains strength day after day. Its spirit affects all ranks of society, and the groups and masses of worshippers assembled at noonday and at evening are truly astonishing. Special services are held in many churches; four or five congregations unite in prayer meetings, and invocations to the Most High go up daily. Never, perhaps, in this city were the eternal themes of Heaven and Immortality upon so many tongues" One of the noon prayer meetings in Philadelphia is attended daily by from 2000 to 3000 persons.

Obituary.

Fell sweetly asleep, looking unto Jesus, William Ramsey, D. D., at his residence in Philadelphia, Jan. 26th, 1858, aged 55 years.

He was born at Thompsontown, Pa., Feb. 11th, 1803. The child of pious parents, of whom he was early bereft, his mother dying when he was four years old and commending him to the care of a covenant-keeping God with her dying breath. Three years later his father laid his dying hand upon his head and blessed him, assuring him that when father and mother forsook him then the Lord would take him up. God cared for him; he was religiously educated. In 1815 he commenced the study of languages—entered Princeton College in 1819, was converted in 1820, graduated in 1821, entered the Theological Seminary in 1821, graduated in 1826, and commenced preaching in Southwark. In August, 1830, he set sail for Bombay as a missionary. In June, 1834, he buried his wife and infant son, and on account of his health returned to this country in January, 1835. He acted as agent for the missionary board one year; then labored for six months as a missionary in a little church near the Schuylkill, and was called, Jan. 1st, 1837, to the pastorate of the Cedar Street Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia.

About fourteen months his health began to fail; he visited the Floridas and the interior of Pennsylvania, but his efforts in pursuit of health were vain, and at length he returned home. His health continued to fail, and so with the twenty-third Psalm on his lips he went down amid the shadows of the dark valley and feared no evil while comforted by the rod and staff of the good Shepherd of Israel. Committing his family to the care of the same God who had ever cared for him, and who feeds the ravens and the sparrows, he uttered his last words that had been often on his lips, "Jesus is precious, Christ is precious, precious." So he leaned his head on Jesus' breast and breathed his life out sweetly there. Without a single struggle "he fell asleep."

For more than twenty years he had been waiting for the consolation of Israel, and looking for the blessed hope of Christ's glorious appearing. His sleep will be brief—the morning cometh.

As a man, and a christian and a scholar, his equals are too rare. His acquirements were extensive. As a linguist he excelled, being acquainted with some twenty languages. As a deep student of the original scriptures he was rivalled by few. As a writer he was clear and forcible. As a preacher, earnest, zealous and successful—it being estimated that two thousand souls were led to Christ through his ministrations. As a rebuker of sin and pride he was too bold to be popular, as one may see from his "Church Debts." But he did the work he undertook and made his mark on those around. He did his own thinking and kept his own conscience.

He has gone. We hope to meet him soon, when the prophecies that he loved to study shall be fulfilled, and when he, tireless as an angel, shall bear the palm of victory before the throne of glory, and sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. God bless the weary ones who mourn his loss! May they see light amid the shades of the dark valley and behold him at last in the brightness of God's excellent glory.

"Where fears of parting chill Never, no never."

Foreign News.

ARRIVAL OF THE NORTH AMERICAN FROM LIVERPOOL, March 3d.—News unimportant.

INDIA.

The Bombay mail, with a week's later news, arrived at Suez on the 23d February.

The Times' Malta correspondent telegraphs: "The Commander-in-Chief was at Futtyghur, preparing for an invasion of Oude, which would probably be from several points, about 25th of January. His own column is nearly 15,000 strong, with about 100 pieces of ordnance; while at least 10,000 men from other points will be ready to co-operate with him.

Sir Hugh Rose has defeated the rebels at Banda.

The Rajpootana field force, after capturing the strong fortress of Awah, marched on for Cotah, where disunion reigns.

Delhi has been placed under the authority of the Punjaub Commissioners, the authority of the civil power restored, and the army declared broken up.

Large reinforcements of Eupopean troops are still required.

At Bombay trade was improving. Freights had advanced. All public securities were advancing.

The Governor General was on his way to the Northwest Province.

The government dispatch says the enemy were fortifying Lucknow with great strength. There are about 100,000 of them in arms. They are said to be losing heart, and anxious to negotiate.

Sir James Outram had been left undisturbed since the 16th. He was reinforced on the 22d by the 34th Regiment from Cawnpore, with a convoy of stores.

A party of rifles had taken up a post on Lucknow road, on a march from Cawnpore, to keep open communication. Cultivators are busily employed everywhere with the winter crops, and the revenue was being collected in the district around Delhi, as if nothing had happened.

A dispatch to the India Company says advices of the 22d of January state that Gen. Outram had been again assailed, and an attack by the whole rebel force in Lucknow was daily expected. Reinforcements had been sent to Gen. Outram at Alumbagh.

Nothing later from China.

ITALY.

Arrests continued to be made in Genoa, through fear of a Republican plot. The troops were confined to the barracks, and held ready for immediate action.

A man-of-war had taken up a position opposite the Republican suburb of the town, with shotted guns.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUPOPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARABIA.

NEW YORK, March 20.

The Royal Mail steamship Arabia, Capt. Stone, which sailed from Liverpool at about noon on March 6th, arrived at her dock at half-past 9 this morning.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The partizans of the constitutional party in Italy had been holding a conference from day to day in London, for the purpose of bringing more prominently before the public the present condition of Italy, and to endeavor to revive the agitation for a national league of a confederation of States subject to the direction of a central power. It was resolved to prepare an address to the powers of Europe, setting forth the claims of Italy to have her wants considered.

LIFE'S TEACHINGS.

'Tis not from bleeding hearts alone
Nor from the burning eyes,
That can ascend to heaven's throne
A pleasing sacrifice;
The incense of a smile may be
An offering meet for Deity;
And words of faith, trustful and calm,
May be as sweet as chanted psalm.

We all must taste life's bitterness,
Its pain we must endure;
Yet God will not forget to bless,
His mercy still is sure.
With kindly hand he leads us on Until our heavenly rest is won,—
Our way-side trials are but sent
To make us patient and content.

We trust too much to earthly good
To fill our hearts with bliss;
Life's lessons if but understood
Would be akin to this;
For wrongs the great seek no redress,
But bear them still with cheerfulness,
Make others' happiness their own,
And rest their hope on God alone.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts on Matt. 25: 46.

"These shall go away into everlasting punishment but the righteous into life eternal."

This solemn declaration of "the faithful Witness" of the truth, is considered by many of our christian brethren as necessarily involving the eternal conscious existence of the wicked. We may observe,

First. If the term punishment necessarily imports conscious suffering, the term everlasting is often used in a limited sense in the Sacred Scriptures. It is used in the same verse in Hab. 3: 6 in a limited and unlimited sense.

Secondly. Punishment does not consist in conscious misery only, it consists in loss or privation. The greater part of the punishments which parents inflict on their children are of the latter character. Is it said, that they are conscious of this loss or privation? Suppose a boy of musical ear loses being present at a concert, as a punishment for bad conduct, and is sent to bed and goes fast to sleep. Here is a real loss without consciousness during this period.

Thirdly. It is admitted that the term everlasting in this passage, applied to the punishment of the wicked, is of the same unlimited import as when applied to the life of the righteous; i. e., strictly endless, but the question remains to be considered; What is the punishment? To answer this important question correctly, we must consider,

First. What is the revealed penalty of the divine law, threatened to transgressors? Is it eternal life in misery? No. It is DEATH. "The wages of sin is DEATH: but the gift of God is ETERNAL LIFE, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. Mark the contrast here. It is not eternal life or existence, in different conditions, but life and death. "The soul that sinneth it shall DIE," not live forever in a particular state or condition. The wicked are said to be "worthy of death." Now, if "the wages," or just desert, of sin "is death," a punishment of eternal existence in excruciating torments must be more than justice requires.

Secondly, we must consider the plain declarations of the word of the Lord relative to this punishment. They "shall be punished with (what? eternal life in misery?) everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess. 1: 9. Here is a plain statement of what the punishment will be; i. e., a destruction of persons, not of their happiness merely. A destruction "in flaming fire" issuing from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power, as in the case of the sons of Aaron. Lev. 10: 2. Now, as the punishment is plainly declared to be a destruction of persons, and the destruction is declared to be "everlasting;" how can any one deny that this is strictly everlasting punishment?

Our blessed Lord confirms this doctrine. What did he teach impenitent men to fear? Did he teach them to fear him who hath power to hold them in interminable torment? He taught them to "fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell," (gehenna.) Nor is the divine [illegible] that God is able to destroy. It is plain and positive that he [illegible] the incorrigible wicked, as [illegible] 1: 9, which we have considered, [illegible] also Ps. 145: 20.—"All [illegible] (God) destroy." [illegible]

If they were to exist forever they would have no end. See also Ps. 92: 7, which declares that they shall be destroyed forever. 1 Cor. 3: 17; Rom. 9: 22; Ps. 73: 17; Matt. 7: 13; Rev. 11: 18; Prov. 1: 27, &c. The loss of life eternal in the enjoyment of the blessed God, is a punishment beyond human estimation. Other terms, employed by our blessed Lord, and his prophets and apostles, relative to this awful subject, are in perfect accordance with this utter and eternal destruction. The "unquenchable fire" is to "burn up" the chaff or tares, which "are the children of the wicked one." The worm which dieth not, is to utterly "devour." Heb. 10: 27. The destroying fire "shall leave them neither root nor branch." "They shall be ashes." Mal. 4: 1–3. The terms "perish" and "corruption" import the same. So "the second death," which the common sentiment excludes from the book of God.

Whence now, I ask, comes the opposition to this plain, abundant testimony of the eternal Spirit? I reply, it comes from the unwarranted assumption that every human being possesses naturally an immortal soul or spirit, which can never die; notwithstanding God has said, "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." In perfect accordance with this declaration, not a single passage is found in the Bible declaring man, on the general, to be immortal. On the contrary, man is declared to be mortal. Job 4: 17. Immortality is clearly represented in the Sacred Scriptures as an object not already secured, but to be sought for by faith in Christ and "patient continuance in well doing." Rom. 2: 7.

The glorious record of the Gospel of salvation is subverted by the modern theory that all men are immortal or possess eternal life. It is the peculiar prerogative of the Son of God to impart life eternal to a guilty world, condemned to everlasting death. "This is the record that God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is IN HIS SON." He that hath the Son hath LIFE; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John 5: 11, 12. Jesus said, "I am the — LIFE." John 14: 6. "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life." John 5: 40. If men are immortal by nature, they need not to come to Christ for life. Nor is there any authority for affirming that life means happiness. Life is contrasted with death. God sets LIFE and DEATH before a guilty world, mercifully exhorting us to choose life that we may live. O that all would obey the heavenly mandate, "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye DIE?"

For the Crisis.

It Hasteth Greatly!

"The great day of the Lord is near, and it hasteth greatly." "Who shall abide the day of his (Christ's) coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?"

These are solemn questions, and but few out of the great mass think of them as they ought; and to them these words have become almost an old story, the few can scarcely be made to believe and realize that the long desired time, when ZION'S King will appear in his glory, is about to shine on this dark world.

I see that some are agitating the question of time again, and say that this spring all the prophetic periods end, and our Lord will come. I have never looked to the spring for the event to take place, but the fall; and I think that Father's children will have to pass through more than they have, perhaps will be glad to cry day and night for deliverance. I would not raise my voice against the time, for I believe the vision will speak out the truth on the time. God has revealed the time, and the WISE (some at least) may understand. The desire of my heart is—"Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." There is no hope for fallen man, nor this groaning creation, this side of the coming of the Just One.

But does the word of the Lord furnish an answer to the question asked? Let us see. "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? (Mount Zion,) or who shall stand in his holy place? (Zion.) He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessings from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation." Ps. 24: 3–5.

Again, the question is answered in Ps. 15. "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? [illegible] his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved." They shall not be moved from this earth, for the meek are to inherit the earth. The pure in heart shall see God. See also Isa. 33: 15–17.

The path of the christian is made plain, but it is so straight and so narrow, that few are small enough to walk in it. If we realize that we are but dust, and humble ourselves in the dust, we shall have no desire to keep up with the SWELLS of this fast age, but rather choose the society of the poor of this world, who are rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. Some feel very much exalted in their hopes and expectations when an earthly friend bequeathes to them some portion of this sin-cursed earth for a brief period. But what is that to having our Father in heaven WILLING to us the whole earth redeemed from the curse, under which it has been groaning for six thousand years, which will be incorruptible and will never pass away? Here we are pilgrims and strangers; but there we shall inherit ALL THINGS, and the best of all is that old time is about run out, and all of Father's children will soon receive their possession.

Then, fellow pilgrim, take courage, toil on, keep on the armor, fight on, the victory will soon be won. But remember that the way is very straight and narrow, and you cannot travel in it and be burthened. The disciple cannot be above his Lord.

Yours waiting for the kingdom,

Charity.

"And yet I show unto you a more excellent way."—1 Cor. 12: 31.

In the preceding verses of this chapter, we have brought to our view the different members of the body, to represent the relation we sustain to each other, as members of Christ's body. We are there also commanded to covet earnestly the best gifts, such as prophesying, tongues, healing of diseases, discerning of spirits, &c.

"And yet I show unto you a more excellent way. Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." Charity suffereth long, and is kind; is not puffed up, not easily provoked, and thinketh no evil. Some may think if we have great charity we shall countenance sin; but in the sixth verse of the thirteenth chapter we read that charity "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. . . . Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away."

We may look into the heavens and trace millions of suns with their planetary systems, and compute their distances and motions; and from there back again to our globe, and behold the breathings of every leaf; and the little world in every drop of water. Yet Paul says it shall all vanish away. "But charity never faileth."

Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face. At times we catch a glimpse of the glory of the Eternal, and oh! how it fills our souls with joy unspeakable;—but then face to face. "Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known." Now I know my brethren's sins, or righteous acts, only in part. I know not the motive by which they act; but then shall know even as also I am known. And is it not a more excellent way, to have charity, to leave all in the hands of our righteous Judge? Let us have fervent charity among ourselves.

BRO. M. STUART writes from Burke, N. Y.:—"Myself and wife went to Massena, this winter, to hear Bro. M. Batchelor, and we had a feast of fat things indeed, as we listened to the gospel of the Kingdom from that man of God. He preaches a whole Gospel, the whole truth. God does [illegible] and will bless his own truth, praise the Lord.

I thank the Lord and the brethren for the kind reception that we met. Truly we felt that we were in our Father's family, among his dear children. And, as we went from house to house, we could say from the heart, behold how these brethren love one another. I hope to meet that dear people in the kingdom, and that soon. Yes, brethren, it is just ahead; it will soon heave in sight; soon we shall see the King in his beauty, and he will bring his reward with him. His voice will break the silence of the tomb,—'Come, ye blessed of my Father!'

'Oh how joyful then to hear him,
While all nations shall revere him,
Saying to his flock who fear him,
I have come on earth to reign.'"

Letters

TO MY UNCONVERTED FRIENDS.

NUMBER ONE.

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—Do not think me your enemy, because I am anxious for your soul's salvation. If I should give you a hundred thousand dollars in precious gold, you would doubtless esteem me as your friend. And now let me introduce you to a person, who is infinitely rich and lovely. One who is well qualified to teach you in all things necessary for you to know, in order for you to become infinitely rich, honorable and happy, forever and ever. That lovely being is Jesus. He is the King of kings, and Lord of lords. Do you not desire to become experimentally acquainted with this notable personage? To know him aright, is life eternal. Oh, acquaint thyself with him, and be at peace!

A true knowledge of the Lord gives perfect peace of mind. If you only heartily love God, and faithfully serve him, he will be a never-failing friend to you. Be assured, he is a friend indeed to the faithful in Christ. Do you want this Jesus for your friend? Then only repent of all your sins, and forsake them, which alone make you miserable; and he will be your friend. "He that repenteth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy; but he that covereth his sins shall not prosper." Behold the hands, and feet, and side, of the compassionate Redeemer! See the marks of his love to sinners! But what have you to point to, as marks of your love to him? What have you done for him? Nothing, but to sin against him! The Savior's love and benevolence are so high, so deep, so long, and so broad, that their dimensions cannot be computed by man! Our love to him—oh how limited! Now the Lord Jesus, who has a perfect right to command, or claim our services, is saying to each of you, my unconverted friends, "Son, give me thy heart." Now, dear friends, will you not do it without delay? Oh be entreated now, "while it is an accepted time," to give your heart to the Lord! Don't stop to try to make yourself better before you come to Jesus for pardon; if you do, you will never come at all. Come to him just as you are; only come! Repent and believe! Obey God! Your friend,

P. TANDY.

TRUTH.

"Now we've commenced another year,
We'll give to TRUTH a hearty cheer,
And try to make the banquet better,
With sermon, poetry and letter."

—VESTA.

Amen! at once my soul replies,
God grant we may, and so be WISE,
For truth is able thus to do
For all who seek her paths so true.

Blest truth is light and life and love;
'Tis a sweet spirit from above;
It cheers the faint, pours oil and wine
Into this troubled heart of mine.

Blest truth, I love her, all divine,
Nor can she ever guide us wrong.
Bind her, O Lord, about my neck
And write her name upon my heart.

By truth we learn how true is God;
Yea, more, we learn truth in his word;
And by that word we know there's rest
For all the pure, the good, the blest.

A world to come the truth hath taught,
Where scattered ones will one day meet;
And oh what meeting that must be,
In that blest, long eternity;

Where sighs and tears would cease to be,
Where love will reign eternally,
Where friend from friend shall never part,
But ever mingle heart with heart!

FROM SR. D. N. K——.

BRO. AND SIS.:—We are living in a trying and fearful time, and it requires great effort to keep awake. Often within a few months past have I thought how [illegible] of Zion's pilgrims is [illegible] by the watcher at the bedside of the sick. Till the third watch of the night they seem to move along without much fatigue or drowsiness, then it requires every effort and constant exertion to keep awake; and oh how earnestly and anxiously they wait and watch for the Morning!

Every thing plainly indicates that the Midnight has past, and likewise the third watch; and now every effort is required to keep alive to our interests in salvation and the kingdom of Christ, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping. O it seems to me that day is close upon us! Do watch and pray, Brn. and Srs.; try hard to keep awake till morning. My constant prayer is, Lord, prepare me and all thy dear children for the solemn scenes which are before us. Oh, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom!

Yours in tribulation and faith,

"THE DAWN OF DAY."

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

'Tis sweet when the twilight descends like a maiden,
With star-sandalled feet and cloud-mantle of gray;
When the skies seem with grandeur and mystery laden—
But there's nothing so sweet as the dawn of the day.

Oh, if there's an hour to man's spirit appealing,
An hour that can all his devotion repay,
'Tis when harmony, beauty and grace are revealing
Their charms at the dawn—the bright dawn of the day.

Tho' the noon, like a monarch enthroned, may assemble
His sun-banner'd hosts in their gorgeous array:
Tho' the moon may win hearts, they are hearts that dissemble,
For there's nothing so fair as the dawn of the day.

The dawn of the day, when the old man is waking,
World-weary and languid, bereft of each stay;
When he turns to a world that's immortally breaking
The God-promised dawn of a Heavenly day.

Oh, if harmony, beauty and freshness are blending,
These charms that encircle our care-compass'd way,
What joy must be theirs who with Jesus ascending,
Behold with archangels the dawn of His day.

Cheerfulness.

Among the wise things of which the name of Benjamin Franklin is worthy of honor, we noticed the following a few days ago. It contains a great deal of sound counsel: "I noticed a mechanic, among a number of others, at work in a house erected but a little way from my office, who always appeared to be in a merry humor, who had a kind word and cheerful smile for every one he met. Let the day be ever so cold, gloomy or sunless, a happy smile danced like a sunbeam on his cheerful countenance. Meeting him one morning, I asked him to tell me the secret of his constant flow of spirits. 'No secret, Doctor,' replied he. 'I have got one of the best of wives, and when I go to work she always has a kind word of encouragement for me, and when I go home she meets me with a smile, and she is sure to be ready, and she has done so many things during the day to please me that I cannot find it in my heart to be unkind to anybody.' What influence, then, hath woman over the heart of man, to soften it, and make it the fountain of cheerful and hopeful emotions. Speak gently, then; a happy smile and a kind word of greeting after the toils of the day are over, cost nothing, and go far toward making home happy and peaceful."

The true Road to Happiness.

It is a rule, we believe, that will be found to have few exceptions, that the sum total of our happiness is very nearly in the rrtio of our usefulness. "The late Noah Webster, author of the 'American Dictionary' and numerous other important works, when he came to die, in the eighty-fifth year of his age, spoke of his long life as one of uniform enjoyment, because filled up at every stage with active labor for some valuable end. It is difficult to conceive how a person can be otherwise than happy who is always engaged in a useful avocation. And it is just as difficult to imagine how one can be otherwise than unhappy whose life is spent in useless idleness or injurious dissipation.—Life Illustrated.

Covetousness.

Covetousness pretends to heap much together for fear of want; and yet after all his pains and purchase, he suffers that really which at first he feared vainly; and by not using what he gets, he makes that suffering to be actual, present, and necessary, which in his lowest condition was but future, contingent, and possible. It stirs up the desire, and takes away the pleasure of being satisfied. It increases the appetite and will not content it. It swells the principal to no purpose, and lessens the use to all purposes; disturbing the order of nature and the designs of God; making money not to be the instrument of exchange or charity, nor corn to feed himself or the poor, nor wool to clothe himself or his brother, nor wine to refresh the sadness of the afflicted, nor oil to make [illegible] these to look upon, and to tell over, and to take accounts by, and make himself considerable and wondered at by fools, that while he lives he may be called rich, and when he dies he may be accounted miserable, and, like the dish-makers of China, may leave a greater heap of dirt for his nephews, while he himself hath a new lot fallen to him in the portion of Dives.—But thus the ass carried wood and sweet herbs to the baths, but was never washed or perfumed himself: he heaped up sweets for others, while himself was filthy with smoke and ashes.—Jeremy Taylor.

The Discipline of Sorrow.

There is but one escape, one chink though which we may see light, one rock on which our feet may find standing-place, even in the abyss; and that is the belief, intuitive, inspired, due neither to reasoning nor study, that the billows are God's billows; and that though we go down to hell, he is there also; the belief that not we, but He, is educating us; that these seemingly fantastic and incoherent miseries, storm following earthquake, and earthquake fire, as if the caprice of all the demons were let loose against us, have in his mind a spiritual coherence, an organic unity and purpose (though we see it not;) that sorrows do not come singly, only because he is making short work with our spirits; and because the more effect he sees produced by one blow, the more swiftly he follows it up by another; till, in one great and varied crisis, seemingly long to us, but short enough compared with immortality, our spirits may be "Heated hot with burning fears,

And bathed in baths of hissing tears,
And battered with the strokes of doom,
To shape and use."

—Charles Kingsley.

Handel, the Composer.

Handel, being questioned as to his ideas and feelings when composing the "Hallelujah" chorus, replied in his imperfect English, "I did think I did see all heaven before me, and the great God himself." When he was composing, his excitement would rise to such a pitch that he would burst into tears. It is said that a friend, calling upon the musician when in the act of setting these pathetic words, "He was despised and rejected of men," found him absolutely sobbing. "I have heard it related," says Shield, "that when Handel's servant used to bring him his chocolate in the morning, he often stood with silent astonishment to see his master's tears mingling with the ink as he penned his divine notes." The motion of his pen, rapid as it was, could not keep up with the rapidity of his conception. His MSS. were written with such impetuosity that they are difficult to be read. The mechanical power of the hand was not sufficient for the current of ideas which flowed through that volcanic brain. Mr. V. Novello, the learned publisher, who seems to have well studied the MSS. at the Fitzwilliam Museum, seeing a page upon which the sand is still upon the ink at the top and bottom of the page, left in the book the following observation: "Observe the speed with which Handel wrote. The whole of this page is spotted with sand, and, consequently, must have all been wet at the same time."

The Work and the Way.

Ministerial gifts are not bestowed upon a slumbering, lukewarm, and worldly church. And suppose they were bestowed, of what value would they be either to you or to others, if you are surrendered up to the lusts of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life? The ministry can only labor successfully as you labor with them. If you then really desire to witness the triumph of the cause of the Redeemer, you must begin to live a holy, self-denying life. You men of wealth must cease from accumulation, and devote not only your property but yourselves to the work of the Lord. You men in business must be content to accumulate less rapidly, that you may have more of your time to consecrate to the salvation of men. Ye who, professing obedience to Christ, are yet living in subjection to the maxims of the world, eagerly chasing its frivolities, and teaching the lesson to your children, must commence a life of godly simplicity and Christian self-denial. Every disciple, by his mode of life, must show that he is not of the world even as Christ is not of the world. When ministers and people thus begin to labor in earnest for Christ, we shall witness results such as the ages have not yet seen.—Wayland.

VOLTAIRE.—Nearly a hundred years ago, Voltaire resided at Geneva. One day he said to some friends, in a boastful, sneering tone: "Before the beginning of the nineteenth century, Christianity will have disappeared from the face of the earth!" Well! in that same house, in that same room where these impious words were spoken, what think you there is to-day? A large deposit of Bibles! The sacred books fill the house from the floor to the ceiling! So much for Voltaire's prediction!

A TRIUMPH OF INFIDELITY.—A bill has been passed by the Parliament of Holland, after a nine years' struggle, proscribing the Bible and its teachings, and even the utterance of the name of Jesus in all the public schools.

Poetry.

PRAISE GOD.

BY MISS H. J. HURLBUTT.

Above my forehead, aching, white,
A little bird sang all last night,
"Praise God! Praise God!" till my room rang
With the Te Deums that he sang.

The chilly sweat steeped my pale face,
My nerves like helpless flax ablaze
Were palpitating, and I said,
"Dear bird, thou sadly art misled.

"For poet, gloriously dream-crowned,
For mother, with her arms close wound
About her helpless babe, thy sweet,
Earnest 'Praise God,' might be most meet.

"But in my flesh, dear bird, thy strain
Pierces and irritates like pain;
I praised God once, in this heart's bloom,
I trust Him now when blights consume."

But heeding not one selfish word,
All night, Christ's faithful little bird
Sang 'bove my restless head and breast,
"Praise God! Praise God!" till I found rest:

Till patience into happy faith
Ripened, and every weakening breath
Contained a hallelujah, borne
Up from my soul, abandoned, torn.

I felt the honor 'twas to bear,
In loss, in suffering, everywhere,
The seal of kinship with my Christ,
To die with him I was sufficed.

The Pilgrim's Faith and Hope.

Like Abraham of old, I sojourn in the "land of promise," as in a "strange land." Like him, I have no "continuing city" or certain "abiding place," but blessed be God, with him and a host of others, who "died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and CONFESSED ("with the mouth confession is made unto salvation,") that they were pilgrims and strangers on the earth," I look for and am journeying to "a CITY which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." And "they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country," and that "they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for him a city." There is then a country—a heavenly country—wherein will be located the CITY which God hath prepared or builded for them, and not only for them, but for all that "do his commandments," as we are informed by John the Revelator, who says, "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." What country and city can this be? Is it England, with her London on the Thames? Is it France, and her Paris? Or is it America, with her Empire City? No! it is none of these; it is a new and heavenly country—a new and holy city. Does John the Revelator tell [illegible] Let him answer, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and first earth are passed away; and there was no more sea." The country, then, that we desire and look for, is the NEW EARTH, under the new heaven, is it not? Let us hear what Peter says upon the point, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a NEW EARTH, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Daniel, the prophet, informs us, that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions (rulers) shall serve and obey him." The words of our Lord are, "The meek shall inherit the earth." And is the "holy city" to be on the new earth, the inheritance of the saints? Is it not in heaven? and are not the saints to go up there in order to walk its streets of gold? Listen to the Revelator, "And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes: and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, "Behold I make all things new." There is evidently a difference between making all new things and "all things new."

"Pilgrim, in that golden city,
Seated on his jasper throne,
Zion's KING, enthroned in beauty,
Reigns in peace from zone to zone.
There on sunlit hills and mountains,
Golden beams serenely glow;
Pearly streams and crystal fountains:
On their banks sweet flow'rets grow.

Pilgrim, see! the land is nearing,
With its vernal fruits and flowers!
On! just yonder, oh how cheering!
Bloom forever Eden's bowers.
Hark! the choral strains there ringing,
Wafted on the balmy air;
See the millions! hear the singing!
Soon the pilgrims will be there!"

Oh joyful day; when "there shall be no more curse;" when the earth shall be renewed and dressed in Edenic loveliness, with heavenly atmosphere, all laden with sweet odors of flowers, and reverberating with notes of Paradisiacal birds who blend their songs in nature's harmony. Then the inhabitants of earth will never say, "I am sick," for there will be no more sorrow, pain, or death Oh, may God give us his Holy Spirit, which is the earnest of the promised inheritance, and anoint our eyes with eye-salve, that the eyes of our understanding may be enlightened, so that we may be enabled to discern good from evil, "for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth," being "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." How entirely opposite are the fruits of the flesh, which are evil, namely, "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like;" and Paul further tells us, that "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

We are truly living in an evil time, amid the last day perils, and in the language of the apostle, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption: but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Let us therefore, through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body that we may live. Oh may God bestow upon us heavenly wisdom and grace whereby we are saved through faith, "for we through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteousness by faith,"—faith which worketh by love, as we learn from James, who says, "What doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not WORKS, is dead, being alone." "Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the sacrifice was fulfilled which saith, "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the friend of God." Ye see then how that by WORKS a man is justified, and not by faith only." It is by faith which worketh by love, "for all the law is fulfilled in one word," even in this, "Thou shalt LOVE thy neighbor as thyself." Said our Lord, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, when ye have love one to another." Oh God, fill our hearts with pure, heavenly love, which is the "bond of perfectness," that we may have heavenly union with thee, and all the children, who are heirs of the "purchased possession." Increase our faith, that we may overcome the world, for this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." "Therefore being justified by faith (that works by love,) we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God."

Blessed, cheering hope, thou art an anchor firm in every storm. Purifying hope, for "whoso hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he (Christ) is pure." Therefore "let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and evil speaking, be put away from you; with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Oh let us "endure to the end" that we may "be saved." Let us lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run the race set before us," and "so run that we may obtain an incorruptible crown"—"ETERNAL LIFE." Let us have respect unto the recompense of reward, and be stimulated to ACTION by the promise, "He that overcometh shall INHERIT ALL THINGS."

For the Crisis.

Our Common Foe.

Oh yawning grave; oh dark abode of all the sons and daughters of our race! Forever open are thy hideous portals to swallow up life's dearest hopes, to hide from mortal eyes life's brightest flowers! Is there aught that is good or beautiful on earth? thy darkened recesses hold at last its decaying mortality. Children, playing in the sunshine of innocence and beauty, play but on the verge of thy habitation. Youth, full of hopes and bright futures, findeth them ended in thy dark abodes. Manhood, around whose life clingeth the affections of those he holdeth dear, findeth them of no avail in delivering him from thy hiding place. And old age, no longer able to oppose, findeth itself laid away in thy darkness.

But how is this? what power is it that warreth in thy behalf, that layeth hold upon us, at whose touch our spirits droop, our vigor and our strength is like a dream, and we are laid away the captives of his certain victory? Ah! his name is Death. Yes, 'tis he whose silence as he followeth in our footsteps discovereth not to us our enemy. Yes, 'tis he who rides upon the midnight gale, whose fatal breath, breathed upon the sleeper, striketh to his vitals and he dies. Who, in night's darkest hours, or in the dazzling light of noonday sun, (alike to him,) doth leave his name engraved upon the brow of mortals and they find thy darkness their certain dwelling-place.

But is this the end of man? Will he no more awake to life? Is death's vile embrace forever to hold in its grasp his lifeless form? Methinks I hear the voice of Omnipotence proclaim, "[illegible] in [illegible] strong enemy hath invaded thy habitation and carried thee captive to his dungeon; though he hath bound thee strongly to the dust, by the chords of his power, yet I will be thy deliverer and the victor over death, even thine enemy, whose arrows shall pierce his own vitality at last, and oblivion shall swallow up forever the name that spreadeth terror amongst the sons of men."

Rejoice then, oh my friends, that a Deliverer liveth; that in God there is a hope that lighteth even the pathway to the grave! Rejoice, then, that to the house of David is opened a fountain in which all mankind may find a cure for all the maladies of sin. Yes, even in Christ, the outcast of the Jewish world, is found a balm that healeth broken hearts; that opens the eyes of those who are in darkness; and unstoppeth the ears of him who long hath dwelt in silence. A universal cure is found in Him who was a man of sorrows and oppressed with grief. And yet it is free; without money and without price; it is given to the poor and oppressed of earth. His power is not limited. No earthly monarch can oppose his sway, no mortal can escape its missioned justice. If death, man's fearless foe, is brought into subjection to his will, can man escape by any device of his own? Ah, no! His power is omnipotent.

Kind reader, has thy heart been stirred by aspirations to a holy life? Have thy sins, dark as the darkness from which they sprung, been arrayed before thee in all their developed hideousness, to put thee in remembrance of thy need of One to redeem thee from thy sad condition? Hast thou had a word of kindness from thy brother; from thy friend an invitation to the gospel feast?

Hast thou been warned to make thy peace with God, to seek in Christ a refuge from thy sins? If so, why dost thou tarry in the shades of death; why linger beneath the shadows of the grave; why dost thou not in Christ a refuge seek, and find in God peace for thy sinful soul?

He waiteth now; but will not always wait; his Spirit will not always strive with man. Thy Savior's pleading voice will soon be hushed, when justice cometh forth to visit vengeance upon sinful flesh. Oh! then, where will be thy refuge? where thy saving hope? Alas! the voice of prayer will never more prevail, and mercy never more be pleaded for ruined man. They cry for rocks and mountains, but these flee away, and death comes forth to fold again those forms which never more from his dark presence shall escape. Is this the fate of man? It is but the fate of those who by their unhallowed deeds bring swift destruction on their guilty heads. But where is thy brother who in life's day of hope bade thee prepare to live, to meet thy God? Behold him with his Saviour, buoyed above the tumult of expiring earth; a crown of joy upon his head, and hark! his song is praise to the Lord who hath redeemed him from the power of death, and has accounted him worthy of an entrance into that glorious place where life's fair tree doth ever bloom, whose fruit is everlasting life to those who partake thereof. Oh glorious hope! it nerves me up to duty, and weans me from the sinful pleasures of unhallowed earth. It leads me onward to the goal of triumph; to the kingdom that is beautified with renewed nature, and graced with all the glories of immortality. Then, death, where is thy sting? and oh grave, where is thy boasted victory?

An Explanation.

That no misapprehension may arise from the present time argument, as published in "our address from the Advent churches in Newark and New York," in regard to the publication of the concordat between Napoleon Bonaparte and the Pope as a law, on the 29th of March, A. D. 1813, we will just say, that, although the concordat which terminated the civil power of the Pope, was then promulgated under the authority of Napoleon, yet it was not to go [illegible] following from the fourth volume of Allisons History of Europe, p. 29, clearly proves:

"At the same time, an entire amnesty was published to all individuals of Rome and Transylvania, who had incurred civil penalties by refusing to take the oath of allegiance to the emperor, provided they did so in thirty-five days." Thus it was shown that the concordat was a dead letter until the thirty-five days were expired, which took place on the 29th of April following. Forty-five years from that time will end the 29th of April this year, which is one or two days after the passover, to which we shall look with very great interest for the coming of Jesus. But whether these days are definite to the literal day, we are not now able to say, and we therefore leave all to draw their own conclusions in this matter. What time in the year Justin issued his edict to "set up," or carry into effect the abomination of desolation," we have not, as yet, been able to ascertain. One thing we feel assured of however, that the doctrines of the church of Rome obtained the force of law, and therefore began to desolate in that year; and, therefore, the 1335 years will end this year, 1858. Having thus ascertained the year in which we believe Jesus will come, it is our duty to watch that we may be ready. For, says Jesus, (Rev. 3: 7) "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." The legitimate conclusion from this passage is, that by watching we shall know.

May the Lord help us to watch!

No. V.

DEAR UNCLE FRED:—I promised to give a few items touching the history of sprinkling, and then dismiss the subject.

The first instance of pouring, on record, is that of Novitatus, which took place about A. D. 251. Eusebius, "the father of ecclesiastical historians," says in regard to this case, that "Novitatus fell into a grievous distemper, and it being supposed that he would die immediately, he received baptism, being besprinkled with water on the bed whereon he lay, (if that can be termed baptism.) This baptism was thought imperfect, and not solemn, for various reasons. Also, those who were thus baptized were called ever afterward clinici; and by the the 12th article of the council of Neocaesarea these clinici were prohibited the priesthood."

This council was held sixty-four years after this case of sprinkling occurred.

"The first law for sprinkling was in the following manner: Pope Stephen II. being driven from Rome by Adolphus, king of the Lombards, in 753, fled to Pepin, who, a short time before, had usurped the crown of France. While he remained there, the monks of Cressy, in Brittany, consulted him whether, in cases of necessity, baptism poured upon the head of the infant would be lawful. Stephen replied that it would. But though the truth of this fact be allowed,—which, however, some Catholics deny,—yet pouring or sprinkling was admitted in cases of necessity. It was not till the year 1311 that the Legis Patre, in a Council held at Ravenna, declared immersion, or sprinkling, to be indifferent. In Scotland, however, sprinkling was never practiced in ordinary cases till after the Reformation (about the middle of the sixteenth century.) From Scotland it made its way into England, in the reign of Elizabeth, but was not authorised in the established church."—Edinburg Encyclopedia.

And now, Uncle Fred, I have gone over the entire ground, first answering your objections, and then giving my arguments in favor of exclusive immersion, founding it upon—

1. The testimony of scripture, showing that the language used in connection with [illegible] into the water and came up out of it, and that much water was necessary where many were baptized; also, that the figures used by the apostle Paul were applicable only to immersion.

2. I gave you the testimony of learned men who have investigated this subject, and whose uniform testimony was in favor of immersion; testimony derived both from the definition of the term Baptizo, and the practice of the primitive church.

I have given early writers and more recent writers; Germans, French, English, and American; Pedo-Baptists and Baptists; Presbyterian and Methodists. I have given, too, the history of sprinkling, when and how it took its rise, and I flatter myself that when you weigh impartially the testimony on both sides, you will decide in favor of exclusive immersion, and come to the conclusion that Kate has not made herself so "perfectly ridiculous" after all, by her "re-baptism."(?)

And now I will add, in conclusion, that if you wish me to give you my reasons for becoming a "Millerite," I am ready to do so, and to examine candidly all of your objections. I can give you a "thus saith the Lord" for it all, beginning at Genesis and ending at Revelation.

Yours in love,

KATE.

A Lie of the Devil.

"Some of the brethren will use words without number to prove that a doctrine is biblical, and yet seemingly care but little about souls that are perishing. Some of the sisters feel a spirit of labor, but if they venture to speak out what is in their hearts, some of the brethren are on their feet instantly, saying they think the time is past for many souls to be brought in,—there may be a few, but they don't feel much about it."—Extract from a Letter.

A pretty state of things, truly. Dead, twice dead, and just ready to be plucked up by the roots.

"There," says one, "so-and-so wrote that, and meant me."

Yes, that's the very one that wrote it, and it means you, no doubt, for how nicely the coat fits you,—don't you see? not a strain nor a wrinkle, only it sets awful tight!

Now look here; if you take this course God's curse will follow you. God wants you to serve him—that's your business. Go work in God's vineyard, you miserable, lazy, fault-finding drone. God has sinners to be saved all around you. "They don't come near" you? Good reason why. Who would want to go to an iceberg to warm his feet? If you will work, God will give you work to do. Lazy men are always out of business, because they are good for nothing to labor.

"Nothing to do?" You are like the man who said, "If you want your potatoes dug, fetch 'em on!" It's your work to hunt up something to do.

You think God has just such narrow, contemptible notions as you have. "Can't do any thing!" Why, man, God is converting sinners all around you. "Don't think much of their religion?" Well, they think more of it than I do of yours, for they act more like Christ.

Friends, your shut-door nonsense is just a lie of the devil,—don't believe it, or tell it,—you may be as bad as he is if you are not careful.

The Jewish High-Priesthood.

THE PART THE PEOPLE ACTED ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.

The whole Priesthood of Israel "served unto the shadow and example of heavenly things." Heb. 8: 5. The analogy between the type and anti-type, so far as fulfilled, is seen to be divinely planned. The High-Priest presided [illegible]

This question and answer involves the whole subject of man's agency in the exercise of his intelligence and responsible nature relative to salvation.

Prof. ———, a gifted preacher, not far from Rochester, preached from this theme, and led his people to think that "the whole work of atonement—all that was done for their forgiveness—was done by the High Priest in secret! That all the people did —or were allowed to participate in—was to confess that they were unfit to live and deserved to die!"

Of this he was doubtless "willingly ignorant." 2 Pet. 3: 5.

1. That the Tabernacle and Temple were both built by the voluntary offerings of Israel.

2. That the people—the nation—sustained the Temple worship, its sacrifices offerings and Priesthood.

3. That the people came from the extremities of their land—some about two hundred miles—as an essential PRE-requisite to the first step in the personal work of High Priest on the day or in the way of atonement.

4. That the people had their proper part to act after they got to Jerusalem—beside making their offerings. They were to fast, "afflict their souls," and so enter heartily into the aims and ends to be reached by the High Priest.

Thus, in these four comprehensive aspects, the facts seem to falsify the preacher's assertion. The facts show that the people had a great deal to do—expressive of their need, and interest, and purpose to appropriate the benefits of the Atonement.

The assumption of superior wisdom amid such glaring errors should be appreciated by all who reverence "the wisdom of God."

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. Mussey.

Bro. Grant:—It is well known to the readers of the Crisis that a little more than one year ago I drank the bitter cup of parting with my dear earthly companion by death; and ere my tears were dried up, I have been called again to sorrow and mourning.

My eldest son, Ransom E. Mussey, is dead. He died the first day of Dec., aged twenty-five, of typhoid fever. He has left a companion to mourn, who as deeply feels his loss as a widowed mother. He was a kind son and a loving husband. Has labored hard to accumulate a treasure in this world, but the preparation for the world to come he was delaying for a future time, and oh! how unprepared for the solemn hour of death. He had once known what it was to enjoy the religion of Jesus Christ. When a little boy, ten years of age, he was converted to God—was baptized, and became a happy christian. He was faithful at the family altar and in the prayer meeting; but as time passed on he, with many of his associates, became remiss in duty and wandered away from God; and so he has lived destitute of the grace of God until he lay upon his dying bed, when he called upon his God; and in that awful solemn moment, in the stillness of the midnight hour, Jesus whispered peace.

"So fade away beloved friends. They droop and die like the summer flower; and were it not for the hope of the gospel, nature would sink in such an hour as this. Funeral sermon was preached by Bro. I. H. Shipman, at Sugar Hill, where I was called to visit my son in his sickness and death, my former place of residence; and truly my heart was sad while visiting my former brethren and the old homestead, the place where I had spent so many happy hours with my kind companion and my little family, now divided, only one son with me there to follow the lifeless remains of my dear son Ransom to the lonely grave. Lonely I returned to Lake Village, leaving my son at Sugar Hill to slumber in the dust till God shall bid him rise.

My dear brethren and sisters, you see I have cause for all my grief. I need your prayers and I trust I shall have them. But amid all my sorrow I have cause for rejoicing. Jesus lives, glory to his blessed name, and has the keys of death and hell, and in a little time from this he will say to the sleepers, awake! What could comfort [illegible] hope of Jesus soon coming? [illegible] [illegible] pray for my two remaining [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the resurrec-tion morning an unbroken family. In all my affliction I have much to be thankful for, although my last earthly prop is taken from me. I am surrounded with friends who sympathise with me in my sorrows. Dear Brn. and Srs., in all your prayers remember me. "For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, and that which I was afraid of is come unto me. I was not in safety, neither had I rest; neither was I quiet; yet trouble came." Job 3: 25–26.

Your sister in affliction's vale,

Abigail Mussey.

From Sr. H. Wheeler.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me, though a stranger, to address a few lines to you, as one whose heart is knit together in bonds of love and christian fellowship with all those who love the appearing of our blessed Savior, and are striving to do his will and secure an inheritance in his soon coming kingdom I have just been perusing the columns of the Crisis which comes weekly richly laden with heavenly manna. Many a time has my desponding heart been cheered and encouraged by the consolation which it affords; and I esteem it one of the richest blessings conferred upon human beings, aside from the word of God and the influence of the Holy Spirit.

Although it has been but a short time since I became a firm believer in the near coming of Christ, yet I praise the Lord, even at this late hour, that he has given me a spirit of investigation and a willingness to hear the truth, and that I have been enabled to participate in the joys of those who are anxiously looking for the speedy return of their long absent Lord. I believe he is soon to appear for the deliverance of his chosen ones from the land of the enemy. Already we can see by the eye of faith the light of the eternal Morn gleaming above the horizon, and ere we are aware will be ushered in that glorious day that is to end our sorrows and transplant us from this to a brighter and more heavenly sphere. Glorious hope! heart-cheering prospect! well may we rejoice that we are accounted worthy to suffer affliction and persecution for Christ's sake, knowing that it shall work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Let us bow meekly 'neath the chastening rod of Him who doeth all things right, knowing that it is sent in mercy to prepare us for higher, holier and more noble joys than this vain world can afford. Let us take courage and go on, forgetting things that are behind;

> But looking forward with joy to the land > of the blest,
> Where our sorrows shall end and our souls
> find rest;
> Where we can bask in the smiles of our > heavenly King,
> And his praises with gladness eternally > sing.

We have every thing to stimulate us to action and engagedness in our Master's cause. And why are we so negligent, so cold and indifferent? This question often arises in my mind when I reflect upon the goodness of God and consider what the Savior has suffered for such unworthy creatures. I can truly say for one the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak.

I find that it requires much of the grace of God and that wisdom which cometh from above to enable us to discern the devices and shun the snares of the enemy which surround us; but that grace has been promised and we are sure to have it if we give ourselves up into the hands of the Lord and trust him for it. I pray the Lord that we may one and all be endowed with divine wisdom and grace, and that we may all seek earnestly that deep, vital piety of heart that will go beyond the bounds of narrow self and extend its arms of love and mercy to all around.

I fear that as a class we are too indifferent in regard to the welfare of those around us who have no hope in Christ, and our indifference often calls forth an uncharitable remark from them and also from professors of other societies; and though we are not to seek the applause of the world, yet it is our duty to seek earnestly to know and do the will of our heavenly Father.

May the Lord help us each and all to arouse from our slumbering condition and look around and see what he has for us to do in his vineyard, and whatsoever our hands find to do, do it with all our might, that when our Master comes we may have his approving smile and receive the final reward of the diligent and faithful.

H. Wheeler.

Lowell, Mass.

From Bro. R. J. Landreth.

Bro. Grant:—We are moving along in the narrow way which leads to Father's house. The Spirit of God has been with us and blessed us. We have received new soldiers in our ranks, who are not ashamed to show their colors and nail them to the mast-head. We have increased so in numbers that we have been compelled to hire a larger hall. Glory to God, he still blesses the faithful and obedient children.

When I look around and see the earth ripening fast unto the judgment of the great day, then I can lift up my head and rejoice.

But though many of us are poor and despised in this vale of tears, we will soon sit as conquerors upon the throne prepared for the faithful where no sorrow can ever enter, and where with those friends who have slumbered in the dust of the earth we shall shout songs of salvation to our glorious Redeemer through the endless ages of eternity. We remember the gracious promise—"Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

If we never see you, Bro. Grant, on earth, my prayer to God is that we may meet you and all the readers of the Crisis in our happy Eden home, and sing with the blood-washed throng the thrilling notes of redeeming love. Wishing you God speed in all your labors for Christ,

I remain your brother in Christ,

Robert J. Landreth.

North Adams, Mass.

From Sr. S. Mix.

Bro. Grant:—If there was ever a time in the history of the church when she ought in a very peculiar manner to "take heed to the sure word of prophecy," it is this present time; now, when there is such a call for laborers in the harvest field. We read in Matt. 13: 39, these words from the lips of the Savior,—"For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch."

In the former part of the chapter he had been interrogated by his disciples concerning his coming and the end of the world, or matters connected therewith; and he had brought them along down, step by step, until he reached the last generation of man which was to live on the earth previous to his coming and kingdom. The verse which I have quoted at the commencement of this article, appears to my mind to be a synopsis of the whole work of the gospel dispensation, from the departure of our Lord till his glorious return to take his kingdom.

He gave authority to his apostles. By the descent of the Holy Spirit they were endowed with "great power," and by the same Spirit he also gave divers manifestations to every man to profit withal, dividing up the work according to his will, to every man severally. 1 Cor. 12th chap.

But there was an especial command given to "the porter," and that was "to watch." Now we all well know the office of a porter. His station is at the gate, in open space, that he may see who is approaching, and be ready to do his work immediately. Here, then, in this last generation, is a people answering to the porter in the figure; and any one who has witnessed the movement of the minds of men during the last fifteen years, need not be at a loss for a moment in determining to what class of people this office belongs.

Well, brethren and sisters, at present there seems to be great call for those whose office it has been to proclaim the "common salvation" for help. They find that they have not provided a sufficiency of meat to feed the starving multitudes who are daily coming around the board, and there is a great effort made at almost every point to get the porter to enter into the work of preparing the tables. But shall he take "heed to the sure word of prophecy" and obey his command to watch, or shall he leave his post thinking that he can accomplish more by giving heed to the voice that calls him from within doors? God forbid that he should for a moment leave his position.

Oh! I bless God that the hour of deepest slumber is past, and the "Day-star" is rising. All over the land the harbingers are giving the signal of day-breaking. A little longer, and the Lord will come, and then shall every man have praise of God." Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus!

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 31, 1858.

Our Conference.

(Concluded.)

We have given a brief report of the conference up to Friday noon. In the afternoon, Bro. J. Couch, of Warner, N. H., preached a very profitable discourse on the foundation of God, showing the importance of standing on Christ as our salvation rock, and that we have no hope when we depart from him. The young converts, and old soldiers of the cross appeared to be much strengthened. The hall was full of attentive hearers, who evidently went away convinced that nothing can move the christian's foundation. Several requested prayers, and resolved to become the faithful followers of Christ

Friday morning, a large congregation were delighted and edified with a discourse from Bro. H. L. Hastings, on the Inheritance. We felt that no sacrifice was too great to obtain such a kingdom as described in the Bible. We could not conceive how it would be possible for God to provide any thing better than what he has promised to the faithful.

Saturday morning, we assembled again at 10 o'clock, and enjoyed another heavenly interview with the Lord and our dear brethren and sisters. We think no skeptic could remain long in such meetings without being convinced of the reality of the Christian religion. Many who came to the conference burdened with sin, could testify that the Lord had removed the load and filled them with joy and peace in the Holy Spirit.

Saturday, P. M. A large congregation listened with interest to a profitable discourse from Bro. A. Ross, Lowell, Mass. The young convert was comforted, while the mercy of God was held up to his mind, and all felt that, at best, they were only pardoned criminals, and needed to say, "God be merciful to me a sinner." It was made plain that all must come in the spirit of the Publican's prayer, if we would be accepted. Several came forward for prayers, and received blessings at the hand of the Lord.

Saturday evening. Bro. F. H. Berick, from Indiana, preached on the importance of christian union, showing that christian character is the only test of christian fellowship. It was clearly proved that the Lord gives no other standard, and consequently, all other tests are false ones, and should be repudiated at once. We are rejoiced to see the fall of sectarian walls, which have been daubed with the "untempered mortar" of prejudice and party feeling, prepared by Satan, and strengthened by the host of backsliders who have enlisted into his service. Our prayer is, that the last vestige of the stumbling-block may be speedily removed, in order that the children of the Most High may be one in Christ Jesus. When a man is once out of the sectarian mire, he feels like a slave transported from bondage into the land of freedom; or one from a prison cell to the embrace of loved ones at the home of his childhood. All know that, when first converted, the spirit of God leads us to love every one, and to mingle our prayers and songs with all that love the Lord. We were astonished when we first found that the professed followers of Christ had separate and opposing interests. May the good Lord forgive us, if we have done any thing to foster that enemy to pure religion—a sectarian spirit. Its influence is like a pestilential vapor, or the cold damps on dungeon walls. Every thing good withers under its blighting influence. Demons may revel in fiendish delight when the followers of the Lamb begin to drink the poison of sectarianism. How directly opposed to the spirit of Christ! When our Savior was praying to his Father for his disciples, he says, may "they be one even as we are one." True christian union implies no compromise of the truth, but is the fruit of genuine love begotten in the heart by the Holy Spirit. —But we return to the conference.

Lord's day morning we assembled at 9 o'clock for a love-feast, and we were not disappointed in our expectations. Many were present from other denominations and rejoiced with us in the great work of the Lord. We felt that we were brethren and sisters in Christ, all baptized into one spirit. One hundred and two testimonies were given in one hour and five minutes. Such scenes are seldom witnessed in this world. Many more rose to signify their willingness to testify for Jesus, but for want of time, could not speak. The witnesses, who did speak, did not mention some old, dead hope, but a lively one—a blessed one, comforting their hearts at that time. The witness of the Spirit of God was then giving them the evidence that their sins were forgiven. Many of these happy souls were in the bonds of sin and iniquity a few weeks since. An intelligent, noble-hearted man remarked in the conference, "The mud is hardly dry upon my back," referring to the ditch where he had lain because of his bad habits.

Some have asked us, "Do you think the great awakening in our land is the work of God?" We answer, if it is not, then we believe we have never seen the work of God anywhere. It is the same spirit, in the union prayer meetings where thousands attend, that we felt the night we were converted, and have since enjoyed for the last fifteen years. It seems to be the Lord's great and wonderful work. God alone can do such work as is being manifested all over the land. We believe that all who enjoyed that love-feast went away satisfied that pure and undefiled religion is spreading in Boston and vicinity. One of the most pleasing features of the meeting was the absence of party feeling, which has so often been the bane of similar gatherings. All seemed anxious to promote each other's spiritual welfare. It could be truly said, "love" was "without dissimulation."

At half-past 10 o'clock, Bro. S. G. Mathewson preached a solemn discourse on the judgment, at the close of which, about twenty came forward for prayers, and many went away rejoicing in the Lord.

In the afternoon, Bro. F. H. Berick spoke on the power and reasonableness of the gospel of Christ. Christianity was shown to be consistent with a "sound mind," being established upon a firm foundation, against which all the efforts of infidelity avail but little or nothing. It was made apparent that christian love, and not peculiar views, constitutes a man a disciple of Christ.

Lord's day evening, Bro. H. Munger, Chickopee Falls, Mass., spoke on the subject of witnessing for Christ; and we think some were persuaded to be more faithful than ever in this department of christian duty. It was shown that those who neglect to confess the Savior openly, soon wither away, and become like a branch cut from a tree. Many felt resolved to be more practical in their religion, in time to come, than in years past.

Thirteen were baptized during the day, and received very rich blessings from the Lord, and like the eunuch, went on their "way rejoicing." Several others intend to follow their example within a few days.

The conference just closed, we think was the best we ever enjoyed. We thought last year we could hardly have a better, but the good Lord has given us a still richer feast than that, for which we give him all the glory. Wives have rejoiced in the conversion of their husbands—and christian husbands have seen their companions come to Christ and be buried with him in baptism; children long prayed for are now traveling with their parents in the way to life eternal. We have never seen christians more anxious for the conversion of their friends and neighbors than at the present time. A deep impression rests upon their minds, that this is truly "the last call of mercy."

Please Read.

☞ We shall send bills next week, including arrearages, to those who have not paid in advance for the present volume. If we should make any mistakes, please inform us, and we will gladly correct them. Those who are owing for the last two volumes are requested to write immediately; and in case they cannot pay, and wish the paper, it will be continued. We hope all who can, will pay, so that we shall not be obliged to cut off any of the poor. Let all remember, it costs no more to pay in advance, and that it is much better for the office. The paper costs but four cents per week, which can be easily saved by a little self-denial. We hope all of our friends will make an effort to keep our family paper out of debt. If each will pay what is now due, our prospects, financially, would look bright. Come, give us a hearty lift. Let every reader make an effort to get one new subscriber. Now is the time to work. The day of rest is just at hand. Praise the Lord for the glorious prospect of soon seeing the dear Savior. May all of our readers, in company with your editor, be ready when the glad day arrives.

Book Notice.

Messiah's Reign: or, the Future Blessedness of the Church and the World. Philadelphia. Published by Joseph M. Wilson, No. 111 S. 10th Street.

This work is one of the last efforts of Bro. Ramsey, and was published just about the time of his death. The title of the book will indicate its character. The view taken by the author is that which is technically called the Millenarian theory.

This book will be forwarded, postage paid, to any person who will send one dollar, with their address, to Miss Mary Ramsey, No. 511 South 13th Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Errata.

In Henry Grew's article on the destiny of impenitent sinners, in paper of the 17th inst:

In the paragraph on Luke 13: 26-38, for "Jesus Christ will not address men," read dead men.

In the paragraph on Luke 20: 35, 36, in 4th column, for "being the resurrection," read, being the children of the resurrection.

In the next paragraph read,—You say that it would be more merciful to leave them in their first death. You may as well say it would be more merciful if he would raise them and give them another probation for eternal life.

At the end of the paragraph on Dan. 12: 2, &c., in the third column, for "the Sacred Scriptures require," read recognize this principle.

Erratum.—In Bro. Pratt's article—"Relationship to God"—second column, fourth line from top, read sonship instead of "worship."

The Conference.

The saints of God have assembled, worshiped together, and again separated, and we hope and believe there are few, if any, who have returned to their homes unprofited and unblest by the meeting. Those reunions of the church are always productive of salutary effects, in the comforting and strengthening of the old pilgrims, and adding new converts to the faith of those who still anxiously long and earnestly pray for the Second Advent of their Savior and King. Although there is a vague belief among all professing christians that Christ will come sometime to judge the world, but at such a distant period that there is no need of alarm upon the subject at present, yet the "children of the Advent" are the only body whose minds, believing the prophecies and gospel as they exist, are definitely fixed upon the rapidly approaching judgment as a period of all absorbing interest, and fearfully near, even at the door.

It is true that in computing time we have been mistaken. Events in the future, more collossal than we anticipated, threw their deep shadows further than we expected; and the watchman upon Mount Zion sounded the cry early, but not prematurely; for it begets a watchfulness necessary beyond sound controversy when "at an hour when ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

On approaching a coast unknown except by the lines marked upon a chart, out of sight of land, it behooves the man on the watch to keep a bright look out; and it is better that the navigator is a day ahead of the ship in his reckoning, than have his vessel run ashore in the night, twelve hours before he expected land, as has been the case many times. The evil is irremediable now, the ship smashed to pieces, and the wail of the drowning crew is borne unheeded on the sound of the angry wave and the howling tempest.

The "good man of the house" being warned that a burglar meditates an attack, must watch all night, lest relaxing in his vigilance a single hour the robber may surprise and plunder him.

It did my heart good to see so many happy faces, many of which I had once seen before at the camp where God had once so providentially directed my steps, when I was a weary, sad and friendless wanderer in the land of the stranger.

Seeing the beaming countenance of the brethren and sisters as they exchanged greetings with each other, with glittering eye and smiling lip, it seemed to me as if the cloud which yet intervenes between Christ and his followers was partially drawn aside, and a ray of the light of his countenance vouchsafed to cheer and gladden the hearts of the faithful. It was a precious season, and many shall remember it as a season when their souls were unspeakably blessed.

On Sabbath morning, seven at East Boston, and in the afternoon, six at Roxbury, were buried with Christ in Baptism. During the entire ceremony in the afternoon, it rained heavily, but scarcely had the last disciple received the ceremony, and stepped out of the water, when the now setting sun pierced through the clouds, and shining upon the mist and murky sky, created the most beautiful rainbow I ever saw, the colors were so intensely bright and glorious. It was the bow of the covenant, fresh and glowing as when God set it in the heavens, as a token to Noah that the waters of the great deep should never inundate the earth again, and shewed that he ever looked down upon and remembered his people.

Let no one think for a moment of giving up. The day is at hand when the mourners shall rejoice, the banished ones return to their Father's home, and the cross-bearers shall receive the crown.—There is much to be done and little time in which to accomplish it—not a moment to spare in trifling.

Every one has got a work to do, no matter how small he may think himself. The blade of grass fills its place in creation as well as the towering pine or wide-spreading oak.

The small, wedge-like fragment of stone is as important, although not as conspicuous, as the larger block which it secures. The small iron bolt does its part in the safety of the ship as well as the best bower. If the royal mast was as large as the main, the ship would soon be on her beam ends.

There is a place for every one—let every one strive to learn his or her position and when there, let them work, work, work!

Let us remember the parable of the talents, and beware of seeking to excuse our inactivity because we had but one.

May we all be more watchful, more prayerful and serve him better than ever yet we have done.

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER EIGHT.

Will you allow me the privilege of saying a word about the influences of the gospel of Christ?

The gospel has made us to differ in many respects from the nations who do not enjoy its light. What we see of civilization, of wholesome laws, of well regulated governments, of good institutions for the mental and moral improvement of man, are results of gospel influences. The evil and barbarous principals and practices often witnessed in these governments, nations and institutions, are evidences that they are not wholly Christian, and show clearly what they would be were it not for the Christian influence which has been brought to bear upon them. The same principle holds good in communities and parishes. Wherever a Christian church,—one really Christian,—is situated, and the preaching of the gospel is sustained, a healing influence is felt in community. All have more or less benefits of its restraining and moral properties. The vices and ungodly lives of some show that all are not sanctified by the gospel; but these enjoy the amount of good order, right principles and moral conduct of others. For it makes better men and women, better neighbors and better schools, better towns, and brings other blessings common to all, whether they are aware of it or not. They should be aware of it, and aid in sustaining the preaching of the gospel among them, though they do not profess to be really Christians. They should not be compelled to do so; but do it willingly. And Christians should endeavor to give them an ample opportunity to do so.

I have often heard it argued that those of the world should not be asked to aid in sustaining the gospel. Many are very delicate in taking up contributions, and are much opposed to it. I once was so. But this is a false notion. I do not believe in bleeding a congregation till they become faint at heart; but it is well to let every congregation have an opportunity to do what they willingly would do. They reap benefits from the gospel; let them help sustain it.

I have heard preachers denounce the idea of public collection, because it seemed to ask the world to help the church, when at the same time, if an ungodly man offered them a present, they would readily take it. If asked to take a meal, or be entertained for the night, by such [illegible]

Let us be content. Jesus ate with publicans and sinners, and the pharisees murmured about it. Don't let us be found in their society, but follow Christ's example.

But I wish to come nearer home. There are many places where a few brethren live in a place, and want the gospel preached to them. One, two, or three, have hearts to aid in such a work, and make the effort. It costs something, and they do well to bear their share of the expense, and if the others would aid, they could succeed in obtaining such labor as would build them up and benefit the people; but the others do nothing, although able to do much.—They enjoy a free gospel; it costs them nothing or nearly nothing.

Is it right? Nay, verily. These live,—if they do live,—on the liberality of their better brethren, and the self-sacrifice of their minister, and the cause languishes by their neglect. For a minister cannot spend his time to preach, visit the people of the town, and study to know anything, and support himself and family.

Think of this, you who live on the hard earnings of others, and are ready to say, "bless God for meetings and for sanctuary privileges." Think of the toils and trials of a minister, who feels called of God to preach the gospel, and goes to do so, and finds the people ready enough to hear; does the best he can to feed you with the bread of life, and returns to his home with perhaps one or two dollars, given by good-hearted men who did their duty, and yet the preacher is, pecuniarily, much poorer than before, and you did nothing.

Suppose all were like you. Would the gospel continue to be preached? Would any one be saved in the kingdom?

But many of you don't take the paper to pay for it, and will not see this unless it is loaned to you. Will some whole-souled brother or sister lend his paper to such as I am speaking to, and point this out? Remember, I am not talking to the poor.

Good Bread.

The following receipt, for making bread, we believe to be the best offered to the public. We have boarded for the last nine months at the Boston Water Cure, 18 and 20 La Grange Place, and know from happy experience, and testimony of others, that there is no bread so healthy and economical, as the unbolted wheat bread made according to the following receipt prepared by Mr. Wm. Hunt, the Proprietor of this establishment, and author of the little work on "Good Bread," noticed a few weeks since in the columns of the Crisis. This book, containing several valuable receipts for cooking, may be had at our office, or of the Publisher, for ten cts., postage paid. Every family should have a copy.

Unbolted Wheat Bread.—Wet, with hot or boiling water, pure unbolted wheat meal; use a strong spoon or stick to stir with; as it cools, knead it a little with the hands; make this dough into rather small biscuit or rolls; rub them over well with dry flour; prick them to prevent blistering, and bake about twenty minutes in a hot oven, or they will be equally light cooked in hot steam, thus avoiding a crust which is an objection to persons who have poor teeth. When a day or two old if they are simply dipped in water and put in a hot oven a few minutes, they will be as good as new. This bread should begin to cook with a brisk heat; the latter part need not be so intense.

The principle by which this bread is raised, is the expansion of the vapor and air in the dough by the sudden application of heat, so that a brisk oven is necessary to form a thin crust, and thus prevent these expanding particles of air from escaping. If the heat be slow at first, these particles will work out without raising the bread. To ensure success, let the dough remain until the oven is exactly right.

Using hot water to wet the meal with, causes it to swell at once, so that when the particles of air in the dough expand by the heat of the oven, the space is not filled by the swelling of the meal, which would be the result if wet with cold water; but if the dough is allowed to stand several hours and swell before baking, the bread will be fully as light.

This bread has been known for two or three years, and extensively used in several of the Health or Water Cure establishments. The usual method of preparing it in such large quantities as they must necessarily supply, is to roll out the dough about one-third of an inch thick, cut it in strips an inch and a half or two inches wide, then cross-cut into diamond-shaped cakes: the board, roller, and knife used are kept well covered with dry flour. After baking the flour may be brushed off with a little whisk.

Few are aware of the delicious bread [illegible] eaten warm by the most confirmed invalid without the slightest injury. It is sweet, as light, and much more wholesome, than the average of city or country home-made bread. Few persons once accustomed to the rich and delicious flavor of this pure article, this true "staff of life," will ever desire to return to bread rotted by fermentation or poisoned with acids and alkalies.

Pepper.—Pepper is an almost universal condiment. Black pepper irritates and inflames the coatings of the stomach, red pepper does not; it excites, but does not irritate, consequently it should be used instead of black pepper. It was known to the Romans, and has been in use in the East Indies from time immemorial, as it corrects that flatulence which attends the large use of vegetable food. Persons in health do not need any pepper in their food. But to those of weak and languid stomachs, it is manifold more healthful to use cayenne pepper at meals than any form of wine, brandy, or beer that can be named, because it stimulates without the reaction of sleepiness or debility.—Hall's Journal of Health.

To Cure Hoarseness.—Take the whites of two eggs, and beat them with two spoonfuls of white sugar; grate a little nutmeg; then add a pint of lukewarm water. Stir well, and drink often. Repeat the prescription if necessary, and it will cure the most obstinate case of hoarseness in a short time.

Neuralgia.—Burdock leaf applied externally is said to be an almost infallible cure for neuralgia.

A CALM SUCCEEDS THE STORM.

The winds blew wildly o'er the ocean,
And lashed its briny waters high;
The night was dark with wild commotion,
No star beamed from the stormy sky.
And loudly rang the thunder's rattle
Where blazed the livid lightning's path,
As if in wild and stormy battle
The elements had met in wrath.

Now o'er the dark and raging billows
A ship sped o'er the surging tide;
Its masts bent like the tender willows
That wave along the river's side.
And those it bore were bowed in sorrow,
In prayer long were bowed that night;
They prayed that still another morrow
Might dawn to cheer their way with light.

The morrow came with rays of gladness;
The night of storms was o'er and gone;
The night of boding gloom and sadness
Had fled before the light of morn.
And o'er the calm and peaceful ocean
Nought rose but gentle breezes now;
While o'er the waves with gentle motion
Still turned the ship her gallant prow.

O pilgrim lone! this scene is given
To cheer thy sadder hours of life;
And bid thee ever hope in Heaven
When darkly rise the storms of life.
It bids thee hope that in the distance
Thy bark shall find a calmer sea,
Whose waves meet not the rock's resistance,
But roll against a shining lea.

And may this scene new strength awaken,
When weary grows thy lonely heart;
And when thou art well nigh forsaken,
May it some cheering thought impart.
For thou should'st hope though storms surround thee,
And gloomy trials dim thy way;
For soon bright morn may shed around thee
The pleasing light of calmest day!

Domestic Summary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher at Burton's Theatre, New York.—The noon prayer meeting at Burton's Theatre, on Saturday, was conducted by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. An immense audience assembled; many more pressing at the doors for admission than the house could possibly accommodate. All the pit, the galleries, the proscenium boxes, even the skylight in the peak of the theatre, showed a densely packed mass of heads, all turned intently towards the stage, where for some time Mr. Beecher sat alone. Within fifteen minutes of the stroke of 12, however, those who had given up in despair the task of effecting an entrance at the front of the building essayed a demonstration in the rear. At the stage door on Reade street, a party of some fifty ladies and gentlemen hammered and shouted for admission, and when no prospect remained for the speedy opening of a fast-locked door, some of the young gentlemen hunted up a locksmith, who came with a big bundle of keys, and after several attempts turned the bolt and gave entrance to the throng of people, who rushed in a body up the dark staircase, tumbled over the dusty "properties" behind the scenes, and finally made their appearance before the curtain, where they filled the stage from wing to wing, forming a decorous line of attentive observers in the rear of Mr. Beecher's chair. The view of the house from this stand-point was very extraordinary. Hardly a square inch of the theatre was unoccupied. In the palmiest days of Mr. Burton there never was a crowd to compare with this. The deepest interest was manifested. Among the three thousand persons collected there was not the least confusion or disorder. Moreover, a very decided disposition to stay all day became manifest, as the hour for closing the ceremonies approached. Mr. Beecher was invited to continue, but declined, on a plea that a business men's meeting should be punctual.

Several affecting narratives were given. There came in from the neighborhood of the theatre an volume of musical sound—the singing of a hymn in [illegible] and stepped to the footlights. Raising his hand he stood quietly a moment, fixing the attention of the audience before he spoke. "Brethren," said he, "do you hear that? Stop a moment! That's the sound of worship out of the old bar-room of this theatre! Let us spend two minutes in silent prayer and thanksgiving." He took his seat and for the two succeeding minutes the dropping of a pin could be heard. Then followed prayers for Mr. Burton, the owner of the theatre.

The hour of one approaching, Mr. Beecher again came forward and closed the exercises with a few remarks. He was about to give out the final hymn when a general shout of "go on," "go on," came from all parts of the house, followed by cries of "keep it up all day." Mr. Beecher reminded the people that the time designated was expiring, that business men should be punctual in all things, and that the meeting should be closed at the hour, while those who chose might remain. The hymn was accordingly sung, and Mr. Beecher prefixed to the benediction a notice that the theatre would be opened on the following day (Sunday) at the same hour.

The Newburyport Herald says that in Hampton, N. H., all the liquor sellers have been converted and closed up their business, the hotel landlord among them. The same paper alluding to the progress of this work among those who compose the very substratum of society—such as inhabit North street and the Five Points—says: "A gentleman in this city, residing near a house that has not borne the best character, where some half dozen or more females board, was alarmed a few evenings since by loud outcries, and ran to the spot expecting to see evidences of violence or bloodshed, but was surprised as he approached, to find that the inmates were holding a prayer meeting, and while some had been converted others were calling aloud for mercy and deliverance from sins."

The Philadelphia North American of Friday states that the interest in that city is increasing; that the noon prayer meeting had outgrown Jaynes Hall, which will seat two thousand five hundred, and that Franklin Hall, the headquarters of the "Free Thinkers and Infidels, and had been obtained and opened as a place of prayer.

"The most noticeable feature of the present religious movement is, that it springs up so directly among the people themselves. We do not say that it springs from the people, because we would rather hope and acknowledge it as one of the blessings coming of His providence and grace from the Father of Mercies. But we mean that we find it commencing among the laity rather than the ministry, and not under the powerful preaching of some revivalist. No Elder Knapp, no Mr. Spurgeon, no Mr. Whitfield or Wesley, no minister of any denomination, is prominent in the movement. No one man seems noticeable at all. Merchants lead the meetings. The universal right of the citizens peaceably to assemble and petition, is one of those political rights of greatest value in earthly citizenship. So the great natural right and duty of every man who believes in God to pray to his Maker, is here exercised with a simplicity, a freedom, an interest, and a power, worthy the consideration of all. In former seasons of this kind, preaching has been the great means of good. But here, business men turn aside to pray for five minutes, and find it does not distract but calm and elevate their minds, and fit them better to grapple with the cares of the day."—Phil. Ledger.

The Mirror says in its notice of the meetings, (and the remark holds true of other places): "There has been little preaching, little exhortation, but much prayer. There are no great crowds rallying about some centre of pulpit oratory, but the prayer meetings in by-places are thronged. God has taken all opportunity away for calling it man's work. He has done it."

Several instances have occurred where men have gone to bed thoughtless and careless, and have awoke in the night with such a sense of their sinfulness that they have gone to a Christian friend, even at night, and asked that friend to pray for them. God's spirit is thus manifesting its presence and power.

It is stated that a whole ship's company had been converted in mid ocean, when no special means were in use; but it was evidently the agency of the Holy Spirit.

Another gentleman said that the masters of five vessels which had recently come into New York had been converted.

Jews in Hindostan.—The Jews in England have sent an address to their brethren in the Bombay army exhorting them to remain faithful to the interests of the British crown.

In Malabar alone there are twenty thousand Jews, and in the rest of the peninsula their number is proportionably great. They date their presence in Hindostan from the Babylonian captivity. They assert that a portion of the tribe of Manasseh, after three years' wandering, finally settled in India to the number of twenty thousand families. Growing in favor among the Hindoos, they in a short time increased to eighty thousand families, and were soon powerful enough to establish the kingdom of Cranganore upon the coast of Malabar. Here they flourished for a number of years under a republican form of government, presided over by two chiefs. They still retain their chronicles in the Hebrew language, which are said to commence with the reign of Nebuchadnezzar. This people are known as the white Jews.

There were four men murdered in New York, last week, and five stabbed and dangerously wounded.

Next Friday, April 2d, is the time of the Jewish Passover.

Obituary.

Died, in Turnbridge, Vt., March 4th, Emma R., daughter of Eld. A. and R. Cleveland, aged two years and six months.

Her loss is most deeply felt. When we gazed on her healthful form, her sparkling eye and blooming cheek, we could not think she would be called away so soon. But ere we were aware the Destroyer came and took the loved one away. She was lovely both in form and features [illegible] grand-parents, and a solace to their declining years. But, alas! how soon death came and claimed her for his own.

Dear Emma is dead; yet she will live again. Mourning friends, grieve no more. Ere long you will meet your loved one, where parting will never be known, tears will be wiped away, and death be lost in victory.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF EMMA.

Oh! how lovely thou art sleeping
In thy little narrow bed,
Many hearts are o'er thee beating,
Many tears are o'er thee shed.

Thou hast left us, dearest Emma,
Thou hast left fond hearts to mourn,
But we hope again to meet thee
On the resurrection morn.

Lonely we do feel without thee,
Oh, how long the hours do seem
Since from us thou hast departed!
Yet it seems so like a dream.

We shall miss thy childish prattle,
That did weary hours beguile,
We shall miss thy fond caresses,
And thy gentle, loving smile.

Friends, may angels guard and guide you
To that fairer, happier land,
Where you'll meet your darling Emma—
Meet a blest, unbroken band.

[Herald please copy.]

F. M. W.

Died in East Kingston, Feb. 28th, of lung fever, Alice Ervilla, daughter of Ezra M. and Betsey Currier, aged three years and seven months.

Death has come and rudely severed
This one tie of life so dear;
Fondest hopes have fled forever,
With his silent presence here.

Cherished one, thou wert most lovely!
Joyous, gay, in health's short hour,
But, like some sweet beauteous blossom,
Thou art now a faded flower.

Mourning friends, oh cease thy weeping,
Cease with deep regret to sigh;
When the trumpet wakes the sleeping,
She shall live no more to die!

For the Crisis.

CHRISTIAN, BE EARNEST!

Go take that sinner by the hand,
Give him a friendly greeting;
Go make him feel and understand
His day of grace is fleeting.

Perhaps at first he may you tell
'Tis all an idle story;
Remember, he who wins a soul
Shall shine like stars in glory.

Oh! may you then resort to prayer
With feelings most distressing;
Like Jacob may you wrestle there
Until you get the blessing.

Perhaps for weeks you'll have to pray
Before you feel the witness;—
At last springs up the dawn of day,
Just when you feel the weakest.

The sinner's heart is moved at last,
His diet grows more loathsome;
In restlessness his nights are passed,
His days they grow more lonesome.

Yes, friendless in this world he feels
With every friend but Jesus;
He half resolves he'll try to pray
To him who says he'll hear us!

But what's the cause of all these pangs?
Within himself he's saying,—
For him in earnest all the while
Some christian man's been praying.

A firm resolve at last he makes,
He prays awhile—then ceases;
That soft, sweet voice forgiveness speaks,—
His praying turns to praises.

Now, Christian, see you've gained the day,
Go take another subject;
You'll conquer in the self same way,
If that's your only object.

And you shall have a starry crown,
Surpassing far in glory
Any by earthly monarchs worn,
If you keep meek and lowly.

Ah! yes, the meek the promise have,
This earth they shall inherit;
When we have done all we can do,
Yet nothing still we merit.

Rest.

To the traveler who has been long upon the dusty road; whose way has been over the sandy desert; whose eye has seen the gleaming plain a world of reddening heat, and often been deceived by the splendid mirage, in which fancy painted the flowing, limpid river, bordered by its line of beautiful trees, or the pebble-bottomed lake in its deep shade,—to him rest is sweet. To the mariner who has been long upon the boisterous sea; whose storm-beaten soul has not lost the attractions of home, though he may have been harbored snugly in foreign ports,—has had no real rest while he was upon the continuous voyage. But once in the haven from which he sailed; once in the quiet vale, where stands the brown cot by the dark mountain, he is safe—he rests.

So with the laborer. His rest comes when his work is done—the "burden and heat of the day" over—the sun sunk below the hill—the softened gloom of night shading the field of his toil,—then he rests. To the christian, as a weary, toil-spent, travel-worn pilgrim, "there is no rest here."

This, for a moment, shall be our theme. I see many in the different fields of labor, who seem never to rest. That mother, who follows on, day after day, with the toil of the family, even if there is a competence with each one's wants to be attended to. The day breaks, and the evening closes over the same care-worn, toiling mother,—a name we all love, yet a name and a being serving us more faithfully and fully than any other. The year comes and goes. Still she is at her labor, till I often find some one gone to a quiet sleep in the grave. Often, too, the question, "When will you rest?" is answered—"Never, on earth—forever in heaven!" Oh the weary life, the toil of those who, in addition to care, must work to gain sustenance for those dear beings, without whom life would seem to be lost! How my heart has bled when such an one has gone down with the cold tide of death; or some pet of the flock has been torn away from the arms of affection. "When shall I rest?" said one of the Lord's [illegible] when the dearest, loveliest lamb of all was buried out of sight.

The minister who follows the Lord's imperative direction to go and preach, will find his rest is not on earth. He [illegible] the joy of labor, the enjoyment of battle strife is his, with labor increasing, infirmity coming on, health failing. It may be a solace that "our rest shall be together in the dust;" but better, brighter far to feel that rest shall be in fields of paradise, when the whole scene of this world is past.

Now, christian, you will struggle on—battle manfully! The desert-blaze widens in the retreating distance. The dust-cloud rolls back upon the well-nigh finished journey. The storm-wrecked bark nears the gladdening shore. The tempests of time will die away, as the cloud lifts from the angry waters. One thing remains to you all. "The keeping of a Sabbath remains to the people of God!" Toil on, weary laborer, the sun of time will set, the morn of another day will rise on you soon! Work while the day lasts! and consider the peaceful, quiet, and yet joyous delight of the resurrection as the only true repose. If we must go to the grave, as many have gone before,—"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. . . They shall rest from their labors." Rest—never till then!

And ye, oppressed with sorrow, or from the wickedness of men, opposition, persecution, slander, backbiting, mischief-making, remember that soon the wicked will "cease from troubling and the weary be at rest."

The church of God, in all ages, has been through seas of trouble. Whether we suffer now the same sort of afflictions or not, we may be companions of those who thus suffered; and being of that number another scripture applies, revealing an event of most sublime attractions, most awful and yet delightful fascination to the pilgrim brother of the Immortal King;—"To you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire." The traveler, outworn with life's pilgrimage dreary, will repose then, with redeemed saints, and with the Lord of heaven and earth, which shall be made new, when his rest "shall be glorious."

For the Crisis.

"Watch and Pray."

I. Watch.

1. Watch against the love and allurements of the world.

2. Watch against the besetments of the flesh.

3. Watch against the temptations of the Devil.

4. Watch against the love of money.

5. Watch against your evil passions, of pride, ambition, envy, anger, &c., to the end of the catalogue.

6. And last, but not least, I entreat you to watch for opportunities of doing good.

II. Pray.

1. It is the duty of every christian to pray without ceasing. Yes, to pray with all prayer and supplication, in the Spirit.

2. Sinners are required by the God of heaven and earth to watch the motions of the Holy Spirit, and attend to the concerns of their precious souls' salvation.

Remark.—Let us always obey the voice of God, and all will be well.

The Inheritance.

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth. Matt. 5: 5.

We are told by some that the inheritance here spoken of, is the good things of earth. If this is so, why does the Psalmist say in Ps. 37: 11, "But the meek shall inherit the earth;" 18 ver.,—"And their inheritance shall be forever;" 22 ver.,—"For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth;" 29 ver.,—"The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever;" 34 ver.,—"Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it?"

In looking over the above Scripture it does not say that the righteous do inherit the earth, but they shall; so that the inheritance is yet future. It is evident that the new earth spoken of in Isa. 65: 17, and 2 Pet. 3: 14, is the inheritance. Then all that have died in faith, not having received the promises, will get their inheritance together with the living saints, when the Lord comes. Also the whole house of Israel, spoken of by Ezek. 37: 11-14; when the Lord shall open the graves of his people, and place them in their own land. Thank the Lord, that we have got out from the fog of spiritualism, and can see by the word of the Lord that [illegible] inheritance is not beyond the [illegible]

when the Lord Jesus comes with his saints, and they shall dwell with him on the earth. May the Savior's prayer be answered in our behalf, and we be sanctified through the truth, kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

From Eld. P. B. Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—Since writing you last, I have attended the Quarterly Meeting in Vermillionville, which was an interesting time—being the first, I believe, ever introduced among the Adventists of the West, if not the first in America. It is believed by our brethren, that they promise much in connection with our Annual Conference, and Conference of Evangelists, for the carrying forward of the scattered, but growing interest of the Advent cause in the great West. The next Quarterly Conference of that district is appointed to meet at Shabbona Grove, April 1st, and continue over the following Sabbath.

On my return from Vermillionville I received an invitation from the 2d Congregational church in the city of Ottawa, to give them a more thorough and systematic course of lectures on the prophecies, &c., which I did, occupying three weeks more in that place; during which time our meetings were much more largely attended than when there before. The result of these labors I cannot now fully state, but the meetings were interesting. A number were, I trust, thoroughly converted, some backsliders reclaimed; and yet more than all this, there seemed to be a general interest among the thinking, religious portion of community to search the Scriptures and see if these things are true. The Rev. Mr. Whittlesey, of the first Congregational church, preached two discourses in opposition to our views, in which he confessed the signs of the times indicated the seventh millenary was soon to be ushered in, and to him it was a question of great importance, as to what the Scriptures declare is to constitute the millenium. To these discourses I made a reply. Furthermore, Mr. Stone, principal of the schools of Ottawa, made some mistaken statements concerning our views through the High School Journal, to which I replied through the Ottawa Free Trader. From my article in the Free Trader some extracts were made, and with sundry criticisms and interesting statements,—such as that the christian people of Ottawa were professing to be much enlightened by your lectures, which he, the writer, thought very strange,—was sent to the Congregational Herald of Chicago, which in turn drew forth some strictures and misstatements from the Editor of the Herald.

So, in brief, the leaven works. The sober-minded and honest-hearted, who are not afraid to think for themselves, are in almost every direction in the West waking up to a candid investigation of the Scriptures, and especially of the prophecies; while bigots, as in every persecuting age, blindly oppose.

I have also spent some time in Sweetland—this State—where Bro. J. Covell, formerly of Ohio, resides; and, as the result of our effort, have organized an interesting church. Purpose organizing a Quarterly Conference in this region soon. But, alas, what can we do with so little help! May the Lord be pleased to send forth more laborers into this wide-spread, promising place. The winter has gone, and though I have averaged more than a discourse a day since the 19th of Nov., I feel I have accomplished but little to what I desired. More anon.

Yours,

P. B. Morgan.

Wilton Junction, Iowa, Mar. 15th, 1858.

From Sr. M. A. Cotton.

Dearly Beloved:—It is with a sense of my own unworthiness that I attempt to address a line to you, but the Lord is good. His mercy endures forever! The Lord is reviving his work throughout the land, gathering in the remnant of his people, preparatory to the ushering in of his everlasting Kingdom.

I sometimes have such a sense of the life we ought and must live, if we would gain the kingdom, I am almost ready to give up. But then I cast my eye toward Calvary, and behold that lovely victim bleeding, groaning, and dying for sinners, and Hope lends her buoyant wings and I soar above doubts, fears and temptations. Surely our reward is great enough; a land free from sorrow, pain and death.

As I look over my list of friends, I find many a loved form has been laid away in the cold grave. But I look forward through tear-dimmed eyes to a glorious future, when they shall come forth clothed with immortality, and oh! I must be prepared to meet them.

My daily prayer is for more of the Holy Spirit, that I may be entirely dead to the world; that I may labor more in the vineyard of the Lord. If I know my own heart, it is to sit meekly at the feet of Jesus, and, with his word in my hand, learn of him.

Marion A. Cotton.

Pittsfield, Mass.

From Bro. G. L. Hart.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—It is indeed cheering to hear through the Crisis that there are yet some who are looking for redemption in Israel. Though disappointment has saddened the hearts of many, yet the words of the prophet are true,—"It will surely come, it will not tarry." Blessed consolation to the old soldiers of the cross, who have passed from disappointment to disappointment, toil worn and weary, to know that "he that is to come, will come, and will not tarry." They have, indeed, lived by their faith. The Lord help them to continue on and give them the spirit and mind of Christ, that they may "give the household of faith their portion of meat in due season."

The gospel dispensation is fast winding up. Important events are rushing on to our view. Daniel's troubles are increasing; infidelity and spiritual delusion are enticing thousands down the awful vortex of ruin. All who have the mind of Christ can see that nature gathers blackness. Thrones totter beneath the influence of anarchy and misrule. God's ancient people are making a mighty effort to regain the land of their fathers. As I view it, England, Prussia, and the United States, the three governments that protect this people, will help to reinstate them in their native land, and build their ancient cities. Now I see how the nations are gathered in the valley of Jehosaphat. The beast connected with the false prophet, which I think is Papacy, will be opposed to such measures: therefore the result will be the gathering of the nations for the final conflict, in which the King of kings and Lord of lords will be a participant. Here the scarlet-colored beast will make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is the King of kings and Lord of lords. Glory to God! soon the morning of fair Zion's glory will dawn! Ere many months shall roll around nature convulsed in the agonies of her dying throes, will shake beneath the tread of Almighty God. His dear children will come forth from their dusty beds, and with a shout of exultation rise to meet their Lord. "Soon the pilgrims will be there." Yours waiting for the King,

G. L. Hart.

From Bro. H. Grew.

Dear Bro. Grant:—In one of our daily prayer meetings to-day, I read the brief account in your last paper of the marvelous grace of God to perishing souls in your city. It was an encouragement to many to praise his holy and blessed name, and to pour out our hearts before him, that his mercy in a precious Redeemer may overflow the land. With adoring gratitude we exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" What joy has there been, and now is, in heaven among the angels of God over repenting sinners. O let us ascribe all the glory to his holy name, and let the prayers of saints continue to ascend, as a cloud of incense, perfumed with the intercession of our great High Priest, that the blessing of God's converting and sanctifying Spirit, (infinitely richer than all earthly treasures,) may be continued throughout the length and breadth of the land. A deep interest and solicitude for the eternal welfare of dying men, appears still to characterize our meetings, while love to christian brethren of every name is flowing from heart to heart. Our united songs of holy praise ascend to the Father of mercies and to Him who hath loved us and given himself for us.

O that we may solemnly realize the high responsibility resting on every christian, at such a time as this, to put on the whole armor of God, and go forth to fight the holy battle of the Lord in the strength of Jehovah, who is leading us to victory.

Yours in christian love,

Henry Grew.

What's the News?

Bro. Grant:—I clipped the following lines from the New York Daily Tribune of March 13th. They are so well adapted to this present time, will you please insert them in the columns of the Crisis.

C. Goodrich.

WHAT'S THE NEWS?

Whene'er we meet you always say,
What's the news? What's the news?
Pray what's the order of the day?
What's the news? What's the news?
Oh, I have got good news to tell!
My Savior has done all things well,
And triumph'd over death and hell—
That's the news! That's the news!

The Lamb was slain on Calvary—
That's the news! That's the news!
To set a world of sinners free—
That's the news! That's the news!
'Twas there his precious blood was shed,
But now he's risen from the dead—
That's the news! That's the news!

To heaven above the conqueror's gone—
That's the news! That's the news!
He's passed triumphant to the throne—
That's the news! That's the news!
And on that throne he will remain
Until as Judge he comes again,
Attended by a dazzling train—
That's the news! That's the news!

His work's reviving all around—
That's the news! That's the news!
And many have redemption found—
That's the news! That's the news!
And since their souls have caught the flame,
They shout hosannah to His name,
And all around they spread his fame—
That's the news! That's the news!

The Lord has pardoned all my sin—
That's the news! That's the news!
I feel the witness now within—
That's the news! That's the news!
And since He took my sins away,
And taught me how to watch and pray,
I'm happy now from day to day—
That's the news! That's the news!

And Christ the Lord can save me now—
That's the news! That's the news!
Your sinful hearts he can renew—
That's the news! That's the news!
This moment, if for sins you grieve,
This moment, if you do believe,
A full acquittal you'll receive—
That's the news! That's the news!

And then if any one should say—
What's the news? What's the news?
Oh, tell them you've begun to pray—
That's the news! That's the news!
That you have joined the conquering band;
And now with joy at God's command,
You're marching to the better Land—
That's the news! That's the news!

Frost on the Pavement.

We have all studied with delight the exquisite engravings which the frost makes on our windows, with their delicately-wrought pencilings, and their strange and various devices. Every little child has whiled away the early hours of some winter morning in trying to decipher its curious inscriptions, until the envious old sun looked in and spoiled the amusement.

But this same frost-artist has a thousand other modes of operation quite as beautiful as this. On our way to church one bright, cold Sabbath morning, our attention was attracted to a new wonder. Every stone that formed the sidewalks was covered with a rich and delicate engraving. There were scrolls and leaves in the most graceful positon and faultless arrangement, each pattern complete in itself and different from all the rest. No artist of the rarest genius ever dreamed of anything more beautiful.

"And it was the Sabbath day" when the Lord of the Sabbath opened before us this source of wonder and pure delight. It was a simple emanation from His power and love, as real, and perhaps as direct, as when He anointed the eyes of the blind man, and restored his sight. It was well that the festal day should be honored by Nature's most magnificent array. Why should we not associate all that is most beautiful on earth with the thought of our heavenly home and of Him who has gone thither to prepare a place for us?

"For it may be that all which lends
The soul an upward impulse here,
With a diviner beauty blends,
And greets us in a holier sphere."

Yet our low thought is apt to inquire: To what purpose is this waste? This delicately-wrought tissue thrown over the coarse stones to be destroyed by the footprints of thousands, even if it were not dissolved by the first hour of direct sunshine; what end is to be accomplished by such profusion of creative magnificence? In our poverty, we save our beautiful things for special display, our refinement for distinguished occasions, our best thoughts for a time when the expression of them will bring us the increase of admiration. God lavishes the treasures of his creative thought on the high places and the low alike, in the common pathways of man, and in the lonely wilderness, unvisited by any intelligent creature who could perceive and enjoy the beauty of his handiwork. Beyond the realm of our feeble vision, vast worlds and solar systems move on in their majestic course, sustained and guided by His omnipotent hand. And equally below the sphere of our coarse and rude perceptions, the minutest crystals, the little blossoms, far too small to be perceived by human vision, the [illegible] plumes of a butterfly's wing, are all finished and perfected beyond the most delicate conceptions of human art.

Thus we see that the agencies which God employs in the natural world, perform their allotted tasks with the minutest exactness. And in performing the work which he has committed to us, in the various relations of social life, the same perfect fidelity may be a model for our imitation. In our little corner of this great world of humanity, let us maintain order and beauty, and the sunlight of a cheerful and loving disposition. Let every act, and word, and look, be gentle and refined. Let every habit, from the greatest to the most trivial, tend toward the promotion of purity and truth in ourselves and in those with whom we dwell. Thus alone can we hope for that final commendation from the Master, "Well done, thou good servant, because thou hast been faithful in a very little, I will make thee ruler over many things."—Adv. and Guard.

Words Fitly Spoken.

The minds of impenitent persons are now in an unusual degree susceptible to religious truth. The providence of God in temporal things, and his grace in spiritual things, have profoundly impressed the thought of God, and of the relations of the soul to God and to the eternal world, upon many who have hitherto been indifferent to religious topics. Many an impenitent person now seeks the place of prayer or the society of christians, in the hope that something will be said to meet his own spiritual wants. How important then is it that christians should watch for opportunities to speak with the impenitent upon personal religion. The christian should take it for granted that every one feels some interest in his own salvation. He should approach the impenitent with that affectionate confidence which wins even the careless and the hardened. He should speak of religion from the fullness of his own heart, aiming to adapt his words to the precise condition of the mind he seeks to influence. A friend sends us a case in point.

"A christian merchant, walking down Broadway on one of those gloomy days of the last autumn, (days which the commercial world at least cannot soon forget,) met a friend who, in common with all business men, was struggling to keep up good heart, and was hoping almost against hope for a brighter day, and who had just followed to his last resting-place a very dear friend. It was the first time that they had met since this event, and both hearts were full. Words of consolation were vain, but the christian, feeling that at that moment, if ever, he must commend the religion he professed to his afflicted friend, and point him to Christ, the only true source of consolation, said to him with emotion that he could not control, 'My dear sir, I know all, and no one of your friends sympathizes with you more sincerely than myself; but I can only say to you, Look upward, turn to God in this your extremity. Will you at once resolve to be His?' With an expression never to be forgotten, and with a pressure of the hand which seemed to carry in it his very heart, he replied 'I will;' and he kept the promise: he sought and found, and is now rejoicing in hope. A word fitly spoken, how good is it."—Independent.

Come! Come!! Come!!!

LET HIM THAT HEARETH SAY, COME.

It is the last dispensation of the Spirit; the closing exhortation of the Bible. Let him that heareth say, Come. As you go out from these privileged meetings, where you have heard the joyful sound, say, every man to his neighbor, come—come and see what God is doing; come and witness the triumphs of grace; come and hear, and your soul shall live.

1. The invitation is easy; it requires no learning nor eloquence—it is only, Come.

2. It will discharge an obligation resting upon all to those around them. You may not selfishly enjoy these great privileges. You must bring others, that they also may be partakers of them.

3. It cannot be without effect. Though they put their fingers in their ears, and will not hearken, yet you will have made a lodgement in the conscience and the heart which they cannot shake off. They cannot say, I have not been invited—I feel no responsibility.

4. Say, Come, and you fulfill the great mission, which is to be useful. You will cause them to reflect. You may convert a sinner from the error of his ways, and save a soul from death.

5. You may secure to yourself happiness unspeakable, for time and eternity. Oh the joy of leading souls to Christ! What a meeting it will be in heaven, when one saved spirit shall say to another, you said to me, Come, and I went and found salvation.

Reader! To-day is yours, to-morrow is uncertain; but if it dawns upon you, say to all around you, Come. Parent! say to your child, Come. Man of business! say to those in your employ, Come. Young man! say to your friends and companions, Come. Citizen! say to the stranger, Come. Christian! go out into the streets and alleys, and say to the poor, and the blind, and the halt, Come and welcome. There is room for all. Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. O the joyful sound! Come; let him that is athirst come, and take of the water of life freely.—Published by Com. on Devotional Meetings of the N. Y. Y. M. Christ. Asso.

For the Crisis.

"OH! I LONG TO GO."

Oh! I long to go to those realms of light,
And enter the city all cloudless and bright,
Where the saints shall stand 'neath its sparkling dome,
And feast on the joys of that Eden home;
Where the towering walls of the Temple ascend,
And the joy-bursting strains of the ransomed shall blend.

Oh! I long to go where the curse shall cease,
And enter the portals of love and peace,
And join in the anthems that swell on the breeze,
With odors perfumed from the ambrosial trees;
Where the saints in robes all immortal shall stand
On the plains of Eden, the fair promised land.

The Time.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We hasten to lay before you the evidence, as we believe, of the coming of Jesus this year. The following is an argument on the 2300 days, which we beg of you in the name of our Blessed Master to read and weigh carefully before deciding, as no one can rightly judge of a matter until they have first read or heard the evidences.

It is well known that Dionysius in about A. D. 527, established the birth of Christ, or vulgar era, in 4714 of the Julian period. But the correctness of his calculations on this point has been called in question by most of the modern chronologers, and they have, therefore, tried to fix his birth four years earlier; which had much to do with our fixing the time of the coming of Jesus in 1854: for it was clearly established in the '54 argument, that our Savior was crucified the same year in which Tiberius Cesar died, which, according to modern chronology, was A. D. 27. But if the vulgar era is correct, Tiberius could not have died earlier than A. D. 41, since those who fix his death in A. D. 27, also fix the birth of Christ four years before A. D. 1 of the vulgar era; therefore it is not necessary for me to prove that Tiberius died 41 years after the actual birth of Christ, since all modern and ancient historians agree perfectly in this matter.

This difference of 4 years in regard to the birth of our Savior, also exists in regard to the founding of Rome, battle of Actium, &c., and indeed runs through the whole length of chronology.

The battle of Actium, by modern chronologists, is put down to B. C. 31, that is, 31 years before A. D. 1 of the christian era, but 27 years before the actual birth of Christ. Now, since both ancient and modern historians agree perfectly on these points, namely, that the battle of Actium occurred 27 years before the birth of Christ, and that Tiberius died 41 years after his birth, we may, therefore, dismiss this part of the subject. The question now turns upon this—is there any way of arriving at the truth in regard to these 4 years in dispute between ancient and modern historians and chronologists? We believe there is, and that we shall be fully able, by undeniable facts, to establish the vulgar era to be correct, and thus fix the death of Tiberius in A. D. 41; in which year also, it will be shown hereafter, that Jesus was crucified, as marking the end of the 69 weeks, or 483 days of the 2300.

Dr. Jarvis, in his learned work on the "Chronological Introduction to the History of the Church," (p. 255,) says: "To ascertain the years in which Julius Cesar and Augustus died, is to settle two of the most important points in chronology." We are informed by two ancient and reliable historians, (according to Dr. Jarvis, p. 244,) that in the year, and just before the death of Augustus, there was an eclipse of the sun. That all may judge for themselves on this point, we give the following extracts from those authors.

"At the celebration of his (Augustus') birth-day this year, (Sept. 23d, says Diodorus Siculus,) a deranged person seated himself in the chair of Julius Cesar, took his crown, and put it on his own head. This to Augustus seemed a portent of his own death, and such it truly was; for, in the following summer, in which Sextus Appelius and Sextus Pampeius were consuls, Augustus went into Campania, and died at Nola. There was a total eclipse of the sun, and a great part of the heavens seemed to be on fire, and blood red comets were seen."

Says Eusbeius, "Defectio solis facta, et Augustus mortuus est"—an eclipse of the sun takes place, and Augustus dies. Here, then, we have the fact stated by two unquestionable historians, that just before the death of Augustus, there was an eclipse of the sun. This circumstance, it will be seen hereafter, will enable us to fix the year in which Augustus died. Before going further, however, we will notice one other circumstance of great importance, to enable us to fix this point, viz., an eclipse of the moon, which, "according to Tacitus and Dio, took place after the army in Panonia had heard of the death of Augustus, and the accession of Tiberius." Says Dr. Jarvis, (pp. 250, 251,)

"Before we leave this subject, it may be important to notice an eclipse of the moon, which, according to Tacitus and Dio, took place after the army in Pannonia had heard of the death of Augustus and the accession of Tiberius. The first of these historians relates, that, on receiving this intelligence, Julius Blaesus, the general, granted a suspension of military duty. This relaxation of discipline led to a fierce and violent mutiny. After some days, a calm was produced, by sending the general's son to Rome, to obtain redress of their grievances; but the return of some detached companies from Nauportus, the modern Layback, renewed the commotion, and redoubled its violence. As soon as Tiberius heard of these transactions, he sent his son Drusus, accompanied by Sejanus and two pretorian cohorts, with a body of cavalry and some other troops, to quell the insurrection. For some time, the arrival of Drusus only increased the violence of the mutiny; nor was it checked till the ECLIPSE took place. * * * Dio briefly speaks of the revolt in Pannonia, and then adds, that on the arrival of Drusus with the pretorian guards, the army were in great commotion, because he said nothing to them certain. Some of his retinue were wounded, and he himself was guarded by night lest he should escape. In this situation, having their imagination excited by an eclipse of the moon, they became so dejected, that no mischief was done by them, and they again sent messengers to Tiberius."

It will be seen from the foregoing, that we have two eclipses, one of the sun, which took place at the death of Augustus, and that of the moon, which occurred a sufficient length of time after he died (Aug. 19,) to allow,

First, the news of Augustus' death, and the accession of Tiberius, to be sent to Pannonia, a distance of at least (says Dr. Jarvis) 700 miles.

Second, that, after "some days" the news of the revolt of the army in Pannonia, to be sent by the general's son to Rome.

Third, after several meetings of the Senate, according to Tacitus, after the arrival of the general's son at Rome, and the time required to fit out a powerful body of infantry and cavalry for such a journey, the army to travel from Rome to Pannonia, a few days after which, the eclipse of the moon took place. The length of time required for all these circumstances, will hereafter be shown as we advance. That the death of Augustus did not take place in A. D. 14, according to the generally received chronology, is proved from the fact that there was no eclipse of the sun seen in Europe that year. This is not only stated by Petavius, (according to Dr. Jarvis,) and by Dr. Jarvis himself, but is shown to be correct by the following table of eclipses of the sun and moon, taken from the "great work of the learned Benedictines," "entitled the art of verifying dates," by M. Pingree, "and approved by a committee of the French Royal Academy of Science." This table, it will be seen, covers the whole length of the disputed ground, beginning with A. D. 13. The following is a literal translation from the French.

ECLIPSES OF THE SUN.

A. D. 13. 28 April, at 7 1-2 evening, small part of Europe at the west and north-west, 52.

A. D. 14. 18 April, at 12 1-2 day. Asia, north and north-east.

A. D. 15. 2 September, at 3 1-2 morning. Asia, central.

A. D. 16. 2 August, at 4 morning. Asia, south-west, central.

A. D. 17. 15 February, 10 morning. Europe, Africa, Asia, at the west, central.

A. D. 18. 1 July, at 7 1-2 evening. Europe, north-west and north.

A. D. 19. 21 June, at midday. Europe, Africa, Asia, at the west, central.

A. D. 20. 10 June, at 12 1-2 day. Asia, and south-east.

3 December, at 11 morning. Europe, Africa, Asia, to the west, central.

A. D. 21. 21 November, at 2 morning. Asia, north-east.

ECLIPSES OF THE MOON.

A. D. 13. 7 October, at 7 3-4 evening, greatest 3 1-4.

A. D. 14. 27 September, at 5 morning.

A. D. 15. 24 March, at 8 morning. 16 September at 8 evening.

A. D. 17. 30 January, at 8 evening. 27 July, at midday.

A. D. 18. 20 January, at 8 morning. 16 July, at 3 1-2 evening.

A. D. 19. 9 January, at 11 1-2 evening. 5 July, at 4 evening.

A. D. 20. 25 May, at 12 day. [illegible] shadow on the margin of the perfect shadow of the eclipse.

19 November at 8 morning.

A. D. 21. 15 May, at 4 morning. 8 November, at 7 1-2 morning.

By a careful examination of the foregoing table, it will be seen there was no visible eclipse of the sun in Europe from A. D. 13 to A. D. 17, which proves that Augustus could not have died in any of the intervening years. The eclipse of the moon, in A. D. 14, took place on the 27th of September, only thirty-eight days after the death of Augustus, Aug. 19; a period, as Dr. Jarvis shows, entirely too short for the news of his death to be sent to Pannonia, and for the general's son, after receiving the news, to be sent to Rome, and for a powerful army to march from Rome back again to Pannonia.

In a note at the bottom of page 255, Dr. Robinson states that, "the usual day's march of the best appointed armies, both in ancient and in modern times, is not estimated at higher than fourteen English, or twelve geographical miles." "He refers to Major Rennells' comparative Geography of Western Asia, 1 p. 54, as his authority, and then adds"—"I am informed by Prussian officers of rank, that the usual march of their armies is three German miles a day, equal to twelve geographical miles of sixty to the degree. Forced marches are reckoned at five German miles a day. In either case the army rests every fourth day." Five German miles are equal to twenty-three English miles. From this calculation, it would have taken the Roman army thirty-five days to travel the 700 miles from Rome to Pannonia, even at a forced march; and that, too, by making allowance of only every seventh day for rest, instead of "every fourth." This would leave only three days of the thirty-eight for the two preceding journeys to and from Pannonia to Rome, with the several intervening days; which, taken in connection with the fact that there was no eclipse of the sun that year, forever disproves the possibility of the death of Augustus in A. D. 14. Dr. Jarvis, seeing this fact, undertook in the next place to fix the death of Augustus in the preceding year, A. D. 13. He says there was an eclipse of the sun in that year, the 28th of April, seen only in a small part of Europe, to the west and north-west of latitude 52; and he refers to the "Art of verifying dates, by M. Pingree," as proof of his statements.

By referring to the foregoing table, it will be seen that Dr. Jarvis was correct; but he must be mistaken in regard to this being the eclipse spoken of by Dio and Eusebius, as taking place at, or just before the death of Augustus. First, it took place too long before August 19; it being about four months prior to that event. Second, as Petavius states, according to Dr. Jarvis, "that in the year 13, there was no eclipse of the sun visible at Rome, or in the Spanish or Gallic provinces." Dr. Jarvis endeavors to evade this objection, raised by Petavius, by saying, that it was sufficient, if seen "by any of the Roman soldiery." This statement, we think, is quite too far fetched; since, if the testimonies of Dio and Eusebius are to be credited, the eclipse must have been seen at Rome, or at Nola, where Augustus died. But, we ask, where were the Roman soldiery at this time? Why, they were in Rome, the Spanish and Gallic provinces, and in Pannonia; the latter place being at least 700 miles in an eastern direction from Rome, and, therefore, so much further from where the eclipse was visible. Now, as the eclipse in A. D. 13 was not visible in Rome, or in either of the aforementioned provinces; therefore, it could not be the one mentioned by the historians.

Again, this eclipse took place at 7.30 in the evening, which, on the 28th of April, was nearly three quarters of an hour after sunset. And if we allow about two hours for its duration, it would scarcely have commenced before the sun was down, which, evidently, was the case from its only being visible at the extreme north-west of Europe; and, therefore, would scarcely have been noticed by people living in those parts, and, certainly, could not have been seen by the Roman soldiers.

We will now turn our attention to another equally powerful argument against the position of Dr. Jarvis, based on the eclipse of the moon. This eclipse, this year, (13) took place the 7th of October, at 7.45 in the evening, forty-eight days after August 19, (the day of Augustus' death.) We will now, therefore, see if the events spoken of as occurring between his death and the eclipse of the moon following, could have been accomplished in these forty-eight days. We have previously shown that 35 days of the 48 were required for the march of the army from Rome to Pannonia, which would leave only 15 days for the news of the death of Augustus to be sent to the army in Pannonia, and the news of the revolt of the army to be sent back to Rome. Dio says, "the death of Augustus was not immediately made known; for Livia, fearing lest there should be some innovation, because Tiberius was still in Dalmatia, concealed it until his arrival." "Such," he adds, "is the statement of the greater part of the historians and those most worthy of credit." The announcement, therefore, of the death of Augustus, could not have been made under, at least, two days; which, taken from the 15 remaining days of the 48, would leave thirteen days for the two journeys to and from Pannonia to Rome. This would take, at the incredible distance of seventy miles a day, twenty days. In addition to this, Tacitus states that, after the news of the death of Augustus was received in Pannonia, several days elapsed before the general's son was sent with the news of the revolt of the army to Rome; and that, after he arrived, several meetings of the Senate took place before the revolt was announced. And then, the fitting out of "a powerful body of infantry and cavalry," for a journey of 700 miles, would necessarily occupy several days longer: and, in addition to this, the eclipse (according to Tacitus) did not take place for several days after the army arrived in Pannonia. It will readily be seen, from these statements, that fourteen days would have been an exceedingly short time for all these several delays, or intervals, to which, if we add the twenty days before mentioned, it would make thirty-four days in all; which exceeds the thirteen days by twenty-one. And even if we were to make no allowance at all for these fourteen days, the two journeys to, and from Pannonia to Rome, could not have been accomplished in the thirteen days. So that, putting it in the very best light possible to the position of Dr. Jarvis, the events named could not have taken place in the forty-eight days. And when we, in connection with this fact, take into the account that there was no eclipse of the sun seen at Rome, or by any of the Roman soldiers in A. D. 13, his position is entirely inadmissible. The foregoing, we think, demonstrates that Augustus could not have died in A. D. 13, or 14.

As many suppose that the sun set in eclipse at the battle of Actium, B. C. 31; we will just say for the benefit of such, that there was no eclipse of the sun seen in Europe, Asia, or Africa, in that, or the succeeding year. We make this statement with the table of all the eclipses, from the "Art of verifying dates," before us as we write. The first eclipse of the sun which occurred from before B. C. 31, visible in Europe, Asia, or Africa, took place B. C. 29, the 5th of January, at 7 in the morning: but this eclipse occurred, not only too early in the morning, but also too early in the year, by several months, since the battle of Actium was fought in September. The next visible eclipse of the sun after B. C. 29, took place the 23d of October, B. C. 26. This eclipse, however, occurred about one month too late, and yet this is the latest point that has been fixed for the battle of Actium, by any historian that I know of. On what authority it is stated that there was an eclipse of the sun seen at the battle of Actium, I am not aware: but if there is any such history, it proves most conclusively that the battle of Actium did not take place B. C. 31; since, as before stated, there was no eclipse of the sun seen in that year. If the vulgar era is correct, then the battle must have occurred B. C. 27, where there is not wanting very good authority to place it; and, indeed, where it must have occurred, since we shall prove conclusively, as we think, the vulgar era to be correct.

We have now we trust shown, to the satisfaction of all, that the death of Augustus could not have occurred in A. D. 13 or 14; therefore, we shall proceed to demonstrate when his death did actually take place. By examining the foregoing table, we shall find that there was no eclipse of the sun seen in any part of Europe from A. D. 13 to 17. The eclipse is given in that year as follows,—"15 February, 10 morning, Europe, Africa, Asia, to the west, central." That this eclipse could not be the one mentioned by Dio and Eusebius, as having taken place at the death of Augustus, is sufficiently proved from the fact, that it occurred over six months before that event. And further, there was no corresponding eclipse of the moon following. There were two eclipses of the moon that year, but both occurred before August 19th: which, taken in connection with the eclipse of the sun being over six months too early, clearly demonstrates that Augustus could not have died in A. D. 17. If the vulgar era is correct, then we shall find the eclipse mentioned by Dio and Eusebius, in A. D. 18. The eclipse of the sun in that year is given as follows,—"A. D. 18, 1 July, 7 1-2 evening. Europe, north-west and north." This eclipse, it will be seen, occurred a little over a month before Augustus died, and corresponds exactly with the facts in history. It was also seen over the greater part of Europe, and, occurring so near his death, would naturally be mentioned in connection with that event. This was the only visible eclipse of the sun which occurred near August 19th, for several preceding years; and which proves, in connection with what we have before stated, that Augustus could not have died prior to that date. And when taking it in connection with the subsequent eclipse of the moon, as will be shown, is the only one that can be found anywhere in that region. This, however, is an exact fit, and, therefore, should satisfy all, as we think, in regard to the year in which Augustus died.

It will be seen by the foregoing table, that just four months and twenty days after August 19, that year, there was an eclipse of the moon, at 11 1-2 in the evening. This eclipse of the moon not only took place at the right time in the evening, but also, the right length of time after Augustus died, for the events before enumerated to have been accomplished, by allowing them to take their probable course. This could be shown by fair estimation and figures, if it was thought necessary. And, as no eclipses of the sun and moon for several subsequent years, agreeing with the statements of the historians, can be found, A. D. 18 is, therefore, not only the earliest, but also the latest point of time at which the death of Augustus could have occurred.

There was an eclipse of the sun visible in Europe in A. D. 19, the 21st of June, but it was followed by no eclipse of the moon for one year, five months, and twenty-eight days, except that which occurred at midday, A. D. 20, 25th of May, and, therefore, was not visible. And further, the eclipse that took place at Pannonia occurred, according to history, in the night. This settles the matter, so far as A. D. 19 is concerned. That Augustus could not have died in A. D. 20 or 21, is proved from the fact that there were no eclipses of the sun seen in any part of Europe before August 19, nor were there any corresponding eclipses of the moon; which is as far as we deem it necessary to carry the investigation of the eclipses, to settle the time of the death of Augustus.

Now since all history is unanimous in giving the reign of Tiberius Cesar to be twenty-two years and six months from the death of Augustus, he therefore must have died in the spring of A. D. 41. Having thus established the death of Tiberius in A. D. 41, we shall next introduce the following, from Josiah Litch's exposition, in 1842, of the 11th ch. of Dan. 22d verse; which we regard as conclusively proving that our Savior was crucified in the same year, and soon after Tiberius died.

"Yea also the PRINCE OF THE COVENANT." The prince of the covenant was broken, as well as the vile person just described, and soon after him. The prediction implies nothing less than this. But was it fulfilled thus? I answer, it was; and affords another irrefutable argument that Christ's personal ministry was at least seven years. The argument is as follows:

1. John was six months older than Christ. Luke 1: 36. John was by birth a priest, of the house of Aaron. Luke 1: 5. As such, the law required that he should not enter his ministry until thirty years of age. Numb. 4: 3; 1 Chron. 23: 3.

2. Jesus Christ, who was six months younger than John, began his ministry at the age of thirty. Luke 3: 23,—"And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age." Or, as Wesley renders the passage, "And Jesus was about thirty years of age when he began [his ministry;"] "his ministry" being inserted. John closed his ministry very soon after the baptism of Christ. So that, "when John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God, and saying, the TIME IS FULFILLED." Mark 1: 14, 15. John's ministry could not, therefore, have been much over six months.

3. John began his preaching in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cesar. Luke 3: 1, 2. If it was the last of the fifteenth year of Tiberius' reign, it would carry [illegible] into the sixteenth year of the same, [illegible] imprisonment, when Christ began his ministry.

4. Tiberius reigned twenty-two years, six months, and twenty-six days. Fifteen and a half years taken from it, as the time of John's imprisonment, would leave seven years for Tiberius after the beginning of Christ's ministry.

5. Herod the tetrarch of Galilee, (Luke 3: 1,) was at Jerusalem at the time of Christ's death. Luke 23: 5–11,—"And they were the more fierce, saying, he stirreth up the people, teaching throughout Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean. And as soon as he knew that he belonged to Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time. And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad, for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him. Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing. And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused him. And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate." This, let it be observed, was at the time of a Jewish passover.

6. The following extract from Josephus' Antiquities, (book 18, chap. 5., sec. 3,) will show that Herod was at Jerusalem to attend the Jewish passover, when he heard of the death of Tiberius Cesar.

"So Vitellus prepared to make war with Aretas, having with him two legions of armed men; he also took with him those of light armature and of the horsemen which belonged to them, and were drawn out of those kingdoms which were under the Romans, and made haste to Petra and came to Ptolemais. But as he was marching very busily and leading his army through Judea, the principal men met him and desired that he would not thus march through their land, for that the laws of their country would not permit them to overlook those images, of which there were a great many in their ensigns. So he was persuaded by what they said. Whereupon he ordered the army to march along the plain, while he himself, with Herod the Tetrarch and his friends, went up to Jerusalem to offer sacrifices to God, an ancient festival of the Jews then just approaching; and when he had been there and been honorably entertained by the Jews, he made a stay there for three days, within which time he deprived Jonathan of the High Priesthood, and gave it to his brother Theophilus."

This is the only account we have of Herod's being at Jerusalem at the time of a Jewish passover.

7. Tiberius died, according to chronologers, on the sixteenth of March. * * * So that there would be ample time by the 7th of April—the fourth day after the passover—to obtain the news of his death in Judea. From these facts the truth of the fulfillment of the 22d verse is established; and also, an additional argument is afforded that Christ's ministry was seven years.

Dear reader, what more need we to prove that Jesus was crucified in A. D. 41, than has been here given? Is this not the last point to which the crucifixion can be carried? We believe it is, since it is not only the last point to which it can be carried in history, but is also established by astronomical calculations which, like figures, "cannot lie." The 69 weeks, or 483 years which reach to Messiah the Prince, must have ended in A. D. 41, and by consequence, 1817 years as the balance of the 2300, after deducting the 483, must end this year, 1858, which, we fully believe, will bring the coming of Jesus the second time, without sin unto salvation. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

Letters
TO MY UNCONVERTED FRIENDS.

NUMBER TWO.

What is the reason that you are not devoted christians? Can you render one single excuse, that will stand the solemn test of the judgment, for not being humble followers of Christ? You have the same ability to turn to God and obey his truth, that you have to reject the Savior and his counsel. God says, "His servants ye are to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." The agonies of the dear Redeemer in the garden, when his sorrow was so intense, and his prayer so fervant, that tears, sweat and blood rolled down o'er his sacred bosom, were all for poor sinners like you! Oh! [illegible] tears of [illegible], timely repentance [illegible] from your eyes, for your cruel [illegible] against this all-merciful and compassionate Savior. Jesus has truly died for you; so if you only heartily believe in him, you shall not perish, but have everlasting life in the kingdom of God.

It is impossible for you to possess saving grace, and be happy in God, and retain your sins. If you were brought into the holy presence of God, while unreconciled to him, it would afford you no peace, no happiness. You can not see God in peace without holiness of heart. Hence, we must be converted, we must be born again, or regenerated, made new creatures in Christ Jesus, or never enter into the kingdom of God. The Lord is saying to every sinner who has not sinned away the day of grace; "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?"

If you, my dear unconverted friends, want to be saved, and happy, you must break off your sins by righteousness, (or doing right,) and your iniquity by turning to the Lord. Oh! be wise for yourselves and obey God. The sinner lengthens out his miseries by obstinately refusing to part with his sins. The longer a person continues in sin, the harder it will be for him to break off from them. And you know that God says plainly, "He that being often reproved, and hardeneth his neck, (or heart) shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.', Do not resist the counsel sent in mercy from above. You will need a Savior in a dying hour, and at the bar of God! O be entreated to secure him now, while it is an accepted time and a day of salvation.

N. B. Let all who have an interest at the throne of grace remember poor, unconverted sinners.

Your friend,

P. TANDY.

Corresondence.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

"But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment For by thy words thou shalt be justified and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

This emphatic language, expressing fear to unregenerate men fell from the lips of him who is our wisdom. righteousness, sanctification and redemption, and as he uses no parable, figure, or symbolic imagery, we conclude the language will be literally fulfilled in the coming of the Lord Jesus, when he shall take to himself his great power and reign, resurrect both righteous and wicked and judge and reward them according as they shall have sown, either to the flesh or Spirit. The judgment of which the Savior speaks in the above language does not embrace the gospel dispensation, but a day of judgment introduced by the completion of this age; for it is the last day. We have no account of any day after the judgment day, of which Christ takes the supervision. "My words," says Christ, "shall judge you in the last day."

Some say that if every idle word is to be brought into judgment, with every secret thing, it will take millions of years to judge the world. But this difficulty is readily obviated by the clearly revealed truth that the great cloud of witnesses, embracing the whole multitude of the redeemed which no man could number, of all nations and kindred, and people will judge the world and execute the judgment written. Christ is the appointed Judge, and will take the supervision of the judgment. If nay question the truthfulness of this position, let them examine the following testimony: Matt. 19: 28; 1 Cor. 6: 2; Ps. 149: 1–9: Dan. 7: 21, 22; Rev. 5: 10 and 20; 4: 1–6; and we are satisfied that every candid, unprejudiced mind will acknowledge this part of the inspired record, that the saints will (with Christ) act their part in the great judgment drama.

Unto this judgment the wicked are reserved. Peter declares that the wicked are reserved to the day of judgment to be punished. Why are they reserved? Let not human wisdom, or philosophy, be inserted nore for the divine. But let the record of God stand unimpeachable, even if it should prove us all liars. The answer is plain, and needs no comments,—reserved to be punished. Amen.

The wicked are not only reserved to the day of judgment, but angels, heaven and earth, inheritance, hail-stones, and wrath, are reserved. Jude, 6; 2 Pet. 2: 4; Job 21: 30; 2 Pet. 2: 9–17; Jude, 13, 14; 1 Pet. 1: 4; Rom. 2: 5–11; Job 38: 23; Nah. 1: 2. And if we set aside the reserve of the wicked, we may also set aside the other things that are held in reserve, and so make the word of God of none effect. The words of Jesus Christ in the fifth of John weigh a thousand times more in my mind than all the mysticism that can be thrown around such plain and literal language by men of talent:—"Marvel not at this, the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." If this testimony does not prove the literal resurrection of the righteous and wicked, there is not in my judgment one that does; and if this testimony of Christ can be figured away and made to mean the gathering of the Jews from their dispersed and scattered condition to their own land, so may every text in the Bible that speaks of a resurrection. The Bible is very explicit and assures us that there is to be a resurrection of the just and of the unjust; and I have no more right to question or doubt the one than the other.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 7, 1858.

Coming Events.

It is said that, "coming events cast their shadows before." This being true, something of no ordinary interest is at hand. And it is remarkable that all classes begin to inquire with deep anxiety, what is it? Some think the temporal millennium and conversion of the world is about to commence; others, that we are soon to witness great political revolutions; while the Spiritualists assert that Christ is now coming spiritually, and soon all, or nearly all, are to fall into their ranks. All are looking for a great revolution within a brief period. There is a peculiar uneasiness in society, like that felt in nature before tremendous storms, earthquakes and volcanoes; or in war, before a great and decisive battle. The sensation is deep, and cannot be laughed off. The scoffer curls his lip and assumes to laugh at what he terms the folly and weakness in men, as their hearts tremble at the sound of the coming storm; but at the same time, his feelings are like one who jokes on the way to the gallows or the guillotine for the sake of hiding the deep emotions that agitate his guilty conscience.

The time has come when thinking, candid men in active, business life, are constrained to admit that it is time to prepare for a future existence; hence at noonday, we see see them leaving their various avocations, and assembling by thousands for prayer, exhortation and song, visiting the dens and sinks of iniquity to rescue the fallen, abandoned ones, wallowing in the mire of sin. What does all this mean? For the student of prophecy the problem is one of easy solution. He sees advancing in rapid speed, not only great political and moral changes, but an entire revolution of all the present systems of government, the resurrection of the dead, the restitution of paradise, the establishment of Christ's kingdom, the reign of the saints on the earth, while the sun is eclipsed by the glory of the Lord, and the saints are singing in triumph the song of Moses and the Lamb.

If any ask us, "how soon do you think this dispensation will end?" We answer, we cannot tell definitely. We do not see evidence sufficient to warrant us to say the Lord will certainly come this year, but we are convinced that those who do not soon prepare to meet the "coming events" will be found at last without a wedding garment for the marriage supper of the Lamb It seems as though "the last call of mercy" was sounding in the ears of a sinful world, and a backslidden church. The present "great awakening" surpasses all of which we have any knowledge, and is still increasing in extent and power. Wicked men are convicted in the silent watches of the night, where no voice is heard, and while walking alone in the street, they are suddenly arrested, and seek at once some one who can tell them what to do in order to be saved. Counting rooms and cellars are vocal with prayer and praise at noonday in the great business marts of our cities, and houses of worship are thronged at all hours of the day. Men and women are brought up from the dungeons of filthy iniquity into the glorious liberty of the gospel, to sing the praises of Him who died on Calvary to give them a home in glory. The work is spreading from the large cities into the smaller ones, thence to the villages and surrounding country. Prayer meetings are held at all hours of the day from 6 o'clock in the morning till 10 at night. It seems as if the Lord was determined that every one should be without excuse, and speechless if he is found unprepared when the last trumpet shall sound. He has shown his willingness to save all that will come, from the fact that some of the most abandoned have obtained pardon, and are happy in a Savior's love. None need stay away. Sinner, come! Backslider come! "Whosoever will," let him come! Delay not! While mercy lingers, COME! Decide now. It will soon be too late. "How long halt ye between two opinions?" The choice is between life and death—a home in the kingdom of God, or eternal destruction. Now is the accepted time. Mercy waits your decision, but justice is just at hand. O do not longer refuse the kind offer of our dear friend Jesus. Love him, obey him, and be a joint heir with him in the everlasting kingdom. Let me entreat you by a mother's prayers; by vows made to that dying friend; by all that is good in this world, and the world to come; by a Savior's sufferings on the cross; his coming and glory; the joys of paradise; the society of the redeemed, and of angels; and by the joys of eternal life in our Eden home, to come to Christ. Make the decision this day. To-morrow may be too late. Go now and pray. Be earnest, for the last sands of time are dropping out. Do not say, "go thy way for this time," lest you never have another offer of salvation. My friend, be entreated by all that is good and lovely, to be a christian,—a whole-hearted, sincere, devoted follower of Christ. All is gained if you yield to him, all is lost if you refuse. Come, DO COME!

Bills!!

☞ Those to whom we send bills this week will notice that one dollar of the amount is to pay for the present volume, commencing March 3d, and ending the 25th of next August. We hope our subscribers will adopt the advance pay system as far as possible, in order that we may not be obliged to proceed upon uncertainties. Let none stop their paper, however, because they can't pay now. If you like the Crisis, we shall be pleased to send it as long as we can meet our expenses. If you cannot pay all, send a part.

Birth of the Spirit.

No. I.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

We need no proof of the first fact; nor do we need an illustration that we may understand this process or result, in the natural world, except so far as may be necessary to explain the birth of the Spirit. The plain assurance of the Great Teacher is, that in this mortal human nature, which, with all its endowments, is called flesh, the result of the laws of our nature, a living natural man, is by the process of generation and birth, and can be nothing more.—"Adam begat a son in his own likeness;" and qy just so much as he had become fleshly, earthly, mortal, by so much was his offspring affected.

Man is in Scripture termed fleshly, earthly, sensual, or carnal, from his condition as a being and not simply in respect to his physical nature. This is plain.—Hence the language—"World, flesh and devil." The "earthy" embreced the whole man, also the flesh: as by the language of Paul, when speaking of himself, and speaking of living after the flesh, and "fleshly lust." This without contradiction presents the entire man. What Adam was, therefore, we are; and what he became we must become. There is no imperishable point of his inherent nature, that can survive the wreck, nothing to resist the fiat of God; nothing which shall withstand the mortal current, for there is no power or principle that can inhere—in the scriptural light—and the natural light is less clear than that, even.

Redemption must hold out to man the hope of life? Since that which is of earth is earthly, such are they that are earthy; or, as is Adam, so is man. Again, that is flesh, and that only, even the condition of man as fallen, which is born of the flesh. In other words, that being which is begotten by man and born of a woman, is man only—is of such elements as they are, and having no other source of elemental life, cannot be classed in whole or in part, as of a different order.

Observe that our Lord in teaching the new birth, which is the birth of the Spirit, places the flesh in opposition to Spirit. Now as the flesh presents man, in the present state, the Spirit cannot, for they are against each other. Each thing, by the rule laid down, must partake of the nature of its kind, from the elemental laws of its being. That which is of the Spirit must be spirit. The new birth is the Spirit; it must, therefore, be spirit. But mark, the Spirit product is a result; it is not a thing which existed before, as Spirit, or a spiritual being. The man who is born did not exist as a man before. By the laws of being he was his progenitor; in the principle, not the fact. He is born; he thus exists. So in the Spiritual birth. The man as Spirit, or a spiritual man, did not exist as such before; it is a new existence.

We cannot say, therefore, that the spirit of man—the spirit—no matter how you may explain it, which he has as a natural man, is born again; for it is spirit already. Certainly, a man has a spiritual existence, separate from the physical, but that does not make a spiritual man. It cannot be born, for it already exists, and in that mode of life it would only be spirit if it were born of the Spirit. It should be more.

But it is renewed! Granted,—renewed by the Holy Ghost! Right. What then? This is another figure, and shows the agency of the Holy Ghost in securing the renewed state of the affections. But is not the birth to be a second one—and by the Spirit? The Spirit of God! Then the product will receive its character from the Spirit of God. I believe so. Let me ask if the man is not to be born again? He who has been born once? Most certainly; and will not the Spirit of God affect the whole man? How can the whole man be born again?

Death.

NUMBER TWO.

In this number I am to show that God meant what he said, when he declared—"In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Now, Bro. G., if I were to make a peculiar declaration in the Crisis, about which there was to arise a controversy as to what I meant, and you should refer the matter to me, and I should explain in language easy to be understood, ought this not to settle the matter with all parties? Certainly it should. Well, then, as dispute has arisen as to what God meant in the above language, if he has explained it in language easy to be understood, ought he not to be believed rather than any one else? All are ready to say yes,—so let it be.

In Gen. 3: 17–19, God has explained to Adam in simple terms his meaning: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." What can be plainer than this? God is addressing the intelligence, and says,—"Out of it (ground) wast thou taken, for dust thou art." "Thou" is a personal pronoun in the nominative case; while thy is in the possessive case, which would refer to something possessed by Adam and not Adam himself; hence, "thou art dust and unto dust shalt thou return." Here then is God's own explanation of the matter; and who can but see when he says, "thou shalt surely die," that he means "unto dust shalt thou return?" Then surely God does mean just what he says, and nothing else.

That to die was thus literally to return to dust, is also evident from the fact of God's guarding the way of the tree of life. The reason God assigns for doing this is, "Lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." If he had been suffered to have eaten of that tree of life, he could not have died, but would have been an immortal sinner. God could not have executed the penalty of death. Eternal misery would have been his portion. God in mercy guards the tree, that such an awful result might not follow,—hence the sword of justice hangs over him ready to cut him down.

But he did not die that day, and why? This is a question of importance and ought to be examined closely; for here is a great turning point, and which opens a clear and broad view of the whole plan of redemption. Here our first parents were placed on a probation for immortality. Its conditions were perfect freedom to enjoy all that God had made except to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which was forbidden under the penalty, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." He eat thereof, the conditions of his probation were broken,—the sword of justice hangs over him, ready to cut him down, but mercy, in the person of God's dear son, is near and sees that unless something is done the enemy has accomplished the destruction of the race. He interposes and pleads for them, but justice can not be averted, but it can be deferred until man has had a chance to retrieve his fallen condition. Another probation is given. Thus the Savior comes to his relief. If this is not the time when he in the plan of God comes in to the rescue of our fallen race I cannot conceive when it was, for surely they needed no Savior before they fell, or intercessor before they transgressed. But when they had transgressed the bounds of their probation, and fallen under the power of a broken law, and death is about to ensue, it is then and not till then an intercessor is needed. And now I understand the arm of justice is stayed for his sake, or deferred, and man is again a probationer, on terms in harmony with the plan which Christ and God the Father now enter into for his redemption.

This, then, is why they did not "return to dust" that day. It was owing to an intercessor's voice in their behalf. Mercy prevailed for a season, Christ undertakes their cause and offers to redeem them from the awful effects of their first transgression, provided they comply with the conditions of this their second probation. A book of life is now kept and their deeds of compliance or non-compliance are registered therein. On this hangs their redemption from their penalty which is Death. Thus it is with all their race until the judgment shall sit and decide their final doom. In this plan Christ becomes the second Adam,—comes into the world,—takes upon him our natures,—suffers all the sorrows,—passes through all the trials that Adam the first did, or any of his race would,—tempted in all points as we, and yet without sin. He kept all the condition of his probation, and yet subjected himself to suffer the penalty of a broken law. He dies, goes into the enemy's stronghold, wrenches from his grasp the keys of death and the grave, (hell, Rev. 1: 18,) comes forth by the power of the Father triumphant victor over the arch enemy, who holds in his grasp nearly all his family of little ones who have believed in him in their lives, but "all died in faith," or "fell asleep in Jesus." By and by, with key in hand, he will come forth and unlock their prison house and say to the north, Give up; and to the south, keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth; even every one that is called by my name. Even so, Amen.

Campmeeting.

BRO. GRANT:—A word about the Boarding Tent for our Annual Campmeeting.

When the Conference met at Wilbraham and desired to locate there and make a permanent thing of it, the subject of the boarding table was not mentioned until the meeting was dissolved, when I spoke of it to some of the brethren. They replied that it was probably understood that I was to do as I had done for years; i. e., get it up as economically as possible, and let each one pay for his board, or board himself; as it had heretofore given general satisfaction. With this understanding, I proposed to Bro. Ladd to take hold with me, as we were selected as Committee of Finances, to which he consented; and our arrangements were made, and some sixty to seventy-five dollars invested in crockery, tents, &c. We had commenced operations under good faith and with a desire so to arrange and manage, to bring the board down to fifty cents per day, for regular boarders, during the term of years we hold a meeting there.

But of late it has been proposed that the boarding tents should be a common stock, the loss or profits go to the encampment, and all the fixtures, tents, tables, &c., should be taken care of by a select committee. Now if this is the best way, I am willing to fall in with the brethren; and will sell to any they may select, at cost.

As it has been suggested that Bro. Ladd and I take the responsibility also, I will here say that we cannot do it; or, that I shall not for three reasons:

1. I have the ground and all the financial business to attend to, and take the responsibility of keeping order without any one to help me. This the brethren all know I have done for years, and faced the storm of opposition coming from rowdies, rummies and indiscreet brethren, which makes my position anything but a desirable one.

2. To take upon me another load, more than this, I cannot. A company boarding tent is subject to the dictation of any one and every one that attends our meeting; and as the appetites, prejudices and notions of our brethren at this time about tea and coffee, meat, &c, are various, a man that undertakes to give satisfaction to all will have a job.

3. All the things must be got to the ground before meeting, and removed after the meeting. bills settled up, remnants disposed of, lumber taken home, tents taken down, all things looked after and taken care of for a year. This is a job of no profit and much perplexity, as all sound-minded business men will see at a glance; but we have to do with ignorance, superstition and jealousy, in our ranks, and must make the best of it.

Now, brethren, take what course you please as to the Boarding Tent; select your Committee, if thought best. I will do my duty in preparing the ground and keeping order, &c., according to the vote. but will not have any thing to do with the Boarding Tent unless I take it wholly and manage it as aboue stated. Then I attend to my own business, get and pay my own help, and dispose of the remnants &c., without the dictation of any one. I am willing to do my part; but shall not be a servant in this way subject to the dictation of any one that is disposed to find fault or is unreasonable.

Hiram Munger.

I fully concur with and endorse the above statement and proposition of Bro. Munger, and should decline serving in a committee; but will act with brethren in any way they shall desire.

Yours,

R. E. Ladd.

For the Crisis.

The Revival.

Bro. Grant:—I would say a few words touching this important movement. That it is of God, we see, by its fruits. It is indeed a strange work, and it looks like cutting it "short in righteousness." In this city, as you well know, many prayer meetings are daily held at different hours of the day, beginning at half past five in the morning, and the last is held (the young men's) in the evening from nine to ten. All these meetings are held one hour, and consequently what is said must be short and to the point. Many petitions are handed in to be read requesting prayers for unconverted friends, and it is truly wonderful to hear the signal reports that soon follow these apparently simple means; and also, to hear them testiify what God has done for them. We hear the old man of four score years and the youth of twelve saying, "I want to tell you how I love Jesus; he has done a great work for me."

This morning, at half past eight o'clock, I went to the Old South Chapel prayer meeting. There, as usual for the last six weeks, the Chapel was crowded, (and the Chapel is again filled to overflowing at twelve o'clock.) There was much interesting intelligence reported from other places of what God is doing. A man just from Cleveland, Ohio, said that there also the work was going on in power. Union prayer meetings are daily held, and sinners are brought to Christ by the Spirit of God; though young men band themselves together to oppose the work and keep away their praying friends, yet God is stronger and breaks into their bands and sets up a prayer meeting. They formed what they called an Elephant Club, to get together and use an influence over each other, and keep as many as they could from these prayer meetings. Here God's Spirit convicted some of that gang and they cried for mercy.

This gentleman also gave an account of the remarkable conversion of a railroad conductor, who runs a train from Erie to Cleveland. A person on the Erie end of the road met him and said with a profane expression, calling him by name, "The Methodists have got your wife." He soon showed anger about it, and on returning to his home made up his mind to oppose her all he could. He went and bought what he called a quart of good brandy, and to be sure that he should have courage enough, drank the quantity, and, to his surprise, it did not affect him at all. The quantity he said himself would intoxicate three men. The amount of it was, God's Spirit got hold of him and he was led to cry for mercy. And this came out in his confession. He is now happy in the Lord. This is only one instance among the many daily reported from different quarters. In all these meetings much prayer has been made by those who have faith in the promise of God. Truly,

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

My brethren and sisters, in all this heart work that is going on, let us see to it that we get near to God; though many things may hinder, we can get them out of the way, and then have sweet access to the throne of grace.

"The Lord comes down our souls to greet,
And mercy crowns the mercy seat!"

But we are not to be satisfied in this act of coming to his throne until we know from experience that we have communion with God. We are to know that he heareth us, then we know that we have the things we ask for. O may we all find it good to wait at the throne, find it a privilege, a pleasure, instead of a bondage, to be at the prayer meeting.

Health Department.

Tobacco, Tea and Coffee.

As there has been considerable said of late respecting the above stimulants. I wish to add a few words of experience. Tobacco I have never used in any form, excepting an occasional pinch of snuff from the hand of some old lady; and then more from fashion than pleasure. I would that I could say the same of tea and coffee; but I have been habituated to the use of these, with some intervals of abstinence, from boyhood; and, until within a few years, have never discovered their deleterious effects upon both body and mind.

About eighteen months ago, I began to have attacks of sudden faintness and trembling in my breast; it increased so rapidly that I was often obliged to stand still for a moment to recover myself. I consulted a physician, who told me it was a premonitory symptom of heart disease. I concluded to abstain from tea and coffee, and in a few months the faintness and tremor left me entirely. Some time after, I commenced using them again, when the old symptoms again appeared.

As has been stated in the communication on Tobacco, whatever affects the body, influences the mind. I have suffered in this respect also; being naturally possessed of considerable of the spirit that Peter sometimes manifested, it has undoubtedly on many occasions incited me to speak unadvisedly and without due consideration, to my own injury and the displeasure of others.

I now look upon their indulgence as a species of intemperance, which serves as a barrier to growth in grace. We read in the catalogue of graces, enumerated in the sum of addition, that we are to add to our knowledge temperance and to temperance patience. So it appears if we leave out temperance, we cannot get any higher in the scale; and facts demonstrate that an intemperate person seldom possesses a great amount of patience, and being destitute of this, he cannot make the other addition. We read of being temples of the Holy Ghost, but whosoever shall defile this temple, him shall God destroy. May there not be danger, by the indulgence of these stimulants, of defiling this temple and fitting it for destruction. Therefore, believing that a continuance in this habit will hinder my growth in grace and usefulness as a christian, and cause the fountain of life in me some day suddenly and unexpectedly to cease to send forth its vitality through this mortal frame, I bid farewell forever to tea and coffee.

D. N. Smith.

We learn that Bro. Geo. L. Teeple, Arlington, Sibley Co., Minn., is very needy. He can get no work where he is, and has no means to get away. If any brother will send him money to remove, he pledges himself to work for the one who sends the means, till he is satisfactorily paid.

For the Crisis.

ON THE DEATH OF HANNAH B. SMITH.

The breath of the spoiler has entered the bower,
And the cheek of the loved one is pale;
The blue eyes are dimmed by his mystical power,
As she enters the shadowy vale.

Life's mighty conflicts with her all are past,
The mission of kindness is o'er;
The smile that has lingered so sweet to the last,
Will beam on the dear ones no more.

Now dreamless she sleeps on the sunny hillside,
Neath the shade of the old poplar trees;
And her cherished cedar, in Edenlike pride,
Wails softly when swept by the breeze.

The last time she stray'd there twas sunset's calm hour,
And she said, "I shall roam here no more;"
And long did she linger by streamlet and flower,
E'er life's dream of beauty was o'er.

Will the silver-haired parents again meet their child,
And the husband permitted to gaze
On her that so fondly in death on them smiled
And mingled her counsels with praise?

Yes, earth's painful history soon will be told,
Soon parting and tears will be o'er;
When earth is renewed like the garden of old,
Then death will be mentioned no more.

Then, Hannah will rise with a glorified throng,
And warble her praise with the blest;
Her harp ringing loud with the conquerer's song,
As she welcomes the mansions of rest.

Let her sleep on till the dark night is o'er,
Soft be her silent repose;
Christ has the key to her dark prison door,
His jewels he soon will disclose.

Domestic Summary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

FROM THE BOSTON JOURNAL.

It is the concurrent testimony of all with whom we have conversed upon the subject, that the religious increase in this city is still on the increase—deepening and extending itself among classes it has not heretofore reached, and leading many who have heretofore been considered as almost beyond the influence of any of the ordinary means of the gospel, to the prayer meeting and thence to the inquiry room, where many of them profess to have yielded their hearts to Christ. The meetings during the week have been well attended. At one or two of the more central ones the numbers may perhaps not have been quite so large as they were a week ago, but the diminution there is doubtless to be attributed, as we intimated last week, to the opening of meetings at new centres. We have no doubt that the aggregate number in daily attendance at these meetings is as large or larger than at any previous time. The interest in the meetings does not seem to wane at all. There is the same ernnest, fervent, apparently heartfelt spirit of prayer; the same feeling of dependence on God to carry on the work; the same anxious feeling for the impenitent; and the same feeling of cordial sympathy and union among the different sects which have marked the meetings in previous weeks. There seems to be a continuation of that hopeful feeling to which we have before alluded—a feeling of expectation that the interest is to continue—and Christians are praying and laboring with that thought in their minds. We hear of a number of churches in this city and vicinity, where the work seems to have taken a new start during the week. The meetings in North street, in Father Mason's Hall, are still crowded, and cases of peculiar interest are almost daily reported. We are glad to see it stated that measures are about to be taken to visit the purlieus of vice in that locality, and try to pursuade their unfortunate inmates to abandon their evil ways.

The reports from other places are in almost every instance to the effect that the work is continuing and in many instances with increasing interest and power. From the great West accounts come of the great awakening there. We saw a letter on Thursday from a merchant of this city who has been traveling in Iowa and Wisconsin, and who says that everywhere, in the stores, at the hotels, in the streets, in the cars, the one prominent subject of discussion is religion. A gentleman from Ohio lately started, that, by adding his personal observations to those of a friend, he could say, that from Omaha City, in Nebraska, to Washington, there was a line of prayer meetings all along the whole length of the road; so that wherever a Christian traveler stopped to spend the evening he could find a crowded prayer meeting, across the entire breadth of our vast republic.

The Independent of this week, says:

"The daily prayer meetings at various places and hours during the past week, have been as well attended as on former occasions. There is no decrease in the congregations and no abatement in the interest. The meeting at Burton's Theatre, at which the daily audience numbers near three thousand people, does not in the least detract from the attendance at other places. On the contrary, the meetings in the old 'North Dutch Church,' and in the Methodist church in John street, are, if possible, increasing in interest and influence. The former, which has steadily continued since last fall, gives promise almost of permanence. The congregation assemble in three separate rooms, which are smaller and of more convenient size for prayer meetings than the larger places in which greater audiences assemble, and there is an air of sociality about the meetings, and an absence of disagreeable publicity conducing greatly to freedom of expression, which do not in so great a degree characterize the other meetings. At Burton's a new feature has been introduced which promises to be productive of great good. On Saturday last the meeting was prolonged half an hour beyond the usual time, in order that Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who had been previously requested to conduct the exercises might have opportunity to make an address. On Saturdays and Wednesdays the meeting will continue from twelve o'clock till half past one, and clergymen of the different denominations will make pointed practical addresses to the unconverted."

The Providence Post in speaking of the interest in that city, says:

"The churches are crowded day after day, and night after night; and business men, and ministers, and deacons, and lawyers, and professors in our college, and physicians, talk to the people—kindly, calmly, earnestly, persuasively, faithfully. All seem to have faith that a still greater demonstration of God's power is to be witnessed, and we doubt not it will be, if the appeals of God's people are persevered in. With all our heart we join in invoking it."

—Accounts from Venezuela state that Puerto Cabello was captured by the revolutionists March 6th. On the following day a force of 10,000 men marched upon Caraccas and summoned President Monages to surrender the executive authority. He peremtorily refused, and declared the city in a state of siege.

The revolution was general throughout the interior, and all business was paralyzed.

Late accounts from Uraguay state that President Urquiza had dispatched 700 troops into the territory of the Oriental Republic in consequence of the revolutionary events transpiring in Montevideo.

The Boy Preacher.—The St. Louis Democrat says, Rev. J. B. Fuller, of Missouri, the boy preacher, has within the last five weeks delivered in Marion County fifty-four sermons, and been instrumental in the conversion of 144 persons. He has been licensed to preach only about two months, during which time he has delivered upwards of 50 discourses, and 240 persons have been converted through his instrumentality. It is said that he never studies his sermons, or makes any notes, and frequently does not select his text until he rises up in the pulpit to preach, and yet, it is said, no two of his discourses are alike, either in point of arrangement or composition. He speaks most eloquently, and uses the most chaste and beautiful language. Calls to preach at various points are daily pouring in upon him.

On the 17th, the Emperor and Empress visited the Opera for the first time since the attempted assassination.

There were rumors that the French Navy would be put on a war footing.

The execution of Orsini and Pierri, on the 13th, was witnessed by from 1000 to 2000 persons. They were kept at a distance by the military, of whom 5000 were on the spot.

Both met their doom with firmness. Pierri sang the well known "Mourier pour la Patrie" on his way to the scaffold, and on the block cried "Vive la Italie—Vive la Republique!" Orsini's last cry was "Vive la France!"

Obituary.

Died, in Warner, N. H., March 13th, of scarlet fever, Lydia Jane, daughter of George S. and Polly J. Morgan, aged 4 years 11 months and two days.

The writer endeavored to comfort the mourning friends by appropriate remarks drawn from Luke 18: 16.

Also, March 22, of scarlet fever, Judith Ann, daughter of George S. and Polly J. Morgan, aged 3 years 6 months and 17 days.

The funeral was attended by the writer, and words of consolation and exhortation were spoken from Heb. 6: 18, 19.

Thus two lovely flowers fairer than whom none ever cheered the paternal fireside group, were blighted by the frost of death; but a glorious morn will break in beams of radiant light o'er all the gloom of earth; dispel the darkness of the tomb, and God's own almighty hand will transplant them from a land of darkness, woe, and death, to bloom forever in the garden of the Lord.

S. W. Bishop.

We laid them gently down, those little ones,
And left them calmly sleeping side by side;
Often with tearless eyes we'd laid them thus,
In their own little cot at eventide.

But ah! they're sleeping now a dreamless sleep,
Low in the ground, where slumber all the dead;
While hovering near the shining angels keep
A tireless vigil round their little bed.
Our cottage home is desolate and lone,
Faded its light, and hushed its minstrelsy;
The sunshine of their sparkling eyes is gone,
And those loved tones have ceased their melody.

There is a land where death can never come
To blight the lovely flowers that bloom so fair;
And in that world we'll humbly seek a home,
And clasp again our buds of promise there.

L. R. R. B.

Fell asleep in Warner, N. H., March 22, Mrs. Hannah E. Morgan, wife of Reuben B. Morgan, in the 23d year of her age.

Sister M. was converted in the spring of 1854, and baptized by Elder John Couch. Although she lived a portion of the time intervening between her conversion and death, in a state of alienation from her first love, yet through the mercy of God she was enabled to see and confess her backslidings; and through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ she found pardon and gained the assurance that she was accepted in the beloved. Her flesh rests in hope, awaiting the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, when she will find a home forever in that land,

"Where death-divided friends at last,
Shall meet to part no more."

The funeral was attended by the writer and a sermon was preached from Rev. 14: 13.

Also, March 30, Sabrina, daughter of Reuben B. and Hannah E. Morgan, aged 2 years 6 months and 5 days.

A discourse was preached on the occasion by the writer from John 11: 25.

Thus blighted in their loveliness, mother and daughter sleep side by side, sweetly resting in the arms of the great Restorer, until the dawning of that bright mornnig of eternal sunshine, when at the bidding of the Almighty they will leave their humble resting place, and in immortality live in a blooming paradise forever. May this dispensation be sanctified to the surviving friends, and may they be prepared to meet their friends that sleep, where

"Death enters not, and not one sigh
Ere ladens zephyr's wing;
Unfading immortality
Is stamped on every thing."

S. W. Bishop.

LINES.

"During the entire ceremony it rained heavily; but scarcely had the last disciple received the sacrament (of baptism) and stepped out of the water, when the sun pierced through the clouds and shining upon the mist and murky sky, created the most beautiful rainbow I ever saw, the colors were so intensely bright and glorious."—[JOHN F. COTTON's article on "The Conference" in the Crisis of March 31.]

Cold, and dark, and damp, and dreary,
Ranged the clouds across the sky;
And the storm, never aweary,
Hung above most gloomily—
Black and cheerless.
Calm and fearless
Sank the Christians 'neath the wave
Typical of Jesus' grave.
But when coming forth from duty,
Spanning o'er the sky in beauty
Blossomed forth the rainbow's sheen;
And the sun o'er earth afar
Sped its glorious golden car,
Cheering all with its bright gleam.

Thus above the Christian weary,
Hang earth's clouds from day to day;
Chill, and damp, and dark, and dreary,
Casting shadows on his way—
Almost cheerless.
Bold and fearless,
Heedless of the beating storm,
Toils he Duty's path along.
But his trials shall be ended
When, like rainbow glories splendid,
Breaks on earth the MORNING's ray;
Then his tired soul reposes
On fair Eden's blushing roses,
Happy through eternal DAY!

Short Sermons.

No. I.

"He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?"—Rom. 8: 32.

I. The Gift of Christ.

Suppose we were the subjects of an earthly modarch, to whom we were under the strongest possible obligations. Nothing could equal his tenderness and love towards his subjects. He was like the kindest of fathers. But despite it all,—strange and ungrateful as it might seem,—we had rebelled against him, and become his determined and bitter enemies. He has a darling, an only son, who is endeared to him by the fondest attachment. Yet so great is his pity and compassion toward us his rebellious subjects, that he proposes to surrender him to undergo the most shameful and humiliating treatment, and finally to be put to death as a criminal, in order, if possible, to reconcile us to our Sovereign.

Yet, this is but a very feeble illustration of the gift of our Savior. Ah, no! While he beheld a world of guilty, miserable creatures, he could not withhold even this son of his love. Or, in the words of the text, he could not "spare" him. Great and incomprehensible as must have been the love of the Infinite Father towards the dear child of his bosom, that to us was still greater. His compassion towards vile, rebellious worms, wretched outlaws, overweighed all. Oh, matchless, unfathomable love! Oh, wonderful plan of redemption!

And what a work did Jesus undertake in giving himself for our rescue! Our dull minds falter in the attempt to comprehend such condescension and love. We are naturally so selfish ourselves, that the idea of such boundless benevolence as that of our dear Redeemer, finds but little lodgment in our hearts.

We have abundant reason to suppose, that this was the greatest gift which Infinite love could possibly bestow on fallen man. In the case I have supposed, if the monarch against whom we had rebelled was the most powerful of earthly sovereigns, who had no manner of need of our services, but was moved by mere pity of our condition, it would, perhaps, seem a little,—though but a mere trifle comparatively,—like the tender mercy of our heavenly Father.

II. No blessing whatever, whether great or small, will God withhold from his believing children.

The argument of the apostle seems to be this. The gift of the greater blessing implies the readiness to give all lesser ones. If no gift which we need, or which it is in the power of the Infinite God to bestow, can equal the gift of Christ, then we have already received this greater blessing and may obtain every other one. God withheld not his dear and only Son; will he withhold any thing else that would be calculated to do us good? No, indeed! No good thing in earth or heaven will he [illegible]

Nothing will be esteemed too good for them. Saith the apostle,—"All things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." Talk of rich men, with their fine houses, find farms, elegant furniture, costly apparel and equipage, costly merchandise &c., they are miserably poor compared to that humble Christian.

And if we are his obedient children, we may rest assured that all things whatever, which occur to us, whether prosperous or adverse, are given, or at least over-ruled and controlled, by a kind and tender Father,—and will assuredly do us good. If adversity be our lot, it is so great a blessing, (though blessing in disguise,) and we so much need it, that his love to us constrains him to send it. Poverty, tribulation, reproach for Christ's sake, alienation of friends, sickness, slander of enemies, &c., are but so many workmen, all working for our good.

If, then, our Almighty Father and Friend is thus solicitous about our welfare, we should then trust him implicitly under all circumstances. It is the hight of ingratitude for us not to do so. My brother, my sister, if you are inclined to be desponding, under trial, consider what your Father has done, and is doing for you, and be encouraged. Yea, be ashamed of your distrust and unbelief! Think of your Father's tender love in the gift of a Savior, and remember that you have all things in him. Remember, "All things are yours," if you will but claim them. All possible good, which an Almighty, all-powerfull Being can bestow, we become heirs to the moment we receive Christ. What more can we desire? What more would it be possible for us to possess?

Again. Every thing we possess in this life calculated to make us comfortable and happy, and even our very existence, is the gift ot God. This beautiful world we inhabit, so nicely fitted up for our accommodation—the use and service of all the inferior animals—the annual products of the earth, adapted to supply the wants of man and beast,—the sun, to give us light and heat—the joys of society and friendship, both domestic and social,—in short, every thing really good in the universe, which we really possess or hope for, are the gifts of our bountiful heavenly Father.

But to crown all the wonderful loving kindness of the Lord towards man, he will soon give us the kingdom. Yes, dear, tried, disappointed, world-sick pilgrim; soon "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." The work of six thousand years of trial, sorrow and suffering, will be accomplished; the number of the elect will be complete; and the "Chiefest among ten thousand," and the "One altogether lovely," who groaned and died on Calvary, will come in awful splendor and glory, to "make up his jewels"—to "give reward to his servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear his name, small and great; and to destroy them that destroy the earth." Then will he fulfill his many promises, such as these;—"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom;" "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 43; "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," Matt. 5: 5; "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner." Prov. 11: 31; they that be wise shall shine as the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Dan. 12: 3; "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." Rev. 21: 3.

H. P. SIKES.

For the Crisis.

Courage to say "I Don't Know."

In these last days it is very important that we speak that we do know. What we do not know should never be substituted for truth or knowledge. I had much rather hear the honest "don't know," where there truly exists a lack of knowledge, than to listen to any of the vague fancies that are so often advanced in lieu of knowledge or truth.

We are living in an age when we are expected to give a thus saith the Lord for all that we teach and affirm; and it becomes us as a people, who profess to be looking for our King immediately, to be quite certain.

We as a people are very often subject to the most severe criticisms of a frowning world. And in view of this ought we not to have the courage and honesty of heart to admit that there are a few things we do not as yet understand? I have seen some individuals who, I verily believed, had not the moral courage to admit that they were deficient on any points of doctrine, creeds or isms of this present time or age. In this way, many who have witnessed failures have been led astray, and not unfrequently to denounce all as cunningly devised fables, which, indeed, some of the explanations given out as truth and knowledge have proved themselves to be.

No man, says Dr. Watts, is obliged to learn and know every thing. This can neither be sought nor required, for it is utterly impossible, yet all persons are under some obligations to improve their understanding. The advantages of religious knowledge are very great. Knowledge is also commendable. It capacitates man to better enjoy himself, serves to make him extensively useful, and by imparting to others the good he himself has acquired, he can glorify God. True knowledge is good; therefore we should study to know.

I would not for a moment be understood as contending for ignorance as a source of happiness. Far from it. But I do encourage honesty, and believe from the depths of my simple heart, that that man or woman who dare, with an honest frankness, speak out the honest don't know when they happen to be ignorant of the required information, is a brave man, a more unflinching champion of the cross, than he who thinketh himself to be something while he is nothing.

Gleanings.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been much interested in the following extract from a sermon entitled "Faith and Works," by T. L. Cuyler, and thinking it may interest some of the readers of the "Crisis," I copy it for its columns, and if acceptable, will under the above caption, furnish various incidents and choice selections from week to week. M. D. W.

"The second chapter of the Epistle by James seems, to my mind, to describe a spiritual wedding. We are 'bidden to a marriage,' and, as at the olden marriage in Cana of Galilee, the Holy Master is present, and consummated the nuptials. The parties to be united are but symbolic personages, and yet are real and life-like, too. The bride is young and beautiful—ever young and clothed upon with light as with a garment. Like Milton's Eve, she was

'For softness formed, and sweet attractive grace.'

Her face is clear as the day—her look is firm, and yet trustful. She is not of the earth, but Heaven-born, and wears her celestial parentage in every lineament of her radiant countenance. Her name is FAITH. She is the daughter of God.

And beside her stands one whose lusty form was made for deeds of daring and endurance. He is sinewy and athletic. There is valor in his eye, and 'cunning in his ten fingers,' and strength in his right arm. He was created to act, to do, and to suffer. He was formed for strife and struggle. His name is ACTION.

With solemn rites, the two are joined in wedlock. They are both to love, and both to obey. They are always to live, and move, and suffer, and conquer together. They are to be the faithful friends of every thing good on earth. On them, while united, Jehovah pronounces a 'blessing,' richer than that which gladdened the nuptials of Isaac and Rebekah, or of Jacob and Leah. While united they are to live, and grow, and conquer. When separated, they are to droop and perish. For each other, and in each other, and with each other, their days of struggle and of victory are to be passed, until time shall be no longer.

And so FAITH and WORKS were coupled by Infinite Wisdom; and in the presence of the world it was solemnly announced, 'What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.' From that union have sprung a glorious progeny. All the mighty deeds which have ennobled and elevated humanity own that parentage. Faith and Action have been the source, under God, of every thing good, and great, and enduring, in the church of Christ; the very church itself exists through them. The early Apostles went out with their glad evangel to the nations under this double impulse, and with this double watchword. It was not enough to 'believe my Gospel;' they were also to 'preach my Gospel.' It was not enough to love in the heart; the whole life was to be an embodiment and outflow of love. It was not enough to have a meek and gentle spirit; the young church was to return good for evil, and thus overcome evil with good. The church was not only to be sound in heart, but active in limb and sinew also. It was to be a militant church, contending earnestly for the faith delivered to the saints—a courageous church, standing fast for the Gospel—a suppliant church, praying without ceasing—a busy church, redeeming the time—a patient church, bearing with all long-suffering—and a conquering church, to evangelize all nations. Through that apostolic Iliad, the great Apostle seems to fly like a thunderbolt, kindling and consuming! He is all ablaze with zeal. At Lystra, rebuking the deluded worshipers—at Jerusalem, confronting the Pharisees and the rulers on the castle stairs—at Cesarea, startling Agrippa on his tribunal—at Rome, preaching the reviled Gospel, both in his own 'hired house' and in Cæsar's palace— he is everywhere the believer in full action, with the heart to feel and the head to do.

And such have been God's true evangelists ever since. Such was Luther, the flaming iconoclast of Europe—to-day writing theses and commentaries, and to-morrow translating the Scriptures, or hurling fresh invectives against the black dominion of the Man of Sin. Such were Baxter, the indefatigable pastor; Edwards, the perpetual thinker; Neander, the perpetual student; Owen, the perpetual writer; Knox, the untiring reformer; Whitefield, the untiring preacher; and Chalmers, who appears to have been pastor, preacher, writer, thinker, and reformer, all in one.

Brethren! such may God honor us in being. A faith sound as that of the Westminster Assembly, will not save the dying world around us, unless it flows out into action. For 'wilt thou know, O man!' and all men in God's heritage, that 'as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.'"

From Bro. J. B. Waite.

BRO. GRANT:—I thank God this morning that after almost two years of extreme suffering, I have so far recovered the use of my limbs as to be able to write a little. I was unable to turn myself in bed, or be turned, for more than eleven months of the time. Through all my sufferings I found God's grace to be sufficient for me, and him a present help in every time of need. I am only able to get about a little on crutches. I have lost one eye, and the use of my limbs in a great measure, one knee being stiffened entirely. I have but little use of the other leg and my right arm. I am indeed a cripple, and dependent upon the charity of this world, but still I thank God that it is as well with me as it is.

I have desired for some time to express my thanks and gratitude through the Crisis to God and his saints, and to all who have assisted me in my sickness and poverty. I earnestly desire that the God of heaven will bless, build up, and keep his saints who have visited me in my sickness, and have given me bread and a home when I had none. Truly, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." [illegible]

I would express my gratitude especially to Eld. Champlain, Bro. Babcock, his folks, and the church generally for their kind and timely assistance; also to Bro. Roberts, and to every one who has in any way administered to my wants. I hope they may be rewarded at the resurrection of the just. I feel that these afflictions will work for my good. I am sick of this state of things, and I long for that better country, where the inhabitants are not sick, where the lame man shall leap as an hart, and we feel no more the effects of the curse.

I believe we are almost there. The signs of the times tell us that the Lord is at the door. He is coming to make a clean sweep of death, sin, and sinners.

Yours in hope of speedy redemption,

J. B. WAITE.

THE GUIDING HAND.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord."—Ps. 55: 22.

Is this the way, my Father? 'Tis, my child.
Thou must pass through this tangled, dreary wild
If thou wouldst reach the city undefiled,
Thy peaceful home above.

But enemies are round! Yes, child, I know
That where thou least expectest, thou'lt find a foe;
But victor thou shalt prove o'er all below,
Only seek strength above.

My Father, it is dark! Child, take my hand,
Cling close to me, I'll lead thee through the land;
Trust my all-seeing care; so shalt thou stand
'Midst glory bright above.

My footsteps seem to slide! Child, only raise
Thine eye to me, then, in these slippery ways
I will hold up thy goings; thou shalt praise
Me for each step, above.

Oh, Father, I'm weary! Child, lean thy head
Upon my breast. It was my love that spread
Thy rugged path; hope on, till I have said,
"Rest, rest for aye, above.

The Light of Life.

AN EXPOSITION OF ISAIAH 9: 2-6.

BY REV. J. PANTON HAM.

"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined. . . . For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given."

To understand the rapt utterances of the Hebrew prophets, more particularly of Isaiah, we must, as it were, appropriate their peculiar consciousness—pass into that mental state in which they were when their lips poured forth the inspired thoughts which the Spirit of God kindled within them. The mood, if not the mode, of inspiration may be partially understood by the form which the prophetic utterances sometimes take. Before the mental eye of the seer, when under the divine afflatus or impulse, a vision seems to have been presented of the nature sometimes of a scenic representation. Its diversified imagery are foreshadows of the future, and as the prophet gazes on these apparent realities, he proclaims what he sees, as events then occurring, with that graphic grandeur of speech which the peculiarity of the revelation naturally inspires. It seems necessary to imagine the prophet Isaiah in this particular mental mood when he uttered or penned our text. His eye rests upon a vision of Northern Palestine—"Galilee of the nations." But it is a vision of "darkness." In the deep recesses of a bleak, barren valley, over which "darkness" broods, he sees "Galilee of the nations," and this darkness is described as "the shadow of death," fit emblem of the darkness, the still deeper darkness of death itself. Death claims that gloomy valley as his own—it is the grim border land of the dark demon's territory. It is called the "land of the shadow of death," and "the valley of the shadow of death," because it is in the near neighborhood of the dark and dreadful capital where Death himself reigns in absolute and eternal sway. There "people dwell," and walk in "darkness," for even the "shadow" of death is darkness, though a darkness which may be dispersed. This "valley," though under the dominion of death, is not so fully incorporated with his empire as to be unredeemable. As border land it is not so completely under his ebon rule. The "shadow," not the absolute substance of death, is there, hence there is redemption from the "land of the shadow of death." While penetrating with more than human vision this thick "darkness"—this shade of grim death—and marking the wretchedness and horrible gloom of that dwelling-place of the people, suddenly the darkness begins to fold itself up like a thick black pall, and roll off the face of these gloomy homes. A "light" has broken upon the dreary solitudes of Galilee, and the upward turned faces of the people express their common and heartfelt joy. It is at this moment of time that the prophet speaks,—"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light," or as Luther has it—"See a great light, &c. . . . for unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given."

Under the image of a light, a "great light," breaking upon darkness spread over Galilee, does the prophet describe the birth of Christ—the child born—the son given. This "child," this "son," or Christ, is the great light."

The prophet speaks of Galilee, not because Galilee was exclusively the "land of darkness and the shadow of death;" but because it was in that particular spot of the world's universal darkness that the "light" first dawned. Galilee was the home of Christ, and the scene of his first and principal public labors. (Matt. 4: 13-17. And while we are not to restrict the darkness to Galilee, although this particular province of Palestine is specially mentioned, neither are we to conclude that Christ was a "light" exclusively to the Galileans. Others "sat in darkness" besides "Galilee of the nations;"—"darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people," and the unspeakable goodness of God provided a "light" whose beneficent beams should penetrate to the uttermost ends of the earth. The apostle John says of Christ,—"That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." It will be apparent then that our text has no partial, but a world-wide application. Christ, as the light of men, is the light of "every man that cometh into the world." "I am come," he said, "a light into the world that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." Above "As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world."

But what are we to understand by this "light?" In what special sense is the Lord Jesus Christ "the Light of the World?" Let us glance again at the prophetic imagery in our text. We have, in this verse, an example of the poetic parallelism, a construction very common in Hebrew poetry. The idea of the first member of this parallelism is repeated and explained in the second member thus—

"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light."

"They that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

Thus the "darkness" of the first member is represented and explained by the "land of the shadow of death" in the second member. The "darkness" then is poetically death's gloomy "shadow," and actually the representation of a people living under the dominion of death,—a mortal people, a people having no inherent or constitutional deathlessness, no essential life beyond the present brief span of earthly existence. The poet-prophet repeats in our text the humiliating and affecting truth that man — intellectual and moral man, — as well as physical man, — is "of the earth earthy"—that the conscious being descends into "the dust of death,"—that all that characterizes and constitutes the creature man is absolutely mortal. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

When, therefore, we hear the prophet say that upon such a people a "light" has "shined," and that they "have seen a great light," consistency of interpretation requires us to understand the "light" as the poetical image of life. If the "darkness" is the poetical image of death in our text, then the "light" must necessarily be the poetical image of life. And as this "great light" is the child born, and the son given, who is Jesus Christ, then we obtain the glorious truth that our Lord Jesus Christ is "the Light of men" in the sense of being the LIFE of men. And so writes the apostle John:—"In him was Life and THE LIFE WAS THE LIGHT OF MEN." And says our Lord himself, "I am the Light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the LIGHT OF LIFE."

Glorious fact! but, alas! how little understood. This "Great Light" which has dawned upon our dark world, has not even yet, in the decline of the nineteenth century, been comprehended by the professing church. "The Light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehended (or embraced) it not." This lament of the devoted John is true to this hour. The false theology of the churches on the subject of man's constitutional immortality is a dense and impenetrable darkness, through which the rays of this scripture truth cannot penetrate. The churches, one and all, have "comprehended" the heathen philosophy of Plato concerning the immortality and separate existence of the soul, hence they have not "comprehended" the "Light" which "shineth in the darkness" of this earthly theology. Nor will they until they turn away from their false teaching unto the scriptures of truth—and losing all confidence in popular creeds, however venerable, shall betake themselves to the true spirit of Christian fidelity "to the law and to the testimony," as the surest lamp to their feet and light to their path." We have in the Scriptures "a more sure word of prophecy" than the theology of the churches, "whereunto," reader, "ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the DAY dawn, (the 'day' of Christ's re-appearing as 'the Resurrection and the Life,') and the Day-star arise in your hearts."—Expositor, Scotland.

Changes in Jerusalem.

The Gardens of Solomon are now let to an Englishman The gardener, Mr. Goldsmith, is underdraining the gardens. A French traveler, describing his visit to them, says: On reaching the house I perceived a bright brass knob shining in the centre of a small square of porcelain set into a white wall. Over this knob was the following superscription in the English language: "Ring the bell." This bell seemed to me rather an anomaly in the gardens of Solomon—but that is a trifle. We did ring the bell, and we went in. The first thing that struck my eyes were red draining pipes lying about, and bearing the mark of of the manufacturers. Mr. Goldsmith was draining that Biblical valley, the dew of which was so often brushed away by the naked feet of the Shulamite. It was in the month of September. An American mowing machine was cutting a second crop of artificial grass on the very spot where the daughters of Jerusalem gathered those lillies of the field which were more beautiful than Solomon in all his glory. A patent reaping-machine was rapidly garnering the crop of that glebe which the sisters of Ruth and the daughters of Naomi were wont to glean. I asked to see Solomon's pavilion, but alas! the cyprus timbers and the wainscoating had been taken down, end in place there is a brick-built cottage, with a roof of red and green tiles. Since the Eastern war, Mr. Goldsmith has obtained the custom of the Pasha of Jerusalem for vegetables. Last year he had seven crops of potatoes, thanks to his wonderful drainage.—Expositor.

SPRING.

Hail, glorious Spring! bright vegetation's dawn,
Which opens cheeringly on winter's night,
Spreading its mantles over hill and lawn,
And river banks beside the waters bright,
Which flash and gleam with scintillating light,
As if rejoicing that the icy chain
With which the Frost King bound them close and tight,
Was snapt and shivered by the sun and rain,
And they again were freed from his bleak, chill domain.

From every knoll cowslips and daises peep,
The May-flower and the golden buttercup,
Like rosy children waking out of sleep,
And winking their bright eyes ere they get up.

When buds from every tree are bursting forth,
The leaves and flower soon shall follow then;
For Winter flying to the snowy north,
Coils himself up within his icy den.
The birds, the eagle and the little wren,
Seek each his mate to propagate his race,
And praise the God alike of beast and men,
Whose goodness fills all spheres and realms and space,
For nothing can exist without His power and grace.

The woods resound with new-awakened notes,
The meanest insect chirping forth its praise;
And feathered warblers swell their little throats,
Sending to heaven their sweet commingled lays.

So shall the saints of God, who, struck by death,
Lie cold within the confines of the tomb,
At resurrection's spring inhale the breath
Of immortality and endless bloom;—
No more a prey to grief and doubt and gloom,
Imperishable as Him who gave them life,
Safe and unmoved amid the thundering boom
Of crumbling mounts and elemental strife,
When all but His own church is with confusion rife.

O may we stand secure on that dread day,
When Jesus his dear Kingdom shall proclaim—
When tears are stopped and by Him wiped away,
And sing the glories of Emmanuel's name.

Gleanings.

BY M. D. W.

I am much in sympathy with Beecher's view of "systems of theology." "Away with such husks of truth," he says; "they are as dry as last year's pods, and empty as last year's bird nests. As the forms and ceremonies of the Jews were of value at one stage of progress, but when Christ came, were to be sloughed off—so now do systems of theology stand related to the church. They are like the wrapping leaves round a bud, essential in its early state to protect and preserve; but when the time of efflorescence comes, then the flower bursts out of them. Their work is done; and if they hold on longer, so glued together that the swelling bud in vain presses against them, they prove, not its protection, but its death."

He does not take the position that many do, that it is no matter what a man believes, if he only lives right, but he makes it the essential thing to live.—"What we want is truth which is vital. We must know how to act, how to control passions, how to walk with God, how to live. It is well and important to know what to believe; but the great thing is to know how to live."

In a morning prayer meeting he once said: "I should be glad to hear some brother speak. If any one has any heart experience, which he would like to tell, I would be glad to hear him. But we don't wish any stale advice by one person how his neighbor ought to feel; nor any bloodless commentating on disputed texts of Scripture. What we want is life—pulsating, glowing, Christian life. If any one has a living thought, or an aspiration, or some blessed experience of divine grace, we would like to hear him. If a person would bring in to me a fresh, blue violet, this beautiful Spring morning, I would thank him; and so if any one here has a like flower of Christian experience, which has blossomed forth from the wintry snows through the warmth and light of God's love, I would thank him for it—I would give more for it than for four acres of dried hay."

There is much of truth in these sentiments. How often does the mind weary and become barren in listening to isolated doctrines, well-arranged, systematically delivered, but lifeless — unctionless — as Beecher quaintly remarks, "as dry as last year's pods." "The spirit of life from God" has not "entered into them," and therefore while they may minister to the intellect, they do not nourish the soul. How often is it the case that the simple, broken testimony from the lips of some humble saint, accompanied with the "pulsating, glowing, Christian life," the heartfelt experience, tends more to strengthen, feed, comfort and edify, than the eloquent, well-arranged sermon.

In what did the wonderful success of the Washingtonian movement consist? Was it the burning words of eloquence from the learned, the noble, the accomplished, that won so many from the drunkard's ranks? By no means! The illiterate, the lowly, the unrefined, were the most successful laborers. And why? Because they spoke with eloquence of heartfelt experience; it was the recital of their own former degredation and wretchedness, and their present emancipation, peace and prosperity; that touched the drunkard's heart, opened the fountain of tears, awakened expiring hope, and led to the resolve, "I too will be a man!"

Yes, yes! it was the eloquence of experience, the earnestness of experience, that accomplished the work, and since the experience meeting has become obsolete, since the humble, illiterate, but reformed drunkard has ceased to be the active agent in this reform, the temperance movement has been on the retrograde. Secret societies and learned orators will never accomplish the work which the reformed drunkard accomplished, and those who wish to see the temperance cause prosper and gain vantage ground, must labor to restore the good old Washingtonian movement.

But when we gave the extract from Beecher, we had no idea of arguing on temperance reform, and the use we wish to make of what we have said is simply this; that as in the Washingtonian movement heartfelt experience was the secret of success, so it is the secret of success in the conversion of the sinner. We have marked its effect. We have seen the thoughtless, trifling sinner subdued to tears, by the simple recital of Christian experience. It is what we need in our social meetings, a relation of what God hrs wrought in our hearts by his grace—of the joy, peace and salvation that we now enjoy. It is these "blessed experiences of divine grace" that reach the heart and quicken its pulsations.

As Beecher says: "Theological systems are good in their place. They have their place, as all sciences have, but that place is not the pulpit. What people need from the pulpit is religious food, the bread of life. There is no science in nature; God makes nature, and then man makes the science. There are the flowers and the fruit, and man makes the science of botany. There are the stars and the sun, and out of their regular motions man makes the science of astronomy. All these sciences are well in their place. But when I want a bunch of flowers I do not thank a man who brings me calyxes and petals, and pistils and stamens, all scientifically analyzed, and divided, and labelled. When I want something to eat, I do not thank one for bringing me the component parts of bread and butter and coffee, chemically analyzed and scientifically arranged: the starch in one paper and the saccharine matter in another. No! I want them mixed as nature mixes them; and so I want the gospel given to me as Christ gave it, from His great heart, with all the freshness and beauty of life and experience. The people are hungry for the bread of life, and they are fed on its scientific elements. Let us get rid of these lifeless abstractions. Let us take the gospel as it is; in which I challenge any one to find the first approach to a theological system. It is fact, real life living experiences; and this is what we need in this day."

Divine Relationship.

Dear brethren in Jesus Christ:—It is truly desirable that we should be favored by the grace of God, with a correct understanding of the high privilege of our relationship to our Father in heaven in the present state, that we may duly appreciate the privilege, and praise the God of salvation. It is also desirable to have correct views of what is revealed by infinite love, respecting "what we shall be" in the more glorious future.

Luke 20: 36. Our blessed Lord, speaking of the resurrected saints, says, "Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

Our Lord's words prove that the children of the (i. e., the first) resurrection "are the children of God," but not that they first thereby become so. We have seen this implicitly admitted by the concession that we are now the children of God by adoption. This important question, however, concerning what true believers are in the present state, is determined by the plain and positive declarations of the Spirit of truth. Gal. 3: 26,—"For ye ARE (not shall be) all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ." 1 John 3: 2,—"Beloved, NOW are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—Please, dear brethren, observe, that the difference of the present and future states, is not "real sonship," but a more perfect and glorious conformity to our divine Lord. Gal. 4: 6,—"And because ye are (not shall be) sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." Rom. 8: 14,—"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Surely, brethren, this is "real sonship," demanding our acknowledgement and grateful praise. Moreover, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Rom. 8: 16. See also 1 John 3: 10; John 11: 52; 1 John 5: 2, &c.

Moreover, the divine testimony appears plain, that we are now the children of God by birth, or by being born of God. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, IS (not shall be) born of God." 1 John 5: 1. "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even unto them that believe on his name: which were (not shall be) born, not blood, nor of the will of the the will of man, but of flesh, nor of God." John 1: 12, 13. This precludes the instruction, that we only receive power to become the children of God, by being "born from the dead;" declaring that true believers in the name of Jesus, have already become the children of God by being born of him, i. e., of his Spirit.—"Every one that loveth IS (not shall be) born of God." 1 John 4: 7. See also 1 John 3: 9; 5: 4-18.

Our blessed Lord is indeed declared to be "the FRIST BORN from the dead;" and that he was quickened from the dead "by the Spirit;" and, if there is no other birth of the Spirit, but that of a literal deliverance from death and the grave, then the inference that "no body was 'born of the Spirit, BEFORE HIM,'" may be logical. We have seen, however, from plain and positive divine testimonies, that this is not the fact, but that there is another birth of the Spirit, besides being born from the dead, or restored to conscious existence. From the premises, that Christ is the first born from the dead, we can only logically infer that "no body wa 'born of the Spirit'" from literal death "before him." To infer that no body was 'born of the Spirit' before him," in some other sense, is to put more in the inference than is contained in the premises.

The children of the wicked one and the children of God are, in the present state, distinguished by the appropriate terms of natural, or animal and carnal, and spiritual or holy. The latter is the effect or consequence of our being born of the Spirit, or begotten of God, by the word of truth. James 1: 10. The operations of the Spirit of God are various. They are both physical and spiritual, relatsngto body, soul and spirit. Blessed be God, we are prepared by a divine birth, or regeneration by his Holy Spirit, in the present state, for the inheritance of the saints in light. Without this, no man would be meet for that glorious inheritance or for a birth from the grave to immortality.

"If any man is in Christ Jesus he IS a new creature," &c.: God's "workmanship created in Christ Jesus unto good works." Eph. 2nd chapter. To this spiritual renewal, and not to our resurrection from the grave, I understand our Lord to refer, John 3: 3—7. This appears by comparing his words in this passage, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the pirit is Sspirit," with those of the inspired apostle, Rom. 8: 9—11: "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. And if Christ be in you the body is dead (i. e, liable to death) because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Thus we see, brethren, that the antecedent quickening of the mind, from spiritual death, or being "dead in trespasses and sins," by being born of the Spirit, is the precious pledge of our quickening from the grave to immortal life by the same Spirit.

The true principles of biblical interpretation will not admit us to depart from the obvious import of a passage, and explain it by another passage not referring to precisely the same subject, when the plain import of both passages are not inconsistent."

It has been affirmed that the passage, "that he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Devil," is to be explained by the passage, "that he might destroy the works of the Devil." Thus the plain import of the former, viz., that the Devil himself is to be destroyed, is denied. But as the destruction of the works of the Devil, and of the Devil himself, are harmonious propositions, the denial of the latter is unwarrantable. So, as the present spiritual birth of the Holy Spirit, is perfectly consistent with a future physical birth from the grave, both should be admitted, according to the obvious import of the divine testimonies relative to each.

And now let our grateful songs of praise to the God of salvation, mingle with those of holy angels who are now rejoicing over sinners repenting throughout the land, "which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Let our fervent prayers, perfumed with the incense of the intercession of our great High Priest, ascend for the continuance and mighty increase of this gracious and blessed work of the Spirit of God. The unjust will be born from the dead, or the grave, to a temporary life, but those only who are, in the present state, born of the Spirit, will be born from the dead hereafter to life eternal.

Respectfully submitted by your servant in Jesus Christ.

Birth of the Spirit.

No. II.

The new birth is by the water and the Spirit. And this the Lord insisted was essential in entering the kingdom of heaven, in speaking of a man who had been born, who was in this world. A very natural conclusion is that he would be found in the kingdom when he should be born; but we are willing to be governed by the necessity of the case.

I. It is granted that a man is the subject—a man, who has been born, for "ye must be born again," says Christ.

It is also asserted by him that except a man be born of the water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. Nicodemus asked him if a man could be born when he should be old. Jesus told him that it was not a fleshly birth, but a spiritual one, and to explain, says, "the wind bloweth," &c., "so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The birth of a child, Jesus calls the birth of a man. It is in vain to say that Jesus meant to be understood as speaking of the spiritual part of man. It is certain he did not; for it is a birth of the water as well as Spirit. Besides, the fact that both Jesus and Nicodemus speak of a man, and Jesus never did, anywhere, speak of Spirit alone as man.

II. "Of the water." There are different opinions as to this work. Some claim that it is the natural birth. We are familiar with the fact that fœtal life is attended with the development of the amni; but thousands of those who hear the gospel might not know it if his immediate disciples did. And, again, there is no power to give life in this element—nothing producing. It is merely an attendant agent or medium. Besides, this subjects us to the necessity of supposing Christ thought it important to tell a learned man that a man must be born once, before he could be born again.

Others suppose it is baptism. This looks like a beautiful figure of baptism in some respects. The apostle speaks of "being buried with Christ by baptism;" of being "baptized unto his death." Immersion is indeed a striking emblem of death and resurrection; but this all does not answer to the import of the term birth; for it would appear that the source of the birth should present power to produce. There is no power to produce here. To put a man in the water and bring the man out of the water cannot be called a birth nor represent it; because he comes out the same being, and of the same character of existence as he went in.

So if a man were to be put in the ground and come out a man only, he would not be born—and here is a difficulty even in making baptism a figure of the resurrection. To be born of a being or power, the embryotic existence must have commenced with that power, and have been promoted by a process depending upon the forces of that being or power. There is nothing in water or earth to secure man's spiritual or immortal life.

Therefore we conclude that this water—this baptism (for we believe it is a baptism) must be another, which is stated in the Bible. It need not be objected that this would be the making of the whole subject figurative. This cannot be. The man is not a figure—the spirit is not a figure, but the birth is a figure and the water may be.

The term water is doubtless used as a figure, and elsewhere too. The term baptism, which implies water, when used without any qualifying term—as baptism of fire, or baptism of the Holy Ghost—is employed by the Lord Jesus Christ and by the apostles, without any qualifying term, when at the same time they do not mean literal water. At least I am sure Christ does not. He must, therefore, refer to water in a figurative sense. Hence the following, which will explain the water: "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? Now this does not mean baptism in literal water. How do you know? I know it by a corresponding passage. He says again, "I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished." This does not refer to literal water,—and yet baptism means water, when not limited by a qualifying term. It is not qualified here, and means water by a figure. We at once see the propriety of employing the term water, when we find him using baptism in that sense.

The term water should be a figure because it is to operate conjointly with the Spirit; and being only a physical agent, cannot literally co-operate with it. That there is a joint action to produce a given result is patent; it is only one birth—being born again, and entering the kingdom of God, as the result. And further, he covers the whole ground by the birth of the Spirit—the man—who is to be born again, being already born of the flesh. The water then presents the forces of the embryotic life—the cross—loss of life here, to "keep it unto life eternal;" for this whole christian warfare is but a preparation.—How can a man be born of the Spirit?

The New Hymn Book.

Many of our congregations are adopting the new "Harp." It is to be hoped all will do so. Many of us have grown tired of turning over the pages of former books, in vain search after a suitable hymn for particular occasions, and are glad, at last, to have a greater variety to select from;—good old "spiritual songs," sung by saints of other days, full of truth, poetry and devotion. But some object of course. It is to be feared some have become so accustomed to a kind of [illegible] singing, they have lost all relish for good poetry and deep-toned devotional hymns. In some instances, scarcely any thing is sung but hymns descriptive of scenery in the future, as depicted by the poet's fancy,—crystal streams, verdant plains, waving trees, unfading flowers, cloudless skies, music, friendship and gladness,—all desirable enough—all which we expect to realize in the "new earth,—Paradise;" but I have thought where such singing prevailed, the tone of piety fell far below the highest key. Would it not be well to sing more of Calvary and the Cross, redeeming grace and dying love; to lift the heart in adoration and praise to the great Creator of all, by rehearsing his wonderful works and speaking of his glorious attributes? But the book "is imperfect." O yes, most every thing of an earthly origin is. It's a pity it is not free from every error. It's a pity we were not all free from every error; it would save the church a deal of trouble. It contains some objectionable phrases, but we need not sing every verse and line of a thousand hymns. Let us be careful to sing with grace in our hearts to the Lord. But ah, how imperfect must our best worship appear in the eyes of the high and holy One!

"Weak is the effort of each heart,
And cold our warmest thought;
But when we see thee as thou art,
We'll praise thee as we ought."

MARIA T.

At Jesus' Feet.

The Rev, W. Jay one day attended the dying bed of a young female, who thus addressed him:

"I have little," said she, "to relate as to my experience. I have been much tried and tempted, but this is my sheet-anchor. He has said, 'He that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out.' I know I come to him, and I expect that he will be as good as his word. Poor and unworthy as I am, he will not trifle with me; it would be beneath his greatness; I am at his feet. As you have often said:—

'Tis joy enough, my All-in-all,
At thy dear feet to lie;
Thou wilt not let me lower fall,
And none can higher fly.'"

Correspondence.

From Bro. S. D. Emerson.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say a few words to the brethren and sisters scattered up and down this Paradise lost.

There is a little band of christians here who are so striving to order their lives, that when the Master comes he may find their house in readiness to receive him. They are striving to take the Bible for their guide and preach Christ and him crucified to a dying world, fixing their hopes on the resurrection of the dead, and waiting with patience their blessed Lord's appearing.

The work that is going on through the land from east to west, from north to south, has not as yet made so great an impression upon the hearts of sinners here as it has in other places; yet there seems to be an awakening among the professed church, and meetings are appointed for supplicating the throne of grace for dying souls. In the town of South Reading, the Lord is at work and the church has felt the effects of his power. The Advent believers there are strong in the faith and hold their usual meetings. There seems to be a good spirit among the brethren and they come over to this town with the true faith to help us along in the christian warfare. Brethren and sisters, be faithful to your post. It is a great day, and every soldier should be ready for active duty. The Lord is at work, and who shall oppose his mighty arm? Let us all do the best we can to promote the cause of our blessed Lord and Master.

From Bro. G. W. Gillespie.

Bro. Grant:—I feel indebted to you, and the "Crisis," for the pleasure that I take weekly in hearing from those of like "precious faith." I love to hear from those who love Jesus, and prove their love by loving his "appearing;" for such are to receive a crown of glory that "fadeth not away."

Never have I felt the need of living entirely to the glory of God as I do now. The times are perilous. Careless and lukewarm souls are in danger. Wo unto them that are at ease in Zion! "Watch and pray" should be the motto of every christian in this cold and lethargic time of religion. My prayer is daily that I may have grace to overcome the drowsiness which would close my eyes in sleep, that that day may not come upon me unawares. I want to stand blameless when the Son of God comes to give unto every man according as his work shall be. I fear and tremble, lest a promise being left me, I should seem to come short of it. And when I look around and see those professors who do not live according to the requirements of the Gospel, when they can, I pray the Lord that I may, by his grace assisting me, deny myself of every thing that will not redound to the glory of God. I did love tea and coffee, but praise the Lord, I have found out that the clear sparkling water which comes from the fountain is richer, healthier and cheaper; and that I can drink to the "glory of God."

I am trying to do all that I can for this place, and the prospect is cheering. I think the "Crisis" and some other works have removed a good deal of prejudice. No one has preached here since Bro. Hastings last spring; he left a good impression. I have tried to get some one here to preach, but have not yet. Nevertheless, I shall not be "weary in well doing," for I know that the Lord will hear prayer, and send some one in his own good time. Pray for me, that my "faith fail not."

Yours struggling for life,

G. W. Gillespie.

From A. P. Morrill.

Bro. Grant:—I want to say to my brethren and sisters through the Crisis, that I am still a pilgrim and stranger, bound with you to that better land.

Let the storm blow high or low, Jesus is our captain; he is in the ship, and can command the waves, we need not fear; so onward we safely move into the harbor of eternal rest.

Very soon our little bark will land in the everlasting kingdom of our God. Then the crowns we shall wear. They will outshine the morning stars. Glory to God for what he has in reserve for the faithful! How blessed are the promises [illegible] and sisters of like precious faith, but where I am called a fanatic for believing that my Jesus is soon to come, and talking of the signs of the times, and am told all these things were always the same; virtually saying, "All things continue as they were from the beginning." Yet after all, I think the Lord has some children in this place, and wherever I can see and feel the Spirit of my blessed Master, and the love of his appearing, such I hail as brother and sister.

My heart is comforted while I read the communications of my dear brethren and sisters, and anticipate soon meeting them in the kingdom of God.

"There we shall bathe our weary souls
In seas of heavenly rest,
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across our peaceful breasts."

I remain your sister looking for redemption and praying, "Thy kingdom come,"

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 14, 1858.

Signs of the Times.

Many are anxiously inquiring, "What do you think of the great revival now in progress?" We think it is the last one this world will enjoy. This is our opinion. Another, who is somewhat bigoted, asks, "Do you think the Lord is in this great work?" Most certainly we do, and as much so, if not more, than in any revival since the days of the apostles. We believe it to be the Lord's special work; and we tremble for the individual who sets himself against it. We believe every devoted christian is rejoiced in the glad tidings which come in from the north, south, east and west, declaring victories gained in the name of the Lord of hosts. When we hear of those who profess to be followers of Christ, and yet oppose, or speak lightly of this work, it reminds us of an incident in the days of the Savior. One of his followers was casting out devils in his name, and some other disciples came along and told him to stop. The reason given for the prohibition was, "because he followeth not us."

We think the time has fully come to pull down the sectarian walls, and to call christians the "church of God," instead of "our church." Doors are opening to receive the great truths of the gospel that have been so long buried beneath theological rubbish. For many years there has not been such an interest to hear sermons on the prophecies and evidences of the coming of Christ. Bro. Edwin Burnham has been laboring with signal success in several of the churches in the vicinity of Boston, and is now preaching in the church in Baldwin Place to large and attentive congregations. Some have asked, "has he given up his faith in the great truths he has preached for the last few years?" Not in the least, neither has he made any compromise, but is sounding them out in a faithful manner to his astonished hearers. We hope all others will do the same, when the opportunity offers. We have long thought that, before the coming of the Lord, some way would be opened for the truth on the coming and kingdom of Christ to be presented to the children of the Lord in the different churches. We look upon the present "signs of the times" as very ominous of our nearness to the great day of the Lord. As a people, we are in danger of partaking too much of the spirit of spectators in this matter. No class should be more engaged in leading sinners to Christ, than those who believe that Jesus is soon coming. We have slept long enough to be rested; now let us go forth to the conflict with double energy. The enemies of God and his truth are awakening, and shall we be indifferent? Be firm, but kind. Be earnest, but meek. Help every one, but have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Exhort all men, but spend no time in contentious disputes. Let your light shine. Soon the day will dawn, and the King of glory will appear to the joy of the waiting bride. Be ready!

☞ We frequently receive communications with no signature. If you wish your articles published, send your name. We would also say that it is earnestly desired that every article for the Crisis should have the writer's name attached. Write nothing only what you are willing should appear over your own signature. We are aware that other papers [illegible] titious names attached to their articles, but let us make our paper an exception. Your articles will be read with much more interest.

As it Should Be.

One interesting feature of the work of grace which is so widely extending throughout the country, is the union in effort and sympathy among the hitherto disjointed members of the body of Christ. In so far as a true union has been sought and effected, who can doubt that the hand of God has done it?

For the lack of this life-giving element, this hearty co-operation among the churches, with one end in view, even the salvation of the perishing, and they, too, at their very altars,—even for this destitution, barrenness and desolation has come unto Zion; whereas she should oftener have been the joyful mother of many children. Her walls should have been salvation, and her courts filled with sounding praise. And in turning to her the sin-wearied traveler should have found within her borders the rest long sought, and been instructed in the blessed way to life and immortality.

But where have been the nursing fathers and mothers in Israel? Why have the tender lambs been left so to die of coldness and neglect? Who shall answer to this at the great day? How it stands every disciple in hand, especially at this time, to see to it that the blood of souls is not clinging to their garments. Terrible thought, to stand in judgment, in close proximity with one, even, whose hope of life has been destroyed, through our instrumentality, by inactivity, or indifference as regarded their eternal welfare! May heaven preserve us from such a fate!

But for this we are thankful, that the true gospel union of primitive times is being revived. In this can but we rejoice. The faithful may now expect to see the fruit of their labors. And the tokens of special divine favor, tidings of which greet our ears from every quarter of our land, seem but to encourage and foster this spirit of harmony and labor of love. And that this shall not soon cease is our prayer. We know that what is of God and truth will stand, though earth be removed. "The foundation of God standeth sure."—And what is built upon this foundation may well defy the restless changings of human feeling, human passion, and bare excitement, and calmly rest secure, unmoved, amid them all.

We must admit that it is the duty (and is it not a blessed privilege?) of all christians, no matter by what name, association or position has been pleased to term them, to unite harmoniously, prayerfully, and thus efficiently, in this greatest of all human efforts, even the salvation of those for whom the Savior suffered and died. This must be so. And the fact that the present labors of God's dear children, when this principle has been carried out, have been signally blessed, and much fruit has appeared, according to promise, should satisfy the most skeptical. The glory belongs to God only; for he has but verified the promise,—"Where two or three are agreed," &c. He always does as he says, but until of late it would seem that the church had scarcely believed it. And now as she gathers her faith, looking unto Jesus, the rich gifts of heaven are being graciously distilled in abundant profusion.

The Lord has not for these long years in the past forgotten to be gracious; neither has his ear been heavy that he could not hear, nor his arm shortened that he could no longer save. He has ever been merciful, slow to anger, plenteous in mercy, not willing that any should perish, but rather that the sinner should come to him and live. His arm has been outstretched all the day; but none regarded it. The melting accents of love and entreaty have fallen unheeded upon the sinner's ear; who, seeking his own way ever, slighted and abused the long-suffering mercy of him whom he should have loved and worshipped. But to-day the guilty sinner finds there is hope in his case. It is but to call upon the name of the Lord, and his sins may be forgiven.

Truly it becomes the christian now to be alive to every duty, firm at his post, unflinching in battle, resolute for God and truth, in every circumstance. Eternal responsibilities rest upon him. And God will not hold him excusable wherein he has imparted ability to perform. The talent, if it be but one, must know activity in the Master's service, that he may obtain his own with usury when the day of accounts shall roll around. There is enough for every one to do. None need be idle. The husbandman will have no drones in his vineyard; but requireth labor at our hands, and for reward, eternal life is sure. In the language of another, one and all, "make a beginning. Do something. We can speak to some impenitent person upon the subject of his soul. Every christian can approach some one or more in the circle of his or her acquaintance. You can lead your friends to the house of God, to the inquiry meeting. You can give them well-selected tracts. You can show that you feel for them, and are in earnest to bring them to Christ. God has a work for you to do. What is it? Do something to save souls."

And there must be earnestness, and an unwearied persuasion on the part of christians toward the sinner, as well as unanimity among themselves, if they would still see the work of grace move on. Take the blessed Savior as an example of earnestness and fervency of spirit. Do as he did. Feel as he did. And, by the blessing of Heaven, fruits shall attend the effort.

May the following appeal, on "the duty of conversing with men with reference to their immediate repentance," stir up each heart that may read this to greater activity and zeal in the cause of the dear Redeemer. The extract is taken from a tract entitled "Hints to Christians."

"Have you performed this great duty? Can your conscience, your closet, your family, and the circle of your friends bear witness to your fidelity? If not, are you not called once more to examine the foundation of your hopes, remembering that if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his? Do you love Christ, do you love his cause, do you love the souls of men, and can you be negligent of this duty? Say not as too many do say, 'I am not qualified for the work.' A holy heart, supreme devotedness to God, and an ardent love for the souls of men, are the chief qualifications: and need any Christian be destitute of these? If you really believe that sinners around you are in danger of eternal ruin can you not warn them? If you believe that Christ is able and willing to save all who will come unto him, can you not entreat them to accept his offers of mercy without delay?

Are not sinners as really and fearfully exposed to eternal perdition as men in a burning house are to perish by the flames? If you saw any of your friends or neighbors in such peril, would it need peculiar qualifications to lift up the voice of warning, and bid them escape for their lives, or to rush in and save them with fear, pulling them out of the fire? And can you not with equal, nay, greater earnestness, warn sinners to flee from the wrath to come; and if they linger, lay hold on them, being merciful unto them, and with irresistible persuasions, induce them, without delay, to seek safety in the city of refuge? Make, therefore, no more excuses for neglect of so plain a duty; the claims of God are upon you; the cries of perishing souls come up around you; the groans of a dying world are sounding in your ears, and can you remain longer inactive? Break the bands of sloth; engage at once in the work; be courageous; be wise; turn many to righteousness, and you shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars for ever and ever."

We have just received a supply of the "Three Kingdoms,"—an excellent tract, by T. M. Preble. This is the second edition, revised and improved. Price 90 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single, postage 1 cent. The "Three Kingdoms" are "The Kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, and the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ; or a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be." Get it, and let your neighbor read it.

☞ If any of our preaching brethren think of coming West, I very much wish they would arrange to be at our Conference.

"Apollos."

We have just received a valuable little book entitled "Apollos," from the publishers, Gould & Lincoln, 59 Washington Street. It is perfectly adapted to the wants of those who have lately taken upon them the cross of Christ, and are determined to pursue the heavenly journey. It contains also those two sweet hymns, "Just as I am," and "Just as thou art." Price 6 cts. per copy.

Campmeeting, Boarding, &c.

Bro. Grant:—Seeing an article in the Crisis from Brn. Ladd and Munger, concerning the matter of boarding at the Annual Campmeeting, it seems good to me to say, I think a committee, joint stock or partnership, will be a very poor ship to sail in. What is everybody's business is nobody's. If all undertake it, it wont be done at all. Too many cooks will spoil the broth. Half a dozen overseers in the narrow limits of a board shanty would be in the way.

I think Brn. Ladd & Munger had better, if they are willing, assume the whole responsibility. They understand the business. They are near the place. They are good men and true. They will take the care off from all the others, and I hope they will make something out of it, furnishing board at fifty cents per day, but I must confess that I don't see much chance for that.

I doubt whether with the closest economy and the most favorable circumstances, they would be able to make $50 out of the whole operation. One rainy day would perhaps spoil the whole, and leave them out of pocket.

Now who that is competent to take this burden would spend the time, three or four weeks; take the risk of loss, endure the care, and be deprived of the enjoyment of the meeting, without a fair compensation? I wouldn't have the charge, care and risk for $50, and I don't believe that many others would want the job at that price.

I think it is best to let well enough alone, and say to the Brn. having the matter in charge, go ahead and take care of the boarding, and the rest of the matters, that the others may enjoy the meeting "without carefulness."

Palestine.

"A vessel is fitting up for a voyage to Palestine, to leave in June." "Excursion passengers can be accommodated at reasonable cost."

The plan proposed as most effectual, is to purchase a ship, by subscription, and owned in shares by the colonist and other parties who may wish to promote the object; the shares to be $200 each, in 200 shares; beside the purchase of the vessel, tools, wagons, harness, seeds, and anything else desirable, such as all kinds of building materials, tents, &c., all of which to belong to the stockholders, to be used to their convenience. All profits rising from freight of said vessel subject to an appropriate division. It is also proposed to purchase 1000 acres of good land, for the mutual benefit of the whole. There are a goodly number waiting to go, but lack the means: let aid be afforded.

Books now open at the Office of Dr. Townsend, 82 Nassau Street, for subscriptions. Donations can be sent to his office.

Here is a good opening for melioration. Let the benevolent avail themselves of this most excellent opportunity. All sorts of apparel and fabrics will be excellent contributions; materials for building, timber, boards, planks, nails, brick, &c., with agricultural tools. Dispatch is desirable. Friends of Israel, help.

For the Crisis.

"Watchman, What of the Night?"

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to say a few words through the Crisis to the scattered and waiting saints.

While reflecting upon the lightning speed at which things are moving at the present age of the world, I am more and more convinced that the end of all things is at hand, and that "it hasteth greatly."—And I wish to inquire of the "little flock," if they are prepared to answer at this time the very important question, "Watchman, what of the night?" or, who among the professed watchmen of the nominal churches are prepared to give light on this question?

The Lord Jesus while on earth gave faithfully to his disciples the signs that should precede his second coming; and they listened to his instructions with gladness of heart while he commanded them to watch the signs of the times and take heed. And those instrumentalities were for all his disciples, down to the end of time. And who but his faithful disciples have seen and realized a perfect fulfillment of those signs as they have passed before our eyes? Has the popular professor of religion observed the fulfillment of any of these signs? Not one. But they have said in their hearts, "my Lord delayeth his coming"—at least a thousand years. "We are going to have good times yet; for the world must be converted before the Lord comes; and it is not for us to pry into prophecy and Revelation." Brethren, this has been and now is the language of their hearts; and hence it is evident that they can give us no light in reference to our present position.

"Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples, and I will wait upon the Lord that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him." Isa. 8, 16–17.

The prophet Isaiah no doubt intends to give an unmistakable sign of the time when the disciples may look for the coming of the Lord; for he says, verse 19, "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?"—ver. 20 "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." And he also informs us that our Lord shall come when those familiar spirits shall be teaching that the dead are not dead, but know all things; for he says, verse 22, "And they shall look unto the earth; and behold trouble and darkness, dimness of anguish; and they shall be driven to darkness."

Brethren, we have taken a stand that forbids our going back into the world. It is no time for wavering, but a time when each soldier and guide should be at his post, "like men who wait for their Lord." The Lord says to his disciples, "Whosoever, therefore, shall be ashamed of me and my words, in this sinful and adulterous generation, of him also will the Son of man be ashamed when he cometh in his Father's glory with the holy angels."—That we may all take heed to the sure word of prophecy, and be delivered from the seducing spirits of the last days, is the prayer of your unworthy friend hoping for immortality and eternal life,

For the Crisis.

Who is the Good and Successful Minister of Jesus Christ?

Is it the man who labors hard and long to make us believe the Lord is coming to the earth again, or that the dead know not any thing, or that there is an age to come, or that there is to be an apostolic order in the church, or any other doctrine, under which he may have rallied? Or is it he whose main object is to win souls to Christ? I know that all these are proper subjects to be presented occasionally, but when a man makes either of them his all-absorbing theme, week after week, year in and year out, he has mistaken his calling as a preacher, if he ever had one.

The fact is, the church has been surfeited with doctrines and theories, without the seasoning of grace in the heart, until it has become dyspeptic; and nothing but a long and refreshing draught of the Holy Spirit will save it from sinking in these days of peril.

Doctrines and theories are not grace; and if a man makes them his rule of faith or a test of fellowship, he is self-deceived and trusting upon a broken reed.

We often hear brethren speaking of their experience in '43, and they seem to conclude that it was peculiar to that time and that they are never to enjoy the like again, not considering that the same course of life now would produce the same experience.

Let us for a moment look at the contrast. Then, it was humility, watchfulness, prayerfulness, heart-work, closet work, knee-work, charity, walking in the Spirit, brotherly love, and a desire to have all the christian graces, no vain jangling or disputing about words to no profit; no ill will, no tattling, no pride, no love of the world, no evil surmising, no divisions, but joy and peace in the Holy Ghost.—Now, to sum it all up in a few words, it is in too many cases backsliding from the straight and narrow way that leads to life. And what will arouse these sleepers from their stupor? Must they have another message that the Lord is now coming? This will not do it without repentance and turning to God; for a belief in the coming of Christ alone, without a humble walk with God, will not produce the fruits of the Spirit.

May the time soon come when all who are to be saved when the Master returns shall be ready and waiting, with oil in their vessels, and lamps trimmed and burning.

The Passover---When is It?

Josephus says, Ant. B. 111, chap. 10 paragraph 5, "In the month of Xanthicus which is by us called Nisan, and in the beginning of our year, on the 14th day of the lunar month, when the sun is in Aries (for it was in this month that we were delivered from bondage under the Egyptians, the law ordained, that we should every year slay that sacrifice which I before told you we slew when we came out of Egypt and which was called the Passover."

The sun enters the sign Aries, March 20th, and goes out of it April 20th. The astronomical change of the moon this year when the sun is in Aries, is April 13, 9 h. 51 m. eve. The Jews commenced their [illegible] year, not by the astronomical change, but by seeing the new moon. The new moon will not probably be seen until the evening of April 15th. In that case, as the evening and morning made the day with the Jews; April 16th would be the first of the Jewish year, and Apr. 29th would thus be the 14th day of the first month—the Passover this year.

For the Crisis.

What a Contrast!

Now we have set before us Life and Death, is it not strange that we as rational beings, who are capable of judging for ourselves in all earthly matters, should be so entirely void of judgment when we come to look after our eternal interest, which is of so much importance? How many there are who go on as though they expected to live as long as time should last and enjoy the pleasures of this world, not thinking that very soon they shall be as though they had not been—that they shall be as stubble, burned up with unquenchable fire. This must be the portion of all those that know not God at his coming.

But how different on the other hand, with those that have made the wise choice, and are constantly striving to lay up their treasures where moths cannot corrupt, neither thieves break through and steal; who have the blessed promise that if they continue faithful unto the end they shall inherit life eternal.

Dear reader, let us look to this all important matter to-day, for we have no promise of to-morrow. If you have not already made up your mind to live for Christ, may God help you to do it now, that we may all be ready to hail with great joy the blessed Savior, who shall come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. May we all lift up our heads knowing that our redemption draweth nigh, when this mortal shall put on immortality, when the dead in Christ shall be raised up and the living changed in a twinkling of an eye.

J. S. Addis.

Wilton, Io.

From Bro. A. K. Morse.

Brn. and Srs.:—Inasmuch as I am one among you, permit me to say a few words. We are all going to the judgment. Soon our days will be numbered, and God will render to every man according to his deeds. We shall be there, and if we are pure in heart we shall not fear the result. The King will say to those on his right hand, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

We expected to have been in that bright world years ago, but our hope has been deferred, and some of our hearts have been made sick, and we have felt like dying; and yet, as saith the apostle, "as dying, and behold we live; as chastened and not killed;" we still hope for eternal life and the kingdom all pure, and if we hope for that we see not then may we with patience and perseverance wait for it. It will be good when it comes, and it comes soon.

You know, brethren, that Paul, a servant of God, declared the night to be far spent in his time, and if such was the fact, we must be near the dawn of endless day, and when we reach the point, when the day shall have come, O brethren, shall we not say with a full soul,

"The long dark night of time is past,
And the morn of eternity has come at last!"

Our tears, our pains, our groans, are passed and gone; death, and him that had the power of it, destroyed; sin and sinners are no more. Surely, the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him, and the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him. Even so let it be.

May the Lord help us to be righteous in all the acts of this present life, that when he cometh we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming. Yours in hope,

Albert K. Morse.

LET THE POOR LOVE ME.

I love that warm and feeling heart
Which deeply feels for others' woes,
Which takes the honest poor man's part,
Fearless of either friends or foes.

Our Savior while he sojourned here,
Upon the plainest food was fed;
Foxes had holes, and birds had nests,
But he'd not where to lay his head.

'Tis true prosperity gains friends—
Alas! when call'd those friends to try,
When in adversity we're placed,
How soon they wither, faint and die.

I'd rather by the poor be loved,
Than by the rich esteemed high;
All friendships here formed with the rich
Are soon forgotten when we die.

But friendships formed by kindly deeds,
They never can forgotten be,
When those we love have passed away,
They still are sweet to memory.

I'd rather on my plain tombstone
Engrave these words—the poor man's friend—
Than have a mighty monument
Which should from earth to heaven ascend.

When I am dead, if I could speak,
These words my funeral friends should hear,—
Just raise the lid, and on my cheek
O let me feel the orphan's tear!

Should riches ever be my lot,
I'd let the proud and haughty see
Their smiles nor frowns I'd heed them not,
The poor shall find a friend in me.

Health Department.

AIR, LIGHT AND DRESS.

Breathe pure, fresh air night and day. All diseases are made worse by breathing impure air. Also let your rooms have sunlight as well as air: the want of light is the cause of much disease.

The dress should be light, clean, and comfortably warm, and be worn so loosely as not to impede the circulation or the free motion of the body or limbs.

No article of dress that is used during the day should be worn at night.

All bed clothing and wearing apparel should be frequently and thoroughly aired.

Let your sleep be taken on a mattress of clean and pliable materials.

A feather bed induces diseases by heating the system and confining perspiration about the body.

Sleep under, and wear as little clothing, as a wise regard to comfort will permit.

IMPORTANCE OF VENTILATION.

It is a well-ascertained fact that a healthy man takes into his lungs nearly sixty hogsheads of air every twenty-four hours; if this air, as it comes from the lungs, impure and robbed of its life-giving principle, were thrown off colored and visible to the eye, the presence of so large a source of disease would convince us at once of the duty of ventilation.

The air is the only agent which keeps the blood pure and enables it to circulate and impart life-power to the system. It no less sustains life, by imparting this wonderful property to the blood, than by expelling the impurities which the veins have collected and brought to the lungs for expulsion, and which, if left in the system but a very few moments, would cause immediate death.

Now, if the air is deranged in any of its natural proportions—by expired breath, impure matter thrown off from the skin, smoke, gas, or any other impurities—we cannot breathe it without injurious results; therefore the air in our rooms should be constantly allowed to escape, and pure fresh air supply its place.

CONSUMPTION PREVENTED.

It is impossible to have the consumption if the lungs are filled several times each day with a few full inspirations of pure fresh air.

Now it is unnatural to fill the lungs when there is no demand for the air, therefore take a little active exercise just before your deep breathing, and all will be right.

BATHING.

A bath should not be taken with nervous haste, but deliberately; and when there is a strong fear or shrinking dread of a bath, it may be wise to omit it—provided indolence or a love of ease have no voice in deciding.

Cold bathing should never be performed when the body is fatigued; but a perspiring state does not forbid a cool or cold bath.

The parts bathed should be warm to commence with: a reduction of temperature is to be expected, and should be overcome by a resort to exercise; but artificial heat is to be preferred to a long chill.

As a general rule the lower extremities require most bathing, and the amount should decrease till the head is reached, which should receive the least.

Warm bathing is enervating and should be usually followed by a light wash of cool or cold water.

A general bath should not be taken for three hours after a full meal, while the stomach is employed in digestion. And half an hour should elapse after a full bath, to allow the system to regain a state of quietude before eating.

"FEET WARM, HEAD COOL."

To secure this, bathe the head least, and feet oftenest of all parts of the body. In the natural life the most cold water comes in contact with the feet: the wild animals in nature teach us that; therefore, if we would enjoy cultivated life with natural health, we must bathe the feet and legs more with cold water than the rest of the body.

Where the water is most abundantly and frequently applied, to that place particularly are drawn energy, warmth, and the matters of disease, which discharge by boils or pimples. Most men are so uncleanly as to wash only the face, and not the whole body, hence the tendency of pimples to the face.

Females should, from considerations of beauty alone, take daily a full cool bath, and also a foot-bath. If troubled with cold feet, one or two extra foot-baths should be taken when the feet are warm and best able to resist the cold. Rubbing, and as much exercise as convenient should be taken while bathing, as well as before and after a bath.—W. Hunt.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

Newburyport, April 5, 1858.

The ceremony of baptism was performed yesterday by Rev. Daniel P. Pike, in the Merrimack River, and we doubt if such a scene ever had a parallel in this country. Ninety-seven persons, recently converted, were immersed by their pastor, in the presence of thousands of witnesses. The place selected was the landing at the foot of Green street, as this offered good accommodations for the ceremony, and afforded better sites for the multitude. At about two o'clock in the afternoon the subjects were on the ground, and after appropriate religious ceremonies, the pastor, accompanied by a group of fourteen, males and females, entered the water. This group was followed by another, and in this order until the whole number was baptised. The time consumed was less than two hours, and during this time Mr. P. remained in the water and performed the whole ceremony without in the least exhibiting fatigue or indicating lassitude. Language would fail in conveying an impression of the scene. As one after another was immersed, and the thanksgiving and praise ascended to heaven, it seemed as though that vast multitude, which covered every inch of space in the vicinity, was uniting in the song, and were impulsively breathing the emotions of religious thought. The converts who thus publicly consecrated themselves to God, were from both sexes and of different ages, men and women advanced in life, and young boys and girls even to childhood. Such a scene we have never before witnessed, and we doubt if its like has ever occurred since our nation was established. It formed a day in our history that will never be forgotten, and we hope that the influence of that occasion will live in the hearts of our people, and manifest itself in their acts. Such a spectacle must indeed teach men of a power above all earthly power, and convince them that there is a reality in religion that the world know not of. The waters of the Merrimack were consecrated as never before. The crowd that witnessed these ceremonies is estimated all the way from five to ten thousand. All we can say is, that it was a dense mass of human beings. Large numbers came in from other towns in the vicinity, and carriages lined the streets in this neighborhood.—Traveler.

The Union business men's prayer meeting at the chapel Saturday at 12 o'clock was led by Mr. Babcock. It was stated as the result of Union meetings, that forty one converts in Philadelphia, who gave an account of their conversion, said that their attention was first arrested by the Union prayer meetings in Jaynes' Hall.

Another gentleman said he had been laboring on board the sloop of war Ohio. Seventeen hopeful conversions had occurred on board that ship within a short time. Six backsliders had been reclaimed, and there were now three enquirers. It was stated that within a few days a number of students had been converted in Harvard College. Others are enquiring.

One gentleman stated, that, in his business correspondence, considerable religious intelligence had been communicated. The parties would first write about their business, and then speak of their own conversion or of the revival. Such letters were received almost every day. He alluded to one letter received from Provincetown, in which, after attending to business matters, the following was added: "We have union meetings every morning at 9 o'clock. This morning an officer of a whaleman, just ready to sail, came into our meeting, and said he did not dare to go to sea without Christ. He had been convicted for several weeks. Rev. Mr. Minck, the Orthodox minister, knelt with him in prayer, followed by others, and the young man was converted, and in less than two hours was leaving the harbor in his vessel. Quite a number of us went from the meeting to the wharf to see him off. He said, on taking leave of his friends, 'I now have Jesus to go with me on the ocean.'"

David Snow conducted the prayer meeting at the Old South Chapel at 8 o'clock, Saturday morning. The first part of the hour was devoted almost entirely to prayer. One gentleman related a very interesting account of the successful efforts of a little girl in inducing her intemperate father to attend the prayer meeting. He just entered the door and took a seat, while the little girl went farther up the aisle. When those persons were requested to rise who wished for the prayers of Christians, she knelt down, and in a word or two prayed for her father. She then went down and asked her father to come; he did so, was convinced of his sin and gave his heart to Christ.—Traveller.

Says the New York Independent, "And now what we see is a work unprecedented in any former times. It is not to be ascribed to the career of any preacher—it seems in fact not to have come primarily from the ministry at all, but to have welled up from the heart of the people toward the pulpit, rather than rolled down from the pulpit to the people. Instead of mass-meetings to hear preachers, we have mass-meetings of brethren moved with one accord to pray and to open their hearts to one another.

It is remarkable that no modern language can more fitly describe the existing state of things than that of the prophet Zechariah, uttered twenty-three centuries ago: 'Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, it shall yet come to pass that there shall come people, inhabitants of many cities, and the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily and pray before the Lord to seek the Lord of Hosts.'"

Schenectady, N. Y.—The interest in this city is great and increasing. Every bell in the city has sounded evening after evening, and every church has been filled during this time. There are two daily prayer-meetings now established. Converts have come in with surprising rapidity. Union College has been blessed in a manner never known. Places of resort for dissipation have been thinned out.

Obituary.

Died, in Etna, Me., April 2, 1858, sister Axa, wife of Bro. Amos Carver, aged 42 years.

Sister C. professed religion about twenty years ago, united with the Calvinist Baptist church, and ever remained a worthy member. At the tent meeting in Etna, in 1853, Bro. and Sr. C. embraced the coming of the Lord with the doctrines connected, and loved it to the end. Eighteen days before her death she was taken with the Erysipelas in the head. Her sufferings were great, depriving her of her reason the most of the time. All was done that could be done to save her from the hand of the enemy. Friday morning she fell asleep in Jesus. She left Bro. C. and a large family of children to mourn her loss.

On Sunday a large assemblage came together. A discourse was delivered by the writer, from Matt. 22: 32.

N. F. Nason.

Died, in Corinna, Me, March 31, 1858, Eld. Joseph Osgood of Exeter, Me., aged 78 years, 11 days.

The subject of this notice was one of the first settlers in the town of Exeter. He raised a family of nine children who are left with his dear wife to mourn. He sleeps sweetly in Jesus. When in the prime of life he was called of God to warn sinners to flee from the wrath to come, he left all and followed his Lord. He saw many souls bow to the mild sceptre of Jesus, while traveling extensively over Maine. About thirty-five years ago, he embraced the doctrine of the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked, hence he was a lover of the coming of the Lord in his glory, and when the proclamation was made of the second coming of Christ, he gladly received it and continued in and enjoyed that faith until his death. The last few years of his life he suffered much from disease of the lungs and throat. The last nine days of his illness he suffered extremely.

He continued in a peaceful state of mind until his death. He often would tell me all was well.

He was carried to his old home in Exeter, where the funeral services were attended with interest. Sermon by the writer. Text, Ps. 105: 13–16.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE INDIAN.

Portland, April 5.

The steamer Indian, from Liverpool 3 P. M., 24th inst., arrived at this port at 4 1-4 o'clock this afternoon.

CHINA.

Advices from China via. Bombay, describe trade as almost paralyzed, and state that imports were accumulating to an extent rendering it difficult to procure storage.

The Americans and Russians had joined the English and French, in the demand upon the Chinese government. Letters of the four Plenipotentiaries had gone up to Shanghae, and by the middle of March it would be known what line China takes.

FRANCE.

Commercial affairs throughout France continue greatly depressed.

The Railway receipts for the week were the worst that had ever been known. The goods trains had absolutely nothing to carry.

The transportation of parties, arrested under the new Public Safety Law, had commenced. Between 500 and 600 proscribed individuals have been sent to Africa.

All sailors, from 20 to 40 years of age, who had not completed their four years of service, had been ordered to join their ships immediately.

SPAIN.

A telegraphic despatch from Madrid says, that several ships of war were being fitted out for Havana, and demonstrations against Vera Cruz were spoken of.

ITALY.

Discontent in Austrian Italy is said to be daily increasing. On the 20th, the Court at Genoa gave judgment in political trials, which took place in consequence of the events of June. Mazzini and five others were tried in their absence, and in contempt of Court, were condemned to death. Twenty-nine were acquitted, and twenty-eight were sentenced to imprisonment for terms ranging from 7 to 20 years.

Rumors were again current of the approaching settlement of difficulties between Naples and the Western powers.

RUSSIA.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says Russia is watching, with great interest, the relations between England and France. The Russian Navy is to be fully manned, and shipbuilding is to be largely increased.

Russia has no intention of accepting English and French Consuls in the ports of the Black Sea.

All suspicious vessels on the Circassian Coast will be seized.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

The Lord will, I will commence a meeting in Sharon, Conn., Apr. 8th, instead of Apr 1st, as appointed.

C. Goodrich.

Conference.

There will be a Conference holden on the 2d Saturday of each month, in Orrington, Me., at the Advent Chapel. Brethren in the ministry will please remember these meetings.

I. Damman.

Bro. J. G. Smith appoints to preach in Worcester the first Sunday in April, and stay over the following Sunday if the Lord will.

I will preach as follows:—

Lawrence, Mass., Sunday, April 11th.
Exeter, N. H., (eve.,) April 14th.
Portsmouth, N. H., (evenings,) April 15th and 16th.
Dover, N. H., Sunday, April 18th.

S. W. Bishop.

T. M. Preble appoints to preach at Canterbury, (Town House,) April 18th.
West Boscawen, (Christian Meeting House,) April 25th.

Providence permitting, I will preach in Springfield, April 8th; Bakerville, Ct., Friday evening, April 9th; and at Humphrey Hall, West Winsted, the Lord's day following, (April 11th,) and continue every evening till the 16th. Bro. Mathewson will be with me during the week. Miles Grant.

Union Meeting at East Weare, Mass.—There will be a meeting at East Weare, in the Free Meeting House, to commence April 8th and continue over the Sabbath, and longer if the Lord will.

This meeting is designed to be a union meeting, for all ministers and people to labor for the salvation of souls. The Lord has favored us in this place of late, in reviving his people, reclaiming the wanderer, and in the conversion of others. O may the work greatly increase as in many other places. The Lord send by whom he will send.

T. M. Preble.
B. Locke.

East Weare, March 29th, 1858.

If the Lord will, I will preach in Bro. Elliott's Old Clock Shop in Harwinton, Ct., Sunday, April 18th. C. Goodrich.

Providence permitting, I will preach in Hebron, N. Y., evening, April 12th and 13th.
Rutland, Vt., " 14th and 15th.
Addison, 16th and over the Lord's day.

M. Batchelor.

Bro. D. T. Taylor appoints to preach in Boston the third Lord's day in April; and Bro. Miles Grant in Worcester, to Bro. Taylor's congregation, the same day.

Lord willing I will spend Sunday, April 11th, in Peacedale, R. I., and remain a few days with that people.

D. T. Taylor.

Notice.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church.

West Boscawen, 9th.

Illinois Annual Conference.

The Lord willing, the Illinois Annual Conference of Adventists will meet in the City of Ottawa, Lasalle Co., Wednesday May 12, and continue over the following Lord's day.

A plan has been proposed by order of the last Conference, which, it is believed, promises a larger and more effectual co-operation than any ever before introduced in the West. It is expected this will be an important Conference, and a general delegation throughout the entire State and region is desired.

Brethren coming from a distance will remember Ottawa is on the Chicago and Rock Island R. R., 84 miles west of Lasalle, where the Ill. Central R. R. intersects the C. & R. I. R. R.

Let all pray the blessing of God may attend this conference.

On behalf of the committee,
Geo. W. Dean, Clerk.

Notice.

I would say to the brethren and sisters that Bro. Moulton's P. O. address is Worcester, Mass. He would be glad to have the brethren that may pass through Worcester call and see him, at No. 1 Green Street.

J. Hemenway.

The friends at Enfield and vicinity are informed that I must defer the meeting at Jawbuck one Sunday. I will preach there the first Sunday in May. W. S. Campbell.

For the Crisis.

"I WILL SPEAK IN THE BITTERNESS OF MY SOUL."

In this extreme distress of soul,
How can I but complain?
I can no more my speech control,
No more from tears refrain.

Great is my anguish and my grief,
O, whither shall I flee?
Far is my soul from all relief,
No help on earth I see.

My spirits and my strength are gone,
And I from day to day
Sit quite disconsolate alone,
And sigh my hours away.

O grieving lot, O heavy woe,
Must I this cross sustain,
So long as I a feeling know,
So long as life remain?

Why do my sorrows yet increase,
And flow on every side;
Why is my soul deprived of peace,
Of comfort why denied?

Why am I chastened every day,
My nights why spent in pain;
Why should deliverance longer stay
And all my prayers be vain?

Why so mysterious are thy ways
And dreadful in my sight?
Show me that I may lisp thy praise
And serve thee with delight.

O chase this darkness from my mind,
And raise my thoughts above,
That I may full salvation find
And celebrate thy love.

Man's Intermediate Nature.

Before we examine the changing and diverging history of Christian doctrine, we should note more fully one of the most marked and most widely accepted results of the early Christian philosophy. We refer to the doctrine of the intermediate nature of man, of which the reader will have observed some statements in the passages just given from Irenæus, Arnobius, and Athanasius. We have already intimated this as the true doctrine of the soul's nature, in replying to the question, how can the soul be immortal at all, if it is not so by nature. And, lest any should think we are playing fast and loose, or that we are unduly burdening the faith of men, when we say that the soul is absolutely neither mortal nor immortal, we will cite various expressions of this view from writers who had been nearly all philosophers, and who still held the three most different views of the end of the wicked; variously believing as men do now, some that the ungodly would perish, others that they would suffer, others that they would be saved—forever.

Arnobius states the view most frequently; and most clearly in the following passage: "If souls are of a middle nature (qualitatis mediæ,) such as can die, how can they lose this middle quality and become immortal? If we say that we do not know, and have simply believed what we heard from a Mightier One, how shall we be taxed with credulity for thinking that to the King Omnipotent nothing is difficult, and what is impossible to us is possible and easy to Him? . . . And, moreover, do not you who doubt that souls are of a middle nature, held midway between life and death, regard all the gods, angels, demons, or whatever else be the names of the beings commonly supposed to exist,—as of a middle nature, subject to change in a doubtful destiny?" And he proceeds to show that the gods, even if they are claimed to be immortal, are so, not by their own nature, but by the will and favor of the Father of the gods.

The elements of the same view we shall find in Justin Martyr, in words nearly the same as those of Irenæus. It is given more clearly, though crudely and with error, by his disciple, Tatian, as follows: "The soul is not in its own nature immortal, O Greeks, but mortal; yet it is able not to die. For it does die, and is dissolved with the body, if ignorant of the truth; but rises again with the body at the end of the world, receiving death in immortality for its punishment. Whereas the soul that receives the knowledge of God, though dissolved for a time, does not die."

Theophilus of Antioch states the doctrine thus: "Some one will ask, Was Adam by nature mortal? By no means. Immortal? Not thus, either. What then—nothing at all? I answer, neither mortal nor immortal; for if the Creator had made him from the first immortal, he would have made him a god. If mortal, then God would appear as the author of [illegible] becoming either; so that by keeping the command of God he might attain immortality as his reward, and become a god. But if he should turn to mortal things, and disobey God, he would be himself the author of his own death. For God made man free and with power of self control."

Lactantius says: "The other animals look downward, because they are of the earth, not having immortality, which is from heaven; but man stands erect and looks upward, because immortality is offered him, though it comes not unless given from God. For there would be no difference between the just and the unjust, if every man that is born were made immortal. Immortality, therefore, is not a law of our nature, but the wages and reward of virtue. . . . For this reason God seeks to be worshiped and honored by man as Father, that he may attain virtue and wisdom, which alone impart immortality."

Augustine applied the same doctrine to man's bodily condition, thus: "Before man's sin the body might be called mortal in one respect and immortal in another; that is, mortal because it was capable of dying; immortal because it was able not to die. For not to be able to die, as God created some immortal natures, is one thing; to be able not to die is another thing." Upon which a modern writer remarks: "A thing may be said to be immortal conditionally, supposing such and such conditions performed; and in this sense we say, God made Adam immortal; for he had a power to sin, and so a power to die; he had a power to stand, and so a power to be freed from death. Augustine's expression of posse non mori is known by all."

In the fifth century, the same view is stated by Nemesius, who from a Neoplatonist became bishop of Emesa. He says: "Since the soul is not yet known in its essence, it is not suitable to determine respecting its energy. The Hebrews say that originally man was made evidently neither mortal, nor immortal; but on the confines of either nature; so that, if he should yield to the bodily affections, he should share also the changes of the body; but if he should prefer the nobler affections of the soul, he should be deemed worthy of immortality."

Theophylact says: "But the angels, although they be immortal, yet are not so by nature, but by grace; and therefore they have not immortality as their own, but participate of immortality."

And Nicholas of Methone, so late as the twelfth century, whom Neander regards as the most learned theologian of his age, speaks as follows: "It is not every soul that neither perishes nor dies, but only the rational, truly spiritual and divine soul, which is made perfect through virtue by participating in the grace of God. For the souls of irrational beings, and still more, of plants, may perish with the things which they inhabit, because they can not be separated from the bodies which are corrupted, and may be dissolved into their elements. . . . When any thing created is eternal, it is so not by itself, nor in itself, nor for itself, but by the goodness of God; for all that is made and created has a beginning, and retains its existence only through the goodness of the Creator."

The same doctrine is contained and adorned in these words of Jeremy Taylor: "Whatsoever had a beginning can also have an ending, and it shall die, unless it be daily watered from the streams flowing from the fountain of life, and refreshed with the dew of heaven and the wells of God; and therefore God had prepared a tree in Paradise to have supported Adam in his artificial immortality. Immortality was not in his nature, but in the hands and parts, in the favor and superadditions of God."

Such was the view of the most cultured and expressive philosophic minds, abandoning their old hope of immortality in the soul's inherent nature. But this doctrine of man's middle nature was gradually disparted and corrupted, to end in the modern doctrine of man's mixed nature, of body mortal, and soul immortal, each in the absolute. This notion seems to have been matured as early as the time of Pelagius, against whose view of physical death as natural the Synod of Carthage framed its canon in the twelfth century. Upon which the scholiast Balsamon comments thus, applying to the body only what former writers had asserted of man's entire being: "God made man neither mortal nor immortal; but midway between greatness and humility; and having made him master of himself, and with power of free will, he left him to choose either virtue or vice, and to receive either immortality or mortality."

Such has been, until the most recent times, the doctrine of the Church, Protestant as well as Catholic; of which hereafter.—The Doctrine of a Future Life, by Rev. C. F. Hudson.

Letters TO MY UNCONVERTED FRIENDS.

NUMBER THREE.

I feel concerned for your precious souls, which are destined to live forever in God's everlasting kingdom, or to be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. Therefore, I desire that you may right speedily become christians, and such christians as God will delight to own and bless in his glorious kingdom. In this day of gospel light it seems as though there was no necessity for much importunity to convince and persuade the impenitent of their danger, and the importance of seeking the Lord. One would conclude that as soon as a perishing sinner was informed that an offended God was ready to be reconciled, and that he was offering a full and free pardon for his many aggravated sins; and that he was willing to make him an heir of his kingdom upon the terms of faith and true obedience to his holy requirements; he would with the utmost readiness embrace so kind an offer, and fall at once at the Savior's feet and earnestly plead for pardon and salvation.

May you, my dear friends, do thus, is the sincere wish of my heart. Now let me say to you, if you want salvation, you must repent truly of all your sins. Try the bleeding Savior, trust your all upon him. You will need Christ for your friend at the judgment! Make sure of him now!

Do not put off the concerns of your precious souls for a more convenient season to seek the Lord; that more convenient time may never come! Now is a good opportunity for you to seek your soul's salvation. Will you improve this opportunity and come to Jesus, be pardoned and made happy in a Savior's dying love? Dear friends, the many sermons, and prayers, and exhortations, made in your behalf will prove to you to be a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death. Oh prepare to meet your God in peace without any delay. May God's blessed truth be accompanied by his Holy Spirit to your heart and conscience, and may you thus be saved from deserved wrath. Only do right, as the Lord requires of you, and all will be well with you forever!

Your sincere friend,

P. TANDY.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. C. J.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just noticed in a religious paper what may properly be called a sneer at the present extensive work of divine grace that seems to be going on in all parts of our land. And, as I believe in the blessed doctrines of the Bible, wish to raise my protest against it. That the churches are right, in all respects, or even in the main, I do not pretend to say; but that God's hand is in the present awakening and united action among christians, I would not dare to deny,—and my own heart rejoices in it. Sinners, some of them the most hardened, are brought to bow at the foot of the cross for mercy; and, no doubt, angels are rejoicing over many a truly penitent one.

"But," say some, "they are holding important errors in doctrine—these members of churches. And who, let me ask, are not? Are Advent believers guiltless in this respect? Alas! what errors are prevalent among them. Some among them are proclaiming quite as fundamental errors as those among the sects. And then, as to practice. When one is venting out harsh epithets against a co-laborer in the cause, or angrily defending a party spirit, can I bid him "God speed" more than these, who are endeavoring to convert sinners from the error of their ways and save a soul from death? I love the Advent faith, and would that all christians of all denominations believed and promulgated it, but cannot shut my eyes to that which is wrong, wherever found, and whatever is right, and savors of the spirit of Christianity, to that I would respond a hearty Amen.

Instead, therefore, of warning our brethren not to be "caught in this snare," viz: the present effort for the salvation of souls, I earnestly hope that all as they have opportunity, will aid in the good work, and, whenever they can, enlighten the young convert with regard to these glorious gospel truths—life through Christ, and the literal, speedy appearing of our blessed King—the second Adam—the Lord from heaven.

I have been glad, dear brother, to hear you speak so favorably, in the Crisis, of this work of grace, and especially the fact, that christians were so united in it. The Lord aid you in your labors of love, and reward you at his appearing and kingdom.

Your sister in Christ,

From Bro. C. B. Turner.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I have long felt it a duty to write a letter for the Crisis, but have delayed until the present morning, moved to do so by reading in the Crisis, "A Voice from Rutland." Thank God, there seems to be a waking up on the part of the opposers of truth, for God is at work. I rejoice to see the fire brands of truth thrown into the ranks of the enemy. My prayer is that there may be a flame kindled that may never be put out by the floods of opposition from whatever source they may come.

I have been laboring in new fields of late. The Lord is at work and truth is taking deep root in the hearts of the people. There seems to be a famine over the land, not for bread, but for the word of God. When I go into new places of labor, I find good, honest souls ready to receive the truth gladly. I have been of late in Lake Port, situated on the south side of Oneida lake, about four miles from the Central R. R., north from Chittenango station. The truth of God has gone forth. The people have received it with joy. The people are a very open-heartad generous people, and while I have tried to care for their spiritual welfare, they have not ceased to care for my temporal wants. We have had some opposition, but it soon vanished like dew before the rising sun. When the great lamp of truth, which God has given us, can shine, then it is that the mists of error which have so long blinded the minds will vanish away.

By a great effort of the friends living there, the Presbyterian church was secured for a course of lectures. We commenced them on Monday evening. We appointed a chairman. I was to have one hour and a half first, to deliver the lecture, then each one that chose was to have fifteen minutes to object to any point, and then I was to have fifteen minutes to answer each one. When Saturday came we had taken up every objection and looked at them from every stand point; and I trust much good was the result. I have been struggling along a little more than one year striving to preach the gospel.

The Lord has blessed my labors. I have seen the backslider reclaimed, the sinner converted, and the feeble made strong.

Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, cheer up; the Lord is coming soon. The crown lies at the end of the race. Gird on the whole armor, above all taking the shield of faith, which is able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. He that is for us is more than they that are against us. We are not prepared to fight in this warfare until we have put on the whole armor, until we are all broken down before God in humility, the fountain of our heart cleansed, our sins all washed away by the blood of Christ, then we can take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and use it successfully.

Christian, I care not how weak you are if you are standing by faith in God. Venture upon the mercies of the Lord. Oh leave these shallow waters! Launch out into the broad ocean of God's love, that knows no bounds, where your peace will be like a river, and the righteousness thereof like the waves of the sea.

From Bro. Damman.

BRO. GRANT:—I think it my duty to say to the saints scattered, that I am in the field, at work for God. I have spent the most of my time in Augusta this winter, and continue to labor here. The interest is good; a number have professed faith in Christ; and quite a number have been restored to favor with God. The work is still going on, and spreading. It seems to be my duty to stop in this place awhile longer, being convinced that we have but a short time to labor before the coming day of God. I have no positive time in my mind, but am satisfied that this general move will bring about that cry spoken by Paul in 1 Thess. 5 : 3, "When they shall say, peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh." I hope every brother and sister will keep their eye on the Lord, and the work of God. O Lord, is my prayer, help the watchmen to be faithful to their calling.

From Sr. H. Morton.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is continuing to revive his glorious work in Goshen. Since Brn. Pratt and Hemenway left us, there have been four more conversions, and several more felt the need of a Savior's love. Thus we perceive, that where the truth is expounded in its simplicity,—where the brethren and sisters are unanimous in the cause of religion, God will not withhold his blessing, but will pour out his Spirit with copious effusion. May the Lord grant that this church in Goshen may be built up in a most holy faith, even upon the rock Christ Jesus, that it may never be moved. May Zion prosper everywhere, and the time soon come when the members of every church can say—Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly! Amen.

In Eden's bowers so lovely where oft we yet shall stray,
Where glittering fountains gushing shines one eternal day;
Shines one eternal day, and ne'er forget will I,
And for Jesus Christ, my Savior, I would lay me down and die.

There gentle breezes ever will fan the victor's brow,
There songs of heavenly concert fill the ever present now;
Fill the ever present now; to be there still I cry,
And for Jesus Christ, my Savior, I would lay me down and die.

There trees of life are growing in the Paradise of God,
There the stream of life is flowing in the midst of that abode;
In the midst of that abode; to be there I will try,
And for Jesus Christ my Savior, I would lay me down and die.

There is pleasure never dying at thy right hand, O Lord,
There's Christ our living Savior, his glory we'll behold;
His glory we'll behold; who sits enthroned on high,
Yes, 'tis Jesus Christ, our Savior, who for us came down to die.

The Way to Cut a Long Story Short.

The following is from the Herald of Gospel Liberty,—the first religious paper ever published. The number from which this article was taken, was published in Portland, Me., March 29th, 1811, by Elias Smith.

There are many good men who are in the habit of talking long, and saying but little to the purpose. Many sermons resemble Pandora's box; they contain all the evils with only hope at the bottom, and sometimes it is difficult finding that. There are many good men, who would be good preachers were it not for one thing; viz., they have learnt so much which is not in the Bible, that it takes two thirds, or three quarters of their time in the pulpit, to tell their hearers of that, and explain that which is not named in the Bible.

Not long ago I went to hear a man preach, called the first preacher in the city. His text was from the Catechism, the following Question and Answer.

Q. "What special act of providence did God exercise toward man in the state wherein he was created?"

A. "When God created man, he entered into a covenant of life with him, upon condition of perfect obedience, forbidding him to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, upon pain of death."

We are told that the scripture is the mind of God; or his will is there made known or explained to men. We are told that the catechism is an explanation of the word of God, and the sermon was designed as an explanation of the catechism. The scriptures explain the will of God—the catechism explains the scriptures, and the ministers explain the catechism. This makes the people two or three removes from the mind of God. Only one explanation more is necessary, that is to show what ought to be left out of the story.

The speaker told us Adam was made immortal, and had an immortal soul, and, as I understood him, all the souls were made at once, and remained in a silent or senseless state till there was a body for it; that the three persons in the Trinity were concerned in the formation of man. That God made a covenant of works with Adam, that Adam fell, was sentenced to death temporal, spiritual, and eternal for his disobedience, and that if he had stood for a certain time, he would have been confirmed in a state of eternal safety, &c. These are the principal things mentioned, according to the best of my recollection.

He closed by telling the youth never to think of excusing themselves as sinners, but as sinners to look to God for pardoning mercy through Jesus Christ, and he would have mercy on them, and give them peace. This was good, and of importance to be attended to by all.

If preachers would learn to omit what is not named in the scriptures, it would save much time, and people would be less perplexed and much better instructed. The fact is, there is no mention of Adam's being made immortal; had he been immortal, he could not have died; but must live forever. The Bible makes no mention of an immortal soul; that doctrine was first taught in Egypt. The scripture does not mention Adam's fall, nor Original sin. There is no mention of a covenant made with Adam; God never made a covenant with him; this is primmer Divinity. It is not possible for a man to die three deaths for one crime; it is appointed unto men once to die. The sentence on Adam was to return to dust.

All those things which are so highly esteemed among men, are things which darken counsel by words without knowledge. Jesus Christ and the Apostles never told their hearers about Adam's fall, original sin, and our becoming sinners by another man's sins. They told the people light had come into the world, and that the condemnation was, that men loved darkness rather than light, and that men were condemned for unbelief.

These long stories will be cut short, when men preach thus saith the Lord, instead of thus saith the Catechism.

A WORD TO THE WISE IS SUFFICIENT.

Luther's Method

OF REPROVING BUCER FOR PREACHING TOO LEARNEDLY.

At a meeting held at Wittemburgh by the leading parties of the reformation, with a view to promote the harmony of the whole, it was agreed that Albert, Bucer and Luther should be the preachers. At the close of the services, Luther requested Bucer to be his guest, to which Bucer readily acceded. In the course of the evening, Luther found an opportunity to make his remarks on the sermon delivered by his sage friend. He spake highly in its praise, but added, "Bucer, I can preach better than you." Such an observation sounded oddly to the ears of his friend, who however took it in good part, and readily replied, "Every person of course will agree that Luther should bear the palm." Luther immediately changed the tone of his voice, and with indescribable seriousness addressed his friend to this effect. "Do not mistake me, my brother; as though I spake merely in praise of myself; I am fully aware of my weakness, and am conscious of my inability to deliver a sermon so learned and judicious as the one I have heard from your lips this afternoon. But my method is, when I enter the pulpit, to look at the people that sit in the aisle; because they are principally Vandals—(by this term he meant the ignorant common people, and alluded to the circumstance of those parts having been formerly overrun by hordes of ignorant Vandals)—I keep my eye, says he, on the Vandals, and endeavor to preach what they can comprehend. But you shot over their heads; your sermon was adapted for learned hearers, but my Vandals could not understand you. I compare them to a crying babe who is sooner satisfied with the breast of its mother, than the richest confectionaries; so my people are more nourished by the simple word of the Gospel, than by the deepest erudition, though accompanied with all the embellishments of eloquence."

The contributor of this article wishes that himself and his brethren may always imitate Luther, and remember the Vandals.—Eng. Bap. Mag.

Christian Union

Is prevailing. "I am of Paul, I of Apollos, I of Cephas," is seldom heard in our Union prayer meetings, and meetings for holiness. Party names are becoming obsolete, stale, out of date. No one present, unless some new comer still in the shackles, a mere novice in the divine life, and can say Sibboleth only, instead of Shibboleth, Judg. 12: 6, is heard to say, "My church," or, bless God, he belongs to this or that sect. What! thank God that we are born Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians? Nay, let us thank God rather that we are Christians, Christ's men and women. This boasting of sectarian birth is now becoming stale, obsolete, out of date, is looked upon as uncouth, uncourteous, unscriptural. Praise the Lord for this advancement towards the primitive and apostolical. "This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvellous in our eyes." "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul."—Golden Rule.

DRAWING WATER.

I had drunk, with lip unsated, where the fonts of pleasure burst,
I had hewn out broken cisterns, and they mocked my spirit's thirst;
And I said, "Life is a desert spot, and measureless and dry,
And God will not give me water, though I pray and faint, and die."
Spoke there then a friend and brother: "Rise, and roll the stone away;
There are wells of water hidden in thy pathway every day."
Then I said my heart was sinful, very sinful was my speech,
"All the wells of God's salvation are too deep for me to reach."
And he answered, "Rise and labor, doubt and idleness is death;
Shape thee out a goodly vessel with the strong hands of faith."
So I wrought and shaped the vessel, then bent lowly kneeling there,
And I drew up living water with the golden chain of prayer.

Pencilings by the Way.

Found in a paper the following letter, the authorship of which is not known. Wishing to preserve for future use such a transcript of an experience, alas! too common among christians, I copy it entire. It bears date of July 10th, 1795.

M. D. W.

"Dear Sister:—There is nothing of more importance than for us to be prepared for heaven. Nothing but the righteousness of Christ can entitle us to one of the blessings of the covenant of grace. This is a sentiment generally believed; but alas! how often does our attachment to the covenant of works contradict our faith, bear the sway in our hearts to inward sentiments, and place our own feelings and graces bestowed on us in place of Christ, and thus make our comfort in religion as fickle as our frames, and leave us to despond and fear lest we have no Savior, even when he is carrying on his own work in our hearts. It is truly astonishing to think how shamefully little dependence is placed on Christ, even by his own dear people. I have sometimes taken a view of myself from the first moment I have any reason to believe I felt religion. I spent twelve years and a half in difficulties, toil, and wretched self-righteousness, firmly believing salvation to be through grace, and yet seeming to forget that Jesus alone could save a sinner. I often made application to him with tears, and begged his assistance over and over, his faithful Word in my hand, pointing me to trust my all to him, but my poor self-righteous soul, wanting something in me to entitle me to him, poring on my own feelings and exercises, knew not how to trust a Savior's promise. I went on comfortless almost always, ever seeking, and seemingly never able to find. Trusting to nothing but my own feelings, I thought that he that felt so and so should be saved, but I forgot always that he that believeth shall be saved. Thus I became a prey to every remaining lust that was in me. For my life I could not keep from sinning, and every sin destroyed my peace. All my dependence was in a holy heart—but, alas! I found I was carnal, sold unto sin. This made me often cry, 'Oh, wretched man that I am!' But still I never went so far as to thank God for Christ's sake. How have I sincerely pitied many a dear child of God, going on thus, always engaged in his own feelings, but never trusting to Him who alone is able to save!

We cry up evidences of religion. Would to God we had more evidences than we have—but it is base, it is on a legal score, to trust to one or a thousand of the best of evidences that God ever put into a sinner's heart, or refuse to come to Christ when we cannot see those evidences. How often do we sit down and despond, when we feel corruption, or when overtaken with a fault; and the true reason is, we are unwilling to come to Christ without some holy principle to recommend us. Whenever we think of ourselves poor and guilty, we think Christ will have nothing to do with us, and stay back till we pray, confess, repent, and live awhile in a better way; then we imagine we can come forward, and if we happen to fall into sin on the way, we turn right back and fall on our faces and weep and mourn till we wipe away our crime; then we come to Christ depending on nothing for our acceptance with him but our repentance, tears, and reformation; and while we continue in a pretty lively frame, we can venture almost to call Jesus our Savior; but as soon as we get into darkness and coldness, or into some sin, we are all dependence and doubt again.

This is the wretched race I ran for twelve years, depending all on my own work, and God's work in me, and not on himself, who had promised to do all things for me. I dragged heavily, wading through darkness, temptation, and tears: and no wonder, when I had no dependence on any thing but what I had on hand, and often I thought I had nothing; and I looked not to Christ to support my hope in future. When I feel a good evidence, I have not confidence in Christ. (Query. Is it not faith in Christ that produces the "good evidence" of acceptance? "He that believeth, hath the witness in himself.") I am trusting to that evidence, and when I have confidence in Christ no longer, then I feel that my evidence is the only pillar of my hope, and I am still recommending myself to him, and trusting to this recommendation and not to Jesus. Oh, the wickedness of my heart! what little faith is given to God's word, while our hope is in our own exercises.

Thus for twelve years experience taught me, the two last of which I spent in bitter lamentations and distress, in which time I studied the nature of faith for life and death; and the more I thought on, the less I knew about it, and I am persuaded that if any man buy his knowledge of faith as dear as I did, he will thank God for it when he gets it.

After two years' anxiety, preaching every Sabbath, awful apprehensions of eternity, conscious that I knew nothing of the gospel, almost in despair, searching the Scriptures to know what I was, and what would become of me, it pleased God to bring me out of an abyss of darkness into the blaze of assurance. I always thought that by evidences I was to know whether I was to be saved or not, and took my Bible, read over John's first epistle, compared my heart and life, and compared again and again, and Scripture where marks are given, and all books, and my own knowledge of what christians ought to feel. I left nothing untried but one thing, and that was the main thing. At length I read the Scripture, 'He that believeth shall not be ashamed.'

My poor burdened heart met the joyful tidings with pleasure and surprise. I never before, at least with any degree of confidence, saw Christ offered in the gospel. I took him at his word, gave myself to him, and placed myself alone on him. I clearly saw that I had all along been trusting to my own feelings, duties, repentance, etc., but I cast them all behind my back, and counted them as dung, and came to a precious, faithful Savior, with nothing but sin. I believed him to be faithful and able, and therefore I committed all into his hands, and looked to his faithful word for the salvation of my soul. All this was done in five minutes. I felt easy, happy, and humble; ashamed of my former ways, and thankful to God for his most gracious deliverance. The next Sabbath I preached that sermon at M——d on faith, which I hope you will remember as long as you live. Faith in Christ has ever since been my darling theme in the pulpit. Faith in Christ has ever since and ever shall be my only hold. Yours is a faithful Savior. I love his name, I love his cross, I love his word, and my whole hope is in him, and I know I shall never be ashamed, and I know this because he has said so. Now, my sister, if any ask me the reason of my hope, I answer, because I have believed on the Lord Jesus. I have consented to the offer of the gospel, I trust to him alone.

Moreover I say he is able, he is willing, true, faithful; he has said, promised, signed, sealed with his blood, and sworn by himself. (Heb. 6: 17, 18, 19, 20.)

Thus I glory in the cross of Christ. If I am asked what Christ has done for me, He has fulfilled the law, died, rose, and makes intercession for me. And as to what he has done in me, He has shown me that I am a poor, imperfect, lost sinner in myself—that I have a wicked, wretched, deceitful, hard and unbelieving heart in me, and have daily need of his pardoning blood and sanctifying grace. He makes me hate myself more and more, and long for deliverance from all sin and corruption; and enables me to look to him for all I need, and all I hope to enjoy. May God help my dear sister to believe."

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER TEN.

The various events which occur in our travels afford much material for serious reflection, when we are disposed to look at them in the light reflected by the word of God.

In some places we find believers in the gospel who feel much interest about its being taught in its purity, and received, confessed and lived out in some of its particulars, while they themselves live in constant disregard of the rules and practices of the Savior and his apostles. Christians of other sects are considered verily guilty for not seeing and confessing certain truths which interest us, and can scarcely be fellowshiped as christians while in error on some points, though they walk like christians, and observe the ordinances of the Lord's house, seeking to have gospel order, though perhaps not exactly according to apostolic example. Now let us see if we are not as faulty as they. Ought we to condemn others for disobeying God on one point, while we do on another?

My musings lead me to remember a word like this,—"Wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things. . . . Thinkest thou that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?"

Again, "Pull the beam out of thine own eye; then thou shalt be able to pull the mote out of thy brother's eye."

What think you, brother? Is it not best to consider this matter a little before you get your iron jacket welded on? "Thou that teachest a man should not steal; dost thou steal?" Look a moment to what Paul wrote for your instruction; it may lead you to take a better position to advance the truths you love so well: "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions that ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle." 2 Thess. 2: 15.

I muse on this subject sometimes when I hear strong contention about the faith and unbelief of other sects. Others muse also. Paul is giving command to the disciples to stand fast in the traditions taught by him. This relates to our duties to God, each other, and the world, as recorded in the New Testament. As the Jews made void the law by their traditions, it becomes us to examine well the traditions taught in the gospel.

In one case we find Paul "confirming the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, and ordaining elders in every church." This is apostolic. In another instance seven deacons were chosen. Then we read again, "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, (left undone, margin,) and ordain elders in every city, as I have appointed thee." These are some of Paul's traditions. Had better learn to keep them, before condemning others too much.

Birth of the Spirit.

No. III.

III. Born of the Spirit.

This is a spiritual birth—the product is spirit, or a spiritual being. There is no occasion to quote the Scripture assurances concerning the gift, presence and power of the Holy Spirit upon the church in this world; and what it did in the ancient times to make the word effectual, and qualify believers as christians and apostles; or what it is sure to do, if possessed, to fit men for the kingdom of God. Of the latter we must say a few words. It is with believers to show them all things—to renew, and day by day, the inward man—to aid our infirmities—to comfort, and build up, and raise from the dead.

You will observe, my friend, that it is the man who is born again of water and Spirit, and that the birth of the Spirit is made the great and crowning result; and hence an existence after the new birth has been established is made to correspond with the agency of the result. Then the man becomes spirit. Yes, in the Scripture sense of spirit, as spoken of men in the future.

"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit."

1. He does not say the Spirit is like the wind, but the man goeth where he pleaseth.

2. The man in a mortal state never does possess the faculty of going where he wills; he is subject to the laws of nature which confine him.

3. The man who is thus born is free from those laws, and goeth where he listeth; while New Testament example justifies the conclusion, that this is literal in its application to men.

Great prominence is given by the Apostle to the Holy Spirit, as securing absolute power in producing the resurrection of Jesus Christ and the future life of christians: Christ had a resurrection, and became "a quickening spirit." As such, he went where he "listed," and illustrated this great principle in the character of the resurrection state. It is plainly stated that we shall be like him, and as respects this very point. As the heavenly, or second Adam, he is that "quickening Spirit." "As is the heavenly such are they also that are heavenly." Then they will be spirit as fully as he is.

The Apostle, again speaking of the future condition of man, using the term body, says, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Here is the spiritual state resulting from the Spirit of God. The Spirit secures a process. There is a regeneration, which is as essential to the new birth as generation is to natural birth.

"My words are spirit, and they are life," says Christ. We shall find that the power here presented has much to do with the birth of the Spirit. By this agency the regeneration is secured. And by the Spirit the resurrection is secured. As the resurrection is not only the man living again, but a new life—life from the dead—the qualities of which are exhibited in the example of the Lord himself, when raised from the dead; and also by his testimony, that such shall be like unto the angels, not to die any more, being children of God; and also by the apostle, that their body is spiritual, as opposed to natural; or fleshly, and incorruptible, as opposed to corruptible; for the corruptible is fleshly;—we conclude, of necessity, that a man being born of the Spirit, is raised from the dead to enter the kingdom of God. Observe,—that the earthly and the heavenly are contrasted by our Lord in this connection.

Paul unqualifiedly declares that, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus Christ from the dead, dwell in us, he shall quicken these mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us." Now if this does not refer to the resurrection power, directly to the Holy Ghost, language cannot do it. The birth of the Spirit then, is the new life of the man who has been dead. This is presented in the 110th Ps.,—"From the womb of the morning thou hast the dew of thy youth." The birth of Christ anew, by Zion before her travail—the birth of all the children of Zion, as soon as she travaileth, when a nation (of the saints) shall be born at once, and abundantly enter the kingdom, are taught plainly. Shall we be born again?

Who ought to preach the Gospel?

This is a question of great importance to the church, for its answer will convict many of not doing their duty, or acquit them in the sight of God. Is it those and those only who have been honored with a diploma from some great theological university? Who, after having studied a little Greek and less Bible, go forth into the world, professing a call of God to preach the word, and yet seeking for and accepting the highest dollar and cent call that they can obtain? Or is it those that are (often) unlearned in this world's wisdom, but who have searched the Scriptures diligently, seeking that "wisdom from above which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy," comparing Scripture with Scripture, seeking to know the "mind" and "have the Spirit of Christ;" and who "study (without ceasing) to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth;" who "speak as the oracles of God," and give to each "a portion of meat in due season?"

Brethren, who among us will volunteer to work for the Lord? O that God would raise up more unlearned, honest, and "good men full of the Holy Ghost," and send them forth to preach the word! Amen.

A Wounded Spirit.

Let us beware how we wound the feelings of our fellow beings. We are not all of the same temperament. Some are fractious, of a irritable, provoking disposition, if any thing is said to displease them; while others are of a mild, reflective turn of mind. The first class require to be dealt with in a firm and candid manner, and nothing ought to be thrown in their way to give offence that can possibly be avoided; but if we do through ignorance give offence, let us keep as far from them as possible, for in so doing we often quiet a spirit, a fire; whereas should we throw ourselves often in their way, would kindle and rekindle a fire that never could be quenched, till both parties shall be entirely shut out of the kingdom.

The second class, who are of a reflective order, easily grieved or cast down by the harshness of others, ought to be treated with great sympathy and kindness. We are placed here in this world, what for? To prepare for that great day that is coming upon us. But those that serve God with a pure heart need not fear if they prove themselves faithful unto the end. Let us therefore try to do our Master's will, that we may have a part in that blessed rest that remaineth for the people of God. Let us bear with the infirmities of the weak. Are there any who are not gifted in speech as others, and whose talents are inferior? Let us encourage them. God has chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise, in order to reform the world. Let us first correct our own faults and by that time our acquaintance or neighbor's faults will all be gone. God does not intend any of us to sit as judges to plead our own cause. No, we shall all remain speechless before a just and righteous God. Christ has purchased a glorious redemption for us poor, sin polluted creatures. If we are saved it will not be through any worthiness of our own, but through the divine mercy of Christ. He condescended to come into this world and die an ignominious death on the cross that we through him might believe and have eternal life. Let us try to imitate our Savior and meet all trials with humble submission.

Short Sermons.

No. II.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity." Matt. 7: 21-23.

Solemn words! After reading this passage, we might almost be led to exclaim, as did the disciples on one occasion, "Who then can be saved?" Truly, it is no trifling thing to be a Christian! My heart sickens while I look abroad over the professed church of Christ, and then look at the requirements of the gospel. Who, that has any spiritual discernment, can not see that we must come out and be peculiar, from the main body of the so-called church, and probably be looked upon by them as fanatics; or, we can never enter the kingdom of heaven.

But I proceed to mention a few of the ways in which men may be deceived. They may be kind and charitable to the poor, taking a deep interest in their welfare; and giving largely of their own substance for the supply of their necessities; and still be entirely destitute of pure, genuine love to God and man.

Persons may be zealous and gifted, and apparently devout, in religious meetings. Indeed, they may feel deeply and heartily, at the time; may talk and pray like angels, so that those who are less gifted, but much more humble and lowly, are so ashamed that they can hardly lift the cross and utter a word; and yet these very persons who seem so good may be in the road to perdition.

Persons may also be very strict in the performance of every outward duty; such as family prayer, observance of the Sabbath, attending meeting, reading the Bible, &c.; and yet lack the inward work of the Spirit, without which all outward observances, however important and necessary to christian character, will be of no avail.

They may suffer reproach and persecution for their religion, and yet be selfish at heart, and have no reward of our heavenly Father. Men may take an active part, and manifest a great interest in the cause of religion, and may even be considered as patterns of piety, and still lack the "one thing needful."

Men may preach the gospel, and that with zeal and fervency, pointing out the right way most clearly; but notwithstanding all this, be wholly unprepared for "that day." Thus, according to his own testimony, did John Wesley, for some seven years, if I mistake not, before he was soundly converted to God.

Men may also believe most firmly, and show the evidence [illegible] clearly, of the speedy coming of Christ, and yet be all unprepared for the event. They may have a good degree of sincerity in seeking to enter the kingdom; may [illegible] it; may sing and pray, [illegible] of it; may [illegible] its [illegible] and [illegible]

DRAWING WATER.

I had drunk, with lip unsated, where the fonts of pleasure burst,
I had hewn out broken cisterns, and they mocked my spirit's thirst;
And I said, "Life is a desert spot, and measureless and dry,
And God will not give me water, though I pray and faint, and die."
Spoke there then a friend and brother: "Rise, and roll the stone away;
There are wells of water hidden in thy pathway every day."
Then I said my heart was sinful, very sinful was my speech,
"All the wells of God's salvation are too deep for me to reach."
And he answered, "Rise and labor, doubt and idleness is death;
Shape thee out a goodly vessel with the strong hands of faith."
So I wrought and shaped the vessel, then bent lowly kneeling there,
And I drew up living water with the golden chain of prayer.

Pencilings by the Way.

Found in a paper the following letter, the authorship of which is not known. Wishing to preserve for future use such a transcript of an experience, alas! too common among christians, I copy it entire. It bears date of July 10th, 1795.

M. D. W.

"Dear Sister:—There is nothing of more importance than for us to be prepared for heaven. Nothing but the righteousness of Christ can entitle us to one of the blessings of the covenant of grace. This is a sentiment generally believed; but alas! how often does our attachment to the covenant of works contradict our faith, bear the sway in our hearts to inward sentiments, and place our own feelings and graces bestowed on us in place of Christ, and thus make our comfort in religion as fickle as our frames, and leave us to despond and fear lest we have no Savior, even when he is carrying on his own work in our hearts. It is truly astonishing to think how shamefully little dependence is placed on Christ, even by his own dear people. I have sometimes taken a view of myself from the first moment I have any reason to believe I felt religion. I spent twelve years and a half in difficulties, toil, and wretched self-righteousness, firmly believing salvation to be through grace, and yet seeming to forget that Jesus alone could save a sinner. I often made application to him with tears, and begged his assistance over and over, his faithful Word in my hand, pointing me to trust my all to him, but my poor self-righteous soul, wanting something in me to entitle me to him, poring on my own feelings and exercises, knew not how to trust a Savior's promise. I went on comfortless almost always, ever seeking, and seemingly never able to find. Trusting to nothing but my own feelings, I thought that he that felt so and so should be saved, but I forgot always that he that believeth shall be saved. Thus I became a prey to every remaining lust that was in me. For my life I could not keep from sinning, and every sin destroyed my peace. All my dependence was in a holy heart—but, alas! I found I was carnal, sold unto sin. This made me often cry, 'Oh, wretched man that I am!' But still I never went so far as to thank God for Christ's sake. How have I sincerely pitied many a dear child of God, going on thus, always engaged in his own feelings, but never trusting to Him who alone is able to save!

We cry up evidences of religion. Would to God we had more evidences than we have—but it is base, it is on a legal score, to trust to one or a thousand of the best of evidences that God ever put into a sinner's heart, or refuse to come to Christ when we cannot see those evidences. How often do we sit down and despond, when we feel corruption, or when overtaken with a fault; and the true reason is, we are unwilling to come to Christ without some holy principle to recommend us. Whenever we think of ourselves poor and guilty, we think Christ will have nothing to do with us, and stay back till we pray, confess, repent, and live awhile in a better way; then we imagine we can come forward, and if we happen to fall into sin on the way, we turn right back and fall on our faces and weep and mourn till we wipe away our crime; then we come to Christ depending on nothing for our acceptance with him but our repentance, tears, and reformation; and while we continue in a pretty lively frame, we can venture almost to call Jesus our Savior; but as soon as we get into darkness and coldness, or into some sin, we are all dependence and doubt again.

This is the wretched race I ran for twelve years, depending all on my own work, and God's work in me, and not on himself, who had promised to do all things for me. I dragged heavily, wading through darkness, temptation, and tears: and no wonder, when I had no dependence on any thing but what I had on hand, and often I thought I had nothing; and I looked not to Christ to support my hope in future. When I feel a good evidence, I have not confidence in Christ. (Query. Is it not faith in Christ that produces the "good evidence" of acceptance? "He that believeth, hath the witness in himself.") I am trusting to that evidence, and when I have confidence in Christ no longer, then I feel that my evidence is the only pillar of my hope, and I am still recommending myself to him, and trusting to this recommendation and not to Jesus. Oh, the wickedness of my heart! what little faith is given to God's word, while our hope is in our own exercises.

Thus for twelve years experience taught me, the two last of which I spent in bitter lamentations and distress, in which time I studied the nature of faith for life and death; and the more I thought on, the less I knew about it, and I am persuaded that if any man buy his knowledge of faith as dear as I did, he will thank God for it when he gets it.

After two years' anxiety, preaching every Sabbath, awful apprehensions of eternity, conscious that I knew nothing of the gospel, almost in despair, searching the Scriptures to know what I was, and what would become of me, it pleased God to bring me out of an abyss of darkness into the blaze of assurance. I always thought that by evidences I was to know whether I was to be saved or not, and took my Bible, read over John's first epistle, compared my heart and life, and compared again and again, and Scripture where marks are given, and all books, and my own knowledge of what christians ought to feel. I left nothing untried but one thing, and that was the main thing. At length I read the Scripture, 'He that believeth shall not be ashamed.'

My poor burdened heart met the joyful tidings with pleasure and surprise. I never before, at least, with any degree of confidence, saw Christ offered in the gospel. I took him at his word, gave myself to him, and placed myself alone on him. I clearly saw that I had all along been trusting to my own feelings, duties, repentance, etc., but I cast them all behind my back, and counted them as dung, and came to a precious, faithful Savior, with nothing but sin. I believed him to be faithful and able, and therefore I committed all into his hands, and looked to his faithful word for the salvation of my soul. All this was done in five minutes. I felt easy, happy, and humble; ashamed of my former ways, and thankful to God for his most gracious deliverance. The next Sabbath I preached that sermon at M——d on faith, which I hope you will remember as long as you live. Faith in Christ has ever since been my darling theme in the pulpit. Faith in Christ has ever since and ever shall be my only hold. Yours is a faithful Savior. I love his name, I love his cross, I love his word, and my whole hope is in him, and I know I shall never be ashamed, and I know this because he has said so. Now, my sister, if any ask me the reason of my hope, I answer, because I have believed on the Lord Jesus. I have consented to the offer of the gospel, I trust to him alone.

Moreover I say he is able, he is willing, true, faithful; he has said, promised, signed, sealed with his blood, and sworn by himself. (Heb. 6: 17, 18, 19, 20.)

Thus I glory in the cross of Christ. If I am asked what Christ has done for me, He has fulfilled the law, died, rose, and makes intercession for me. And as to what he has done in me, He has shown me that I am a poor, imperfect, lost sinner in myself—that I have a wicked, wretched, deceitful, hard and unbelieving heart in me, and have daily need of his pardoning blood and sanctifying grace. He makes me hate myself more and more, and long for deliverance from all sin and corruption; and enables me to look to him for all I need, and all I hope to enjoy. May God help my dear sister to believe."

Musings of an Evangelist.

NUMBER TEN.

The various events which occur in our travels afford much material for serious reflection, when we are disposed to look at them in the light reflected by the word of God.

In some places we find believers in the gospel who feel much interest about its being taught in its purity, and received, confessed and lived out in some of its particulars, while they themselves live in constant disregard of the rules and practices of the Savior and his apostles. Christians of other sects are considered verily guilty for not seeing and confessing certain truths which interest us, and can scarcely be fellowshiped as christians while in error on some points, though they walk like christians, and observe the ordinances of the Lord's house, seeking to have gospel order, though perhaps not exactly according to apostolic example. Now let us see if we are not as faulty as they. Ought we to condemn others for disobeying God on one point, while we do on another?

My musings lead me to remember a word like this,—"Wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things. . . . Thinkest thou that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?"

Again, "Pull the beam out of thine own eye; then thou shalt be able to pull the mote out of thy brother's eye."

What think you, brother? Is it not best to consider this matter a little before you get your iron jacket welded on? "Thou that teachest a man should not steal; dost thou steal?" Look a moment to what Paul wrote for your instruction; it may lead you to take a better position to advance the truths you love so well: "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions that ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle." 2 Thess. 2: 15.

I muse on this subject sometimes when I hear strong contention about the faith and unbelief of other sects. Others muse also. Paul is giving command to the disciples to stand fast in the traditions taught by him. This relates to our duties to God, each other, and the world, as recorded in the New Testament. As the Jews made void the law by their traditions, it becomes us to examine well the traditions taught in the gospel.

In one case we find Paul "confirming the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, and ordaining elders in every church." This is apostolic. In another instance seven deacons were chosen. Then we read again, "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, (left undone, margin,) and ordain elders in every city, as I have appointed thee." These are some of Paul's traditions. Had better learn to keep them, before condemning others too much.

Birth of the Spirit.

No. III.

III. Born of the Spirit.

This is a spiritual birth—the product is spirit, or a spiritual being. There is no occasion to quote the Scripture assurances concerning the gift, presence and power of the Holy Spirit upon the church in this world; and what it did in the ancient times to make the word effectual, and qualify believers as christians and apostles; or what it is sure to do, if possessed, to fit men for the kingdom of God. Of the latter we must say a few words. It is with believers to show them all things—to renew, and day by day, the inward man—to aid our infirmities—to comfort, and build up, and raise from the dead.

You will observe, my friend, that it is the man who is born again of water and Spirit, and that the birth of the Spirit is made the great and crowning result; and hence an existence after the new birth has been established is made to correspond with the agency of the result. Then the man becomes spirit. Yes, in the Scripture sense of spirit, as spoken of men in the future.

"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit."

1. He does not say the Spirit is like the wind, but the man goeth where he pleaseth."

2. The man in a mortal state never does possess the faculty of going where he wills; he is subject to the laws of nature which confine him.

3. The man who is thus born is free from those laws, and goeth where he listeth; while New Testament example justifies the conclusion, that this is literal in its application to men.

Great prominence is given by the Apostle to the Holy Spirit, as securing absolute power in producing the resurrection of Jesus Christ and the future life of christians: Christ had a resurrection, and became "a quickening spirit." As such, he went where he "listed," and illustrated this great principle in the character of the resurrection state. It is plainly stated that we shall be like him, and as respects this very point. As the heavenly, or second Adam, he is that "quickening Spirit." "As is the heavenly such are they also that are heavenly." Then they will be spirit as fully as he is.

The Apostle, again speaking of the future condition of man, using the term body, says, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Here is the spiritual state resulting from the Spirit of God. The Spirit secures a process. There is a regeneration, which is as essential to the new birth as generation is to natural birth.

"My words are spirit, and they are life," says Christ. We shall find that the power here presented has much to do with the birth of the Spirit. By this agency the regeneration is secured. And by the Spirit the resurrection is secured. As the resurrection is not only the man living again, but a new life—life from the dead—the qualities of which are exhibited in the example of the Lord himself, when raised from the dead; and also by his testimony, that such shall be like unto the angels, not to die any more, being children of God; and also by the apostle, that their body is spiritual, as opposed to natural; or fleshly, and incorruptible, as opposed to corruptible; for the corruptible is fleshly;—we conclude, of necessity, that a man being born of the Spirit, is raised from the dead to enter the kingdom of God. Observe,—that the earthly and the heavenly are contrasted by our Lord in this connection.

Paul unqualifiedly declares that, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus Christ from the dead, dwell in us, he shall quicken these mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us." Now if this does not refer to the resurrection power, directly to the Holy Ghost, language cannot do it. The birth of the Spirit then, is the new life of the man who has been dead. This is presented in the 110th Ps.,—"From the womb of the morning thou hast the dew of thy youth." The birth of Christ anew, by Zion before her travail—the birth of all the children of Zion, as soon as she travaileth, when a nation (of the saints) shall be born at once, and abundantly enter the kingdom, are taught plainly. Shall we be born again?

Short Sermons.

No. II.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity." Matt. 7: 21–23.

Solemn words! After reading this passage, we might almost be led to exclaim, as did the disciples on one occasion, "Who then can be saved?" Truly, it is no trifling thing to be a Christian! My heart sickens while I look abroad over the professed church of Christ, and then look at the requirements of the gospel. Who, that has any spiritual discernment, can not see that we must come out and be peculiar, from the main body of the so-called church, and probably be looked upon by them as fanatics; or, we can never enter the kingdom of heaven.

But I proceed to mention a few of the ways in which men may be deceived. They may be kind and charitable to the poor, taking a deep interest in their welfare; and giving largely of their own substance for the supply of their necessities; and still be entirely destitute of pure, genuine love to God and man.

Persons may be zealous and gifted, and apparently devout, in religious meetings. Men may take an active part, and manifest a great interest in the cause of religion, and may even be considered as patterns of piety, and still lack the "one thing needful."

Men may preach the gospel, and that with zeal and fervency, pointing out the right way most clearly; but notwithstanding all this, be wholly unprepared for "that day." Thus, according to his own testimony, did John Wesley, for some seven years, if I mistake not, before he was soundly converted to God.

Men may also believe most firmly, and show the evidence most clearly, of the speedy coming of Christ, and yet be all unprepared for the event. They may with a good degree of sincerity, be seeking to enter the kingdom; may [illegible] it; may sing, and pray, and [illegible] of it, [illegible] its account and [illegible] give much for [illegible] come short at last and be found on the left hand of the Judge.

But let us inquire, What constitutes a preparation to meet "that day?"

The first thing I notice is, pure, hearty love to God, leading us to serve and obey him, from very love to his character. Not from fear, or from the desire of thereby gaining a reward; but because we are all captivated and taken up with with the loveliness of such a Being. If we serve God, or try to serve him by constraint, goading ourselves up to the performance of, or apparent performance of duty, merely through fear of losing heaven if it is neglected, such service is good for nothing We know what love is, when exercised toward one another, of our earthly friends, as parents, children, brothers, sisters, husbands, wives, &c. Now why should any of us for a moment suppose that love to the Lord is but a principle? Alas, that any should be willing to risk his eternal salvation on such a shadow as this! Now, that we ought to have a fixed principle, a firm resolution, to serve God, is true; but we may have this, after all, without a particle of genuine love to God.

I notice again that in order to be qualified to "pass that grand review," we must live in the exercise of a humble, child like trust; a loving confidence in the fatherly care of our covenant-keeping God. We must trust our all in the hands of Christ, and take him as a whole Savior from all sin. It is necessary that we should feel and deeply feel, how utter lost and undone is our condition, and that there is no possibility of obtaining any help from any other source, but through Jesus Christ alone. I say, we must feel and realize this, and not merely know it.

It is not enough that we believe, or assent to the truth of the Bible, or even the prophecies concerning Christ's second coming. We may have the clearest insight into these prophecies, and an expectation of their immediate fulfillment, and yet be utterly destitute of that faith which justifies and acquits in the sight of God.

If we would be prepared to abide that terrible day, we must while here, possess the Spirit of Christ. And what was this Spirit? He possessed a tender love and sympathy toward all, both friends and foes. He spent his whole life in doing all the good to men which he possibly could. He was a perfect pattern of meekness, humility, gentleness, kindness and innocence, being styled "the Lamb of God." And we are required to be like him. Says Paul, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." If we have not the character, whatever may be our professions, we shall be unable to stand in "that day."

The will of God must be our law, and whatever we do must be done to please him, and not for our own gratification or indulgence. Says Paul, "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." This, my brethren, is a strict rule which we must all come to, or we need not hope to stand in "that day." Who of us comes up to this rule?

Our pride, desire of applause, love of the world, and such like, must be mortified, and overcome, or, when "weighed in the balances" we shall be "found wanting."

In short, our hearts must be entirely cleansed from every thing impure and unholy, according to the injunction, "Keep thy heart with all diligence," or the awful lot of the self-deceived will be ours!

I next inquire, how may we know that we are prepared to stand in "that day?" We may know it by carefully testing and comparing ourselves with the word of God. Do we come up to the gospel requirements? If we do, we have nothing to fear.

"Our name is graven on his hands"— on his throne. "If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged." 1 Cor. 11: 31.

If we live near the Lord, and are filled with his Spirit, we shall possess the knowledge, in our own breasts, that we are the Lord's and that he will own and save us when all things shall be shaken that can be. That, we are told by the beloved apostle John. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." 1 John 5: 10. We may be able to exclaim triumphantly, in the language of the poet:

[illegible]

"But this I do find, we two are so joined, He'll not live in glory and leave me behind."

[illegible] "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Rom. 8: 16. Such are the full grown, perfected saints, who are prepared for the judgment; and the word of God teaches that none others are thus prepared. Such, and such only, obey that command of Christ, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

But I pass to notice the nearness of "the day." The signs of Christ's coming, which he promised to give previously to his appearing, have nearly all been given long ago, and Jesus declares, that the generation who witness the first of these signs, shall not all pass off the stage till the glorious event itself be accomplished. That generation, especially all who were old enough to be intelligent witnesses of that remarkable event, the darkening of the sun, are nearly all dead. Yet Jesus confirms it in the most solemn manner, that they will not all die ere the Advent of our glorious King, that winding up of all probationary things, and the judgment of the great day. Now, what have we to expect? What have we to look for? Truly,

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time."

Jesus says, as the leaving out of the trees indicates the speedy approach of summer, so do the signs of Christ's coming indicate that that day is near. How near is summer when the trees leave out? Why, within two or three weeks. How long is it since the first sign was given? Nearly seventy-eight years! Since Jesus cannot lie, and has given this comparison, we are on the last inch of time! Soon will the heavens pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and all the works that are therein shall be burned up. Soon the great white throne will be set, and all mankind—you and I, among the rest—arrayed before it.

There is a vast amount of Bible evidence all converging to this point, all declaring in letters of fire, as it were, that the great day of the Lord is at hand. The unbelief of man is so surprising, we are so shamefully unwilling to credit our Master's word, that he has taken pains to controvert our unbelief by a multitude of the strongest arguments and declarations, plainly demonstrating to us in very many different ways, that he whose right it is, is just about coming to reign.

"Seeing then that we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness."

No. IV.

Respected Friends:—The all-merciful God is still saying to you, "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" It is the unchangeable law of God that impenitent sinners must turn to him, or die. And it is the sure promise of God that the wicked shall live, if they will but thoroughly turn to him. Dear impenitent friends, if you die in your sins remember that you will be your own destroyer.—For God says, "Oh Ephraim, thou hast destroyed thyself." He says also, that he has no pleasure in the death of the wicked; (second death is probably alluded to here.) Therefore, if you do not turn to God and seek salvation, do not charge God with your damnation! For, it is not because God is unmerciful, but because you are cruel and merciless to yourselves! The faithful minister cannot save you; all the world of praying christians cannot do it; you cannot do it yourselves alone.—But heartily repent of all your sins committed against a good and holy God, and forsake them, too; then see if the good Lord will not make new creatures of you.

Man is the greatest enemy to himself. Stand not wavering any longer, my dear friends! Now is a very critical time with you! Resolve before you sleep another night; resolve before you stir from this place; resolve before Satan has time to make any more vain excuses. You will never turn (mark this) till you do resolve, and that with a firm resolution; and say, as for me, I will serve God, let others do as they may. "Now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of salvation: if "ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." For "he that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, (or heart) shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy!"

Now, dear friends, there is a remedy for you! But, the Lord declares his spirit shall not always strive with man. If you grieve away God's Holy Spirit from your hearts, and cause it to depart from you utterly; a great ransom cannot redeem you! O be wise for yourselves, and make that good and wise choice, which will, with the blessing of God, secure your soul's salvation forever!

"Shew pity, Lord, O Lord, forgive;
Let a repenting rebel live:
Are not thy mercies large and free?
May not a sinner trust in thee?

My crimes are great, but can't surpass
The power and glory of thy grace;
Great God, thy nature hath no bounds,
So let thy pardoning love be found."

Your sincere friend,

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 21, 1858.

Query.

A brother wishes to know the application of Jer. 25: 15–26. He inquires particularly concerning the word Sheshach, in verse 26. This scripture reads as follows:—

"For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me, take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations to whom I send thee to drink it; and they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me: to wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse; (as it is this day;) Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people; and all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz, and the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod. Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon, and all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea, Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners, and all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert, and all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, and all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world which are upon the face of the earth; and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them."

Evidently the king of Sheshach is the same as the king of Babylon, and is referred to again in Jer. 51: 41.—"How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations." This Scripture shows that the king of Sheshach has been drinking of "the wine-cup;" and as he is to drink after the other nations referred to in Jer. 25: 18–26, we must look for evidence that those nations did receive the wine-cup before the king of Babylon. Jerusalem was to drink first. She drank immediately after this prophecy was uttered, and was desolated, while her inhabitants were captives in Babylon, cruelly treated, for seventy years. The account may be read in Jer. 39: 1–9.

In Jer. 25: 19, we learn that Egypt was to drink next after Jerusalem. The prophet addresses Israel from chap. 39 to 46, and then commences with the Gentiles. He begins with Egypt, and calls the army against her, and says he "will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives." After mentioning the "mingled people," and "the kings of the land of Uz," he says in Jer. 25: 20, the Philistines shall drink of the cup. In chap 47, we find the way preparing for them to drink. In Jer. 25: 21–26, we learn that "Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon are to drink next of the cup, as well as the smaller kingdoms in the region round about. If we turn to the 48th and 49th chapters, we find the fulfillment of this prophecy. Nebuchadnezzar and his successors were the agents to accomplish this work. All the kingdoms of the world were brought in subjection to the kings of Babylon, but they abused their power. We read in Jer. 27: 6–7,

"And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and son's son, until the very time of his land come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him;" or in other words, he shall "take the wine-cup."

This brings us to the 51st chapter of Jeremiah, in which we have an account of Sheshach in ver. 41, thus showing that after the other kings had partaken of the cup, she was obliged to drink and fall and rise no more.

Christian Character.

A brother wishes to know, "what constitutes a christian character?"

In November and December of '56, we published in the Crisis a series of articles, in which we endeavored to show that christian character was the true basis of "christian union." In those articles, we mentioned several elements necessary to constitute one a christian, to which we refer our brother. We will, however, say something on the point at this time.

By Christian character, we mean simply a character like that of Christ; or in other words, the character of a christian. By the term Christian, we mean something more than a mere professor, or moral man, who may be highly esteemed for his integrity in all business operations, and gentlemanly behavior in social relations;—we mean one who follows Christ,—one who will be saved with an everlasting salvation,—one whom the Lord delights to own and bless,—one who does all to the glory of God. We would have the phrase, Christian character, include all that is necessary to constitute us the children of the Lord. We cannot be true christians, unless our motive is to do all to his glory. However little we may know of doctrine, we must be actuated by the principle just mentioned, in order to be free in Christ. This, in brief, is our view of Christian character. If our brother wishes us to specify particular elements in the character of the Christian, he will please inform.

There is a very good interest among the brethren who look for our Lord soon to come in Roxbury. The church there is small, but united and devoted. A number of happy instances of awakening and conversion has recently occurred. Bro. W. S. Campbell, who is laboring there, informs us that he baptized five last Sunday, and that others are expected to go forward soon.

☞ It will be seen by referring to the notice of the Illinois Annual Conference on the next page, that the date is changed from the 12th to the 18th of May.

☞ C. Goodrich's P. O. Address is Roxbury, Ct.

To the Patrons of the Western Mission.

Brethren, have you done for this Mission what it is your duty to do? You feel time is short and eternity is at hand; and when the books are opened, and we called to reckon with our Master, will you feel that you have done what you could for this wide-spread but almost entirely destitute western field, where multitudes are perishing for lack of knowledge? We want efficient men and means. Seventy evangelists would not meet our present demands. Brethren, can you not, will you not, help in this work? If you can, let us hear from you by the 18th of May, when our Conference sits and we commence a new fiscal year. Let us hear what you can say for our encouragement. And withal, do not forget to pray for the Western Mission. God has blessed the laborers in this field more abundantly the season past than perhaps ever before. Let us pray, that if time last, we may see during the year to come hundreds converted where there has been but one the year past. To the friends who have made pledges for this Mission the year past I wish to say, they will please bear in mind that it is desired we hear from them by the 18th of May, as a report of all money received will be made to the Conference at that time, and published with the Minutes.

Report.

Bro. Grant:—Agreeable to a vote of our Conference last fall, I wish to submit a brief report, as an Evangelist, for publication in the Examiner and Crisis.

Amount subscribed at the Conference,	$112.50
Amount received on second subscription,	$56.00
Amount of donations received from the different places where I have visited,	$69.46
Total amount received,	$125.46

Nearly one third of the above amount was in cash, the remainder in clothing and provisions. I left home Nov. 9th; from that to March 5th I averaged about five discourses per week, traveled several hundred miles, was at home about twelve days, except when I held meetings here. I trust some little good has been done in the cause of our soon coming Lord. Quite a number have confessed the truth, and a few have been baptized. I cannot tell, as yet, the result of my feeble efforts, but trust to know something more on revisiting the places where I have been. I expect, as soon as my throat and lungs will permit, to revisit all those places where I have preached in my evangelical tour, also other places where the friends may think best. Hence, brethren wishing my labors will write me soon, at North Fairfield, Huron Co., O.

Yours in hope of eternal life at the appearing of Jesus,

J. M. Judson.

Charity.

Charity, in a general sense, means love, benevolence, good will, that disposition that inclines men to think favorably of their fellow men. In a theological sense it includes supreme love to God and universal good will to men. Again; candor, liberality of judging of men and their actions, and to put the best constructions on words and actions which the case will admit. "The highest exercise of charity is charity to the uncharitable." In short we find all summed up in the 13th chap. of 1 Cor, thus; "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels (eloquently) and have not charity (a ruling feeling of love in the heart) I am become as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal; (a mere empty sound,) and though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, (be highly endued with the gift of wisdom, through the medium of the Spirit,) and have not charity, I am nothing; and though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." What profiteth me nothing? All these sacrifices without performing them with an eye single to the glory of God, being prompted by pure motives of love to him. Charity suffereth long (patience) and is kind, (gentle, courteous,) charity envieth not; (begrudges not) charity vaunteth not itself, (does not boast of itself) is not puffed up, (is not pleased with flattery or praise of itself) doth not behave itself unseemly, (indecent) seeketh not her own (good but looketh on or to the things of others) is not easily provoked, (offended, made angry,) thinketh no evil, (meditates no harm to his neighbor, surmises no evil,) rejoices not in iniquity, (injustice, unrighteousness, sin,) but rejoices in the truth, (not only in a scriptural sense, but also in a general, universal bearing) beareth all things, (without murmuring—love bears all burdens,) believeth all things, (that pertain to truth—it does not believe a lie to be truth,) hopeth all things (for the best, makes every thing wear as good an aspect as possible, considering the circumstances) endureth all things; (within consistency and reason) charity never faileth; ("but above all things," says Peter, "have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover a multitude of sins,"—charity causes a man to look propitiously on the erring) but whether there be prophecies they shall fail, (not that prophecies shall fail, but the thing uttered shall come to pass, then it will be no longer prophecy but history;) whether there be tongues they shall cease; (when that which is perfect is come,) whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away, (with them that have it,) for we know in part, (revealing but a part,) but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away, (that is, prophecies, tongues and knowledge.) When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child, ("now I know in fact,") but when I became a man, I put away childish things; (when that which is perfect is come.") For now we see through a glass darkly, (obscurely, not clearly,) but then face to face, (plainly, clearly.) Now I know in part, (in the present state,) but then shall I know even as also I am known, (for every man's work shall be tested.) "And now (in our present condition,) abideth faith, hope, charity;" because as the expectations of faith and hope will be realized at the end of this world, but charity is an eternal principle, and will live, while the others will cease, being fully experienced.

May God grant that we may have more of this eternal principle in us, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

W. C. Clark.

From Bro. W. H. Connell.

Bro. Grant:—We are again in the reception of the Crisis. Though we are separated far from those with whom in times past we have taken sweet counsel together, yet we hear from them through the Crisis; and it affords us much pleasure to know that the friends of our Lord are actively engaged in diffusing the truth of the glorious Gospel of our Lord and Savior. And though we may not be privileged to unite our voices in praising God with our friends in the East, yet we look forward to that glorious day when the saints shall possess the kingdom; when this earth shall be restored to its Eden beauty: where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are feared and felt no more. And by the help of God we will continue faithful a few more days till he who was once led as a Lamb to the slaughter shall come again with all the holy angels taking vengeance on them who know not God nor obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

William H. Connell.

Parkersburg, Iowa.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—Having been much cheered the past winter by repeated news in the Crisis of the conversion of sinners among Advent brethren in the East, I feel constrained to express my joy and thankfulness to God for the blessed seasons you have been permitted to witness, and for the evidence you have that "your labors have not been in vain in the Lord." I am filled with praise to God for what he is doing in most denominations, where Christ is preached, but feel specially thankful that he is so abundantly blessing the gospel to the salvation of men, where the persecuted doctrine of destruction is preached, and also the personal and near coming of our Savior is proclaimed. Such blessings, I hope, will soon convince many of their mistake, in saying that sinners cannot be brought to repentance where our view of punishment is preached. But I see the papers of the sects keep silent as to the work of God's spirit among you, while they notice it in all other denominations. Would it not be well for our ministers and brethren who have been blessed, to send those papers such accounts of revivals as we see from other churches?—not that we should boast, but to cure ignorance and prejudice, which lessen our success in the reforms we are striving to effect. If some of the religious papers should refuse to insert such notices, I presume the New York Tribune would not, and that has given the best expose of the revival I have seen.

I long to hear of more conversions in Advent societies in this and the Western states. As yet God's power seems not to be manifested among them as in other churches, and with brethren in the East. Brethren, let us pray as did Job,—"Shew me wherefore Thou contendest with me." Job 10: 2. Also remember the solemn words of David, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."—Ps. 66: 18. "The heart is deceitful," and we may be sinning and not be aware of it, without close research and that "wisdom" James tells us to "ask of God."—James 1: 5–8. We should also heed Christ's injunction as to importunity in prayer, by which I understand that we should pray day after day, and year after year, and not by too great a repitition in one prayer, or in one meeting, as is too often the case.

—The present soul cheering work of grace in most denominations, confirms the belief I have long held, viz., that it is God's plan and purpose to save men wherever "Christ and him crucified," faith, repentance, and "the renewing of the Holy Spirit" are preached, though minor errors in doctrine, and much imperfection in practice may exist. That Paul rejoiced in having "Christ preached, even of envy," is the only proof of my belief I will now notice. If this be true, we should be found fighting against God," and even "speaking against the Holy Ghost," (Matt. 12: 32) by calling this revival mere fanaticism, sectarianism, or a delusion, as some professing Christians are doing. The Pharisees attributed the work of God to Satan, and I fear some are now doing the same thing.

I have enjoyed "a good hope through grace" for forty-nine years, and find this revival the same in its effects that I have often seen during that period. As ever, there will doubtless be some "stony ground hearers." To be brief—in such revivals as this, and among the sects, most of us obtained our hopes, and if we have all been deceived, it is time we were tending more to a preparation to meet Christ, and less to the time and manner of his coming.

We should notice this great difference between this and former revivals, viz., it is [illegible] short at last and be found on the left hand of the Judge.

But let us inquire, What constitutes a preparation to meet "that day?"

The first thing I notice is pure, hearty love to God, leading us to serve and obey him, from pure love to his character. Not from fear, or from the desire of thereby gaining a reward, but because we are all captivated and taken up with with the loveliness of such a Being. If we serve God, or try to serve him by constraint, [illegible] ourselves up to the performance or apparent performance of duty, merely through fear of losing heaven if it is neglected, such service is good for nothing. We know what love is, when exercised toward one another, of our earthly friends, as parents, children, brothers, sisters, husbands, wives, &c. Now why should any of us for a moment suppose that love to the Lord is but a principle? Alas, that any should be willing to risk his eternal salvation on such a shadow as this! Now, that we ought to have a fixed principle, a firm resolution, to serve God, is true; but we may have this, after all, without a particle of genuine love to God.

I notice again that in order to be qualified to "pass that grand review," we must live in the exercise of a humble, child-like trust; a loving confidence in the fatherly care of our covenant-keeping God. We must trust our all in the hands of Christ, and take him as a whole Savior from all sin. It is necessary that we should feel and deeply feel, how utter lost and undone is our condition, and that there is no possibility of obtaining any help from any other source, but through Jesus Christ alone. I say, we must feel and realize this, and not merely know it.

It is not enough that we believe, or assent to the truth of the Bible, or even the prophecies concerning Christ's second coming. We may have the clearest insight into these prophecies, and an expectation of their immediate fulfillment, and yet be utterly destitute of that faith which justifies and acquits in the sight of God.

If we would be prepared to abide that terrible day, we must while here, possess the Spirit of Christ. And what was this Spirit? Says Paul, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." If we have not the character, whatever may be our professions, we shall be unable to stand in "that day."

The will of God must be our law, and whatever we do must be done to please him, and not for our own gratification or indulgence. Says Paul, "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." This, my brethren, is a strict rule which we must all come to, or we need not hope to stand in "that day." Who of us comes up to this rule?

Our pride, desire of applause, love of the world, and such like, must be mortified, and overcome, or, when "weighed in the balances" we shall be "found wanting."

In short, our hearts must be entirely cleansed from every thing impure and unholy, according to the injunction, "Keep thy heart with all diligence," or the awful lot of the self-deceived will be ours!

I must inquire, how may we know that we are prepared to stand in "that day?" We may know it by carefully testing and comparing ourselves with the word of God. Do we come up to the gospel requirements? If we do, we have nothing to fear.

"Our name is graven on his hands"— on his throne. "If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged." 1 Cor. 11: 31.

If we live near the Lord, and are filled with his Spirit, we shall possess the knowledge in our own breasts, that we are the [illegible] that he will own and save us when all things shall be shaken that can [illegible] told by the beloved [illegible] "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." shall not always strive with man. If you grieve away God's Holy Spirit from your hearts, and cause it to depart from you utterly; a great ransom cannot redeem you! O be wise for yourselves, and make that good and wise choice, which will, with the blessing of God, secure your soul's salvation forever!

"Shew pity, Lord, O Lord, forgive;
Let a repenting rebel live:
Are not thy mercies large and free?
May not a sinner trust in thee?

My crimes are great, but can't surpass
The power and glory of thy grace;
Great God, thy nature hath no bounds,
So let thy pardoning love be found."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 21, 1858.

Query.

A brother wishes to know the application of Jer. 25: 15–26. He inquires particularly concerning the word Sheshach, in verse 26. This scripture reads as follows:—

"For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me, take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations to whom I send thee to drink it; and they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me: to wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse; (as it is this day;) Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people; and all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz, and the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod. Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon, and all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea, Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners, and all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert, and all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, and all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world which are upon the face of the earth; and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them."

Evidently the king of Sheshach is the same as the king of Babylon, and is referred to again in Jer. 51: 41.—"How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations." This Scripture shows that the king of Sheshach has been drinking of "the wine-cup;" and as he is to drink after the other nations referred to in Jer. 25: 18–26, we must look for evidence that those nations did receive the wine-cup before the king of Babylon. Jerusalem was to drink first. She drank immediately after this prophecy was uttered, and was desolated, while her inhabitants were captives in Babylon, cruelly treated, for seventy years. The account may be read in Jer. 39: 1–9.

In Jer. 25: 19, we learn that Egypt was to drink next after Jerusalem. The prophet addresses Israel from chap. 39 to 46, and then commences with the Gentiles. He begins with Egypt, and calls the army against her, and says he "will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives." After mentioning the "mingled people," and "the kings of the land of Uz," he says in Jer. 25: 20, the Philistines shall drink of the cup. In chap. 47, we find the way preparing for them to drink. In Jer. 25: 21–26, we learn that "Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon are to drink next of the cup, as well as the smaller kingdoms in the region round about. If we turn to the 48th and 49th chapters, we find the fulfillment of this prophecy. Nebuchadnezzar and his successors were the agents to accomplish this work. All the kingdoms of the world were brought in subjection to the kings of Babylon, but they abused their power. We read in Jer. 27: 6–7,

"And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and son's son, until the very time of his land come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him;" or in other words, he shall "take the wine-cup."

This brings us to the 51st chapter of Jeremiah, in which we have an account of Sheshach in ver. 41, thus showing that after the other kings had partaken of the [illegible]

Christian Character.

A brother wishes to know, "what constitutes a christian character?"

In November and December of '56, we published in the Crisis a series of articles, in which we endeavored to show that christian character was the true basis of "christian union." In those articles, we mentioned several elements necessary to constitute one a christian, to which we refer our brother. We will, however, say something on the point at this time.

By Christian character, we mean simply a character like that of Christ; or in other words, the character of a christian. By the term Christian, we mean something more than a mere professor, or moral man, who may be highly esteemed for his integrity in all business operations, and gentlemanly behavior in social relations;— we mean one who follows Christ,—one who will be saved with an everlasting salvation,—one whom the Lord delights to own and bless,—one who does all to the glory of God. We would have the phrase, Christian character, include all that is necessary to constitute us the children of the Lord. We cannot be true christians, unless our motive is to do all to his glory. However little we may know of doctrine, we must be actuated by the principle just mentioned, in order to be free in Christ. This, in brief, is our view of Christian character. If our brother wishes us to specify particular elements in the character of the Christian, he will please inform.

THERE is a very good interest among the brethren who look for our Lord soon to come in Roxbury. The church there is small, but united and devoted. A number of happy instances of awakening and conversion has recently occurred. Bro. W. S. Campbell, who is laboring there, informs us that he baptized five last Sunday, and that others are expected to go forward soon.

☞ It will be seen by referring to the notice of the Illinois Annual Conference on the next page, that the date is changed from the 12th to the 18th of May.

☞ C. Goodrich's P. O. Address is Roxbury, Ct.

To the Patrons of the Western Mission.

BRETHREN, have you done for this Mission what it is your duty to do? You feel time is short and eternity is at hand; and when the books are opened, and we called to reckon with our Master, will you feel that you have done what you could for this wide-spread but almost entirely destitute western field, where multitudes are perishing for lack of knowledge? We want efficient men and means. Seventy evangelists would not meet our present demands. Brethren, can you not, will you not, help in this work? If you can, let us hear from you by the 18th of May, when our Conference sits and we commence a new fiscal year. Let us hear what you can say for our encouragement. And withal, do not forget to pray for the Western Mission. God has blessed the laborers in this field more abundantly the season past than perhaps ever before. Let us pray, that if time last, we may see during the year to come hundreds converted where there has been but one the year past. To the friends who have made pledges for this Mission the year past I wish to say, they will please bear in mind that it is desired we hear from them by the 18th of May, as a report of all money received will be made to the Conference at that time, and published with the Minutes.

Report.

BRO. GRANT:—Agreeable to a vote of our Conference last fall, I wish to submit a brief report, as an Evangelist, for publication in the Examiner and Crisis.

Amount subscribed at the Conference,	$112.50
Amount received on second subscription,	$56.00
Amount of donations received from the different places where I have visited,	$69.46
Total amount received,	$125.46

Nearly one third of the above amount was in cash, the remainder in clothing and provisions. I left home Nov. 9th; from that to March 5th I averaged about five discourses per week, traveled several hundred miles, [illegible]

I trust some little good has been done in the cause of our soon coming Lord. Quite a number have confessed the truth, and a few have been baptized. I cannot tell, as yet, the result of my feeble efforts, but trust to know something more on revisiting the places where I have been. I expect, as soon as my throat and lungs will permit, to revisit all those places where I have preached in my evangelical tour, also other places where the friends may think best. Hence, brethren wishing my labors will write me soon, at North Fairfield, Huron Co., O.

Yours in hope of eternal life at the appearing of Jesus,

J. M. JUDSON.

Charity.

Charity, in a general sense, means love, benevolence, good will, that disposition that inclines men to think favorably of their fellow men. In a theological sense it includes supreme love to God and universal good will to men. Again; candor, liberality of judging of men and their actions, and to put the best constructions on words and actions which the case will admit. "The highest exercise of charity is charity to the uncharitable." In short we find all summed up in the 13th chap. of 1 Cor, thus; "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels (eloquently) and have not charity (a ruling feeling of love in the heart) I am become as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal; (a mere empty sound,) and though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, (be highly endued with the gift of wisdom, through the medium of the Spirit,) and have not charity, I am nothing; and though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." What profiteth me nothing? All these sacrifices without performing them with an eye single to the glory of God, being prompted by pure motives of love to him. Charity suffereth long (patience) and is kind, (gentle, courteous,) charity envieth not; (begrudges not) charity vaunteth not itself, (does not boast of itself) is not puffed up, (is not pleased with flattery or praise of itself) doth not behave itself unseemly, (indecent) seeketh not her own (good but looketh on or to the things of others) is not easily provoked, (offended, made angry,) thinketh no evil, (meditates no harm to his neighbor, surmises no evil,) rejoices not in iniquity, (injustice, unrighteousness, sin,) but rejoices in the truth, (not only in a scriptural sense, but also in a general, universal bearing) beareth all things, (without murmuring—love bears all burdens,) believeth all things, (that pertain to truth—it does not believe a lie to be truth,) hopeth all things (for the best, makes every thing wear as good an aspect as possible, considering the circumstances) endureth all things; (within consistency and reason) charity never faileth; ("but above all things," says Peter, "have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover a multitude of sins,"—charity causes a man to look propitiously on the erring) but whether there be prophecies they shall fail, (not that prophecies shall fail, but the thing uttered shall come to pass, then it will be no longer prophecy but history;) whether there be tongues they shall cease; (when that which is perfect is come,) whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away, (with them that have it,) for we know in part, (revealing but a part,) but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away, (that is, prophecies, tongues and knowledge.) When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child, ("now I know in fact,") but when I became a man, I put away childish things; (when that which is perfect is come.") For now we see through a glass darkly, (obscurely, not clearly,) but then face to face, (plainly, clearly.) Now I know in part, (in the present state,) but then shall I know even as also I am known, (for every man's work shall be tested.) "And now (in our present condition,) abideth faith, hope, charity;" because as the expectations of faith and hope will be realized at the end of this world, but charity is an eternal principle, and will live, while the others will cease, being fully experienced.

May God grant that we may have more of this eternal principle in us, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

W. C. CLARK.

[illegible]

times past we have taken sweet counsel together, yet we hear from them through the Crisis; and it affords us much pleasure to know that the friends of our Lord are actively engaged in diffusing the truth of the glorious Gospel of our Lord and Savior. And though we may not be privileged to unite our voices in praising God with our friends in the East, yet we look forward to that glorious day when the saints shall possess the kingdom; when this earth shall be restored to its Eden beauty; where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are feared and felt no more. And by the help of God we will continue faithful a few more days till he who was once led as a Lamb to the slaughter shall come again with all the holy angels taking vengeance on them who know not God nor obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

BRO. GRANT:—Having been much cheered the past winter by repeated news in the Crisis of the conversion of sinners among Advent brethren in the East, I feel constrained to express my joy and thankfulness to God for the blessed seasons you have been permitted to witness, and for the evidence you have that "your labors have not been in vain in the Lord." I am filled with praise to God for what he is doing in most denominations, where Christ is preached, but feel specially thankful that he is so abundantly blessing the gospel to the salvation of men, where the persecuted doctrine of destruction is preached, and also the personal and near coming of our Savior is proclaimed. Such blessings, I hope, will soon convince many of their mistake, in saying that sinners cannot be brought to repentance where our view of punishment is preached. But I see the papers of the sects keep silent as to the work of God's spirit among you, while they notice it in all other denominations. Would it not be well for our ministers and brethren who have been blessed, to send those papers such accounts of revivals as we see from other churches?—not that we should boast, but to cure ignorance and prejudice, which lessen our success in the reforms we are striving to effect. If some of the religious papers should refuse to insert such notices, I presume the New York Tribune would not, and that has given the best expose of the revival I have seen.

I long to hear of more conversions in Advent societies in this and the Western states. As yet God's power seems not to be manifested among them as in other churches, and with brethren in the East. Brethren, let us pray as did Job,—"Show me wherefore Thou contendest with me." Job 10: 2. Also remember the solemn words of David, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."— Ps. 66: 18. "The heart is deceitful," and we may be sinning and not be aware of it, without close research and that "wisdom" James tells us to "ask of God."— James 1: 5–8. We should also heed Christ's injunction as to importunity in prayer, by which I understand that we should pray day after day, and year after year, and not by too great a repitition in one prayer, or in one meeting, as is too often the case.

—The present soul cheering work of grace in most denominations, confirms the belief I have long held, viz., that it is God's plan and purpose to save men wherever "Christ and him crucified," faith, repentance, and "the renewing of the Holy Spirit" are preached, though minor errors in doctrine, and much imperfection in practice may exist. That Paul rejoiced in having "Christ preached, even of envy," is the only proof of my belief I will now notice. If this be true, we should be found fighting against God," and even "speaking against the Holy Ghost," (Matt. 12: 32) by calling this revival mere fanaticism, sectarianism, or a delusion, as some professing Christians are doing. The Pharisees attributed the work of God to Satan, and I fear some are now doing the same thing.

I have enjoyed "a good hope through grace" for forty-nine years, and find this revival the same in its effects that I have often seen during that period. As ever, there will doubtless be some "stony ground hearers." To be brief—in such revivals as this, and among the sects, most of us obtained our hopes, and if we have all been deceived, it is [illegible] much more universal than any recorded in the history of the church. Brethren, let us mark this fact, and give glory to God that we have lived to see a new dispensation as to his merciful dealings with sinners and his erring church. Verily it is an "accepted time and day of salvation," and let us "work while the day lasts." "What shall be the end of these things," God only knows; but I am hoping that as a change has come as to the universality of revivals, there may also be a change in their continuance. Hitherto they have lasted but a few months—may this not last a few years? If so, Amen. Let us not say we are weary of waiting for Christ's return, but joyfully toil on to gather in an additional "host" to hail him at his coming, and inherit with us "the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven." Amen.

Sinners are being converted in most of the churches in this city, but the work is not as powerful as in many other places, both east and west. A few Advent brethren hold up meetings here, and are gradually introducing new truths into the churches.

As soon as I can leave home, which I hope to do by May, it is my purpose, the Lord willing, to spend a few months in the Eastern states, in parts to which my Master may "direct my steps." While the Lord continues this "time of refreshing," I shall feel it duty to preach more directly for the conversion of sinners, and less on controverted doctrines, not forgetting, however, that "all scripture is profitable," and that there are some "weightier matters of the law," and special truths for certain times.

The Present Outpouring of the Spirit.

BRO. GRANT:—The present remarkable awakening among all the professed followers of Christ appears to me to me to be the fulfillment of the words of prophecy, "A short work will the Lord make on the earth." I believe those who are to be saved when the Lord comes will enjoy the influences of the Holy Spirit more and more until they are perfected and prepared to meet him in peace. It is the bridal garment with which the church is to be clothed at his appearing. It seems that such an outpouring of the Spirit would be necessary just previous to his coming to prepare it for that great day. I know that some of the brethren think that when he comes the world will be in a different state from the present, and they refer to the days of Noah and Lot. But I can see a perfect parallel between the two periods. In the days of Noah they were eating and drinking, and the earth was filled with violence, which has been the case for years past. And in the days of Lot they planted and builded, &c.; and there were scoffers, and we have all these at the present time. The church is compared to a garment not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing. And in order to be thus perfect it must be washed and cleansed. The Spirit is compared to water to cleanse from all unrighteousness. And it appears to me that those who neglect the present opportunity of making their peace with God, will act the part of the foolish virgins.

D. N. SMITH.

From Bro. G. A. Streeter.

BRO. GRANT:—I am still striving to do my Master's will in all things. The Lord is doing a great work in this region. Bro. T. M. Latham has been laboring here all winter, and great good has been done. Praise the good Lord. The man in the ditch has been brought to see his condition and is now praising the Lord, with many others. The saints are reviving and taking fresh courage, expecting their Lord to return soon and reward his waiting bride. The signs bespeak him near. Oh! dear children of the living God, lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. Let us be obedient to the heavenly calling, that our work may be done and well done; and when he who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory. Amen.

DEATH.

Death is a stubborn, cruel foe,
Which kills the humble saints;
It swells the tide of human woe,
The heart with anguish taints.

Death is the gate to dreamless sleep,
Its victims naught can know;
It is the door to darkness deep,
Where dying mortals go.

It drags the whole man to the grave,
The soul it doth devour;
None but our Master then can save,
Or rescue from his power.

The resurrection day will come,
Then death will be destroyed;
The saints are then all gathered home,
To be no more annoyed.

Lord, haste the resurrection day,
Call up the saints that sleep;
Oh! speed the time, make no delay,
Why should we longer weep?

Influence of the Mind on the Circulation.

If the brain is the organ or instrument of the mind, as almost every one admits, then it is easy to see how the latter can have influence on the circulation. For, as the mind cannot act without a due degree of vital energy imparted to it through the brain, it follows that this energy may be so largely applied to this particular organ as to leave an insufficient supply for the stimulation of the other organs, and the circulatory organs among the rest.

It may be asked, whether, on this principle, it would not be better to omit thinking altogether. But there are action and reaction. We are not made to be as the trees of the forest, or even as the beasts that perish. The former have no mental apparatus, and the thoughts of the latter are limited by the Creator himself.

If the tree could think, it would interfere with its growth, unless there were added to it other resources than its present ones. If the horse could be taught Greek, Latin, and Mathematics, it would probably spoil him as a horse; at least, in the progress of a few generations. He would lose his bright eye and fine proportions. His vital energies would be expended, in part, on that for which they were never designed, which would be the same thing as if so much life and spirit were stolen from his general system.

On the contrary, were man not to expend a part of his vital energy in thinking, he would come as much short of the Divine intention as the beast or tree would in being cultivated, were such a thing possible. As a consequence, his circulatory system, no less than his other organs, would lose a part of their energy. For vital energy is the result, not of the action of the brain alone, but of the united activities of all the organs and parts of this wondrous frame. Could the stomach, lungs, skin, liver, muscles, and bones cease to act, there would as certainly be a deficiency of vital energy, in some small degree, as if there were an interruption or cessation of action in the brain and nerves.

It is, however, particularly true of the brain and nerves that their action or exercise is indispensable to good and perfect and high health. Just as surely as the ox, or horse, or an apple tree, would lose in point of health and vigor by thinking and reasoning like man, just so surely would the human being be a loser by neglect in these particulars. Idiots are not by any means remarkable for their longevity.

The savage is not an exception to the truth of this remark. He does not inherit a cultivated mental apparatus like ours. He is more nearly on a par with the brutes. Still, a degree of cultivation, to which his ancestors have been accustomed, with slight additions thereto, are as indispensable to him as the larger measures of cultivation are to ourselves.

But while it is true that the sons of such men as Cuvier, Webster, Kossuth, and Franklin, need cultivation for the purpose of general health, it is to be remembered that over-cultivation, or a cultivation which is disproportionate, is equally injurious. It causes an expenditure of energy, that, while it results in a hot-house growth of the mind, at the same time robs the heart and arteries of their vigor and the blood of its juices.

This over-cultivation of the intellectual powers runs through all our education and all our systems. To push the intellect prematurely—to make little boys men, or rather monkeys—is becoming the grand aim. It is the purpose, at least, of the rich and influential; and is, of course, aspired to by the lowly and the indigent.

But, as a practical result of all this, you will find the children and young persons, whose intellects are thus urged forward in disproportion, either with a pale, shrunk skin, habitually, or with one which is habitually congested. You will find the action of the heart feeble and irregular, though rapid. You will find the blood to be less nutritive, and less vitalized or less alive. And all this, too, even though the cigar and the confectionery have been duly avoided.

The cultivation of the perceptive and reflective powers, without much aid from books, is more favorable to a free and vigorous circulation than the cultivation of mere memory; and, above all, of mere imagination. The study of the exact sciences is better for the heart, arteries, and blood, than the study of poetry and fiction. The study of natural science is better for the circulation than that of belles lettres and accomplishments.

I would not be misunderstood. It is no part of my purpose to taboo all works of imagination, or repudiate all accomplishments. It is the custom of giving a disproportionate degree of attention to these branches, of which I complain. It is the want of harmony and symmetry that produces derangement and ill health.—Laws of Health.

Domestic Summary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

[From the New York Independent.]

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—[Correspondence of the Independent.]—We are having a very deep and interesting revival in this neighborhood. Many, but how many, are converts is not yet known, but young and old, the grey-headed of over sixty, who have never before collected their families around them, and offered to heaven their A. M. and P. M. prayer, now gather their children and their children's children around their altars, and bow before God. The youth leaves his hunting and fishing for the lecture-room, and the business man his ledger and store for the church. The largest church in the place is open and filled to excess every A. M. from 9 to 10, with sincere worshippers, many with tears. F.

LANSING, MICH.—There is scarcely a village in the whole of our western country but has been visited by refreshing religious revivals. In our little town the various denominations are having a precious time. Scores are, we trust, the subjects of genuine conversion. The work is still progressing, and desertions from the enemy are daily taking place.

CONNECTICUT.—The revival is reported to be very powerful in Danbury. All the evangelical churches are sharing in the work. At Bethel, a parish in the town of Danbury, it is reported that upwards of two hundred persons have been converted during the last two months.

The Newburyport correspondent of the Traveller says that the religious interest in that city continues without apparent abatement, and the same intelligence is received from Salisbury, Hampton, West Newbury, Byfield, and all the towns in that vicinity.

A new religious society is forming at Amesbury, mostly composed of persons that live at Salisbury Point and Amesbury Ferry, and have not been connected with societies in that neighborhood. They hold meetings in the hall of an engine house, and are enjoying a season of great interest.

A gentleman from Andover reported at one of the Boston meetings, that in Frye village some six or seven infidels in that place, in attempting to discuss some points in the Bible, were led to seek the Savior and had found him. Forty-eight of the sixty belonging to the Senior Class in the Academy at Andover had been converted.

MINNESOTA.—A correspondent of The Independent writes from St. Paul, Min., Mar. 26: "There has been and still is, a revival work going on in this city among all the churches, and many have turned into the straight way."

The revival in Yale College is probably without a precedent, so far as numbers interested are concerned. In fact, it is said to include nearly all the students. Among the converts are some who have been very bitter scoffers, and who were tolerably well armed with the philosophy of the infidel.—[Tribune.

THE UNION PRAYER MEETING AT TREMONT TEMPLE, FAST DAY.

The prayer meeting usually held in the Old South Chapel in the morning was held Thursday in the Tremont Temple at 8 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Kirk and Rev. A. L. Stone conducted the services. After singing a hymn, the opening prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Jenks. The hymn, "O for a closer walk with God," was sung. The Rev. Dr. Kirk then made some very interesting remarks.

Rev. Dr. Scott, of Philadelphia, a Methodist clergyman, was then introduced, and said he had been traveling through the country, had seen many excitements, but had seen nothing that had interested him so much as the religious excitement. He said that the church had a rich legacy in the registered prayers of God's people. The answers are now coming down. He was looking for still greater blessings and for the time, as not far distant, when the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of Christ.

Father Benson, known as "Uncle Tom," was called upon by Mr. Kirk to speak. He said the great audience before him, representing as it did all denominations, reminded him of the last great day.

Rev. Mr. Cleveland made some brief remarks, and several prayers [illegible] The meeting was [illegible] hymns were struck up, such as, "There is a fountain filled with blood," "All hail the power of Jesus' name," "The morning light is breaking," &c., &c. The Doxology, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," closed the exercises. The whole congregation joined in singing, and the effect was grand.

The Temple was packed full. Even the platform was occupied, and large numbers were obliged to stand.—[Traveller.

[From the N. Y. Tribune.]

THE PRAYER MEETINGS IN NEW YORK.—The interest in, and the attendance upon the prayer meetings seems to be fully as great as ever. The meetings in different parts of the city have been very fully attended and of great interest. At the Business Men's Meeting, at No. 69 Broadway, on Tuesday last, which was conducted by E. M. Epstein, a converted Jew, a gentleman stated that in the olden times and under the old dispensation the people of God gave about one-half their time and one-third of their income to religion, and he thought that men of these times might profit by their example. He knew of a merchant, who was but a few doors below that place, who formerly went to his business at 8 o'clock in the morning, and left at 7 at night, but now he goes at 7 and leaves at 2, devoting the rest of the time to religion, and thinks that his business is more prosperous and better attended to than before he spent so much more time upon it. He also mentioned the fact that in the Sabbath School of the Thirteenth-street Presbyterian Church there had been seventy who had united with the Church, and there were some seventy-five or eighty more who were ready to unite; and the interest seemed on the increase. In one of our large public institutions there had been fifty or sixty conversions, and in another all those connected with it have become interested, and one-third of them converted. In our orphan asylums, also, God is pouring out his spirit in a wonderful manner.

Another gentleman said he had recently heard of a case where an old lady 82 years of age had been brought to Christ, without any outward or visible influence, simply by the operation of the Holy Spirit. Such cases ought to give us hope.

A gentleman from Chicago said that the interest in that city seemed on the increase, and that good tidings came to them from all the country around. For the past three weeks the largest hall in Chicago had been used for a union prayer-meeting; the room would accommodate three thousand persons, and yet many were obliged to go away, so great was the crowd. The people there look with great anxiety to New York, and he should read with sorrow the paper that first spoke of any decrease in the revival here.

A gentleman from New Haven said that the interest was increasing in that city; almost entire classes of students in the College had been converted within the last few weeks, and good news was coming in from all the country round. Those in the country would mingle their praises with those in the cities.

The Rev. Dr. Skinner said that he felt he could say, in the words of old Simeon, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for my eyes have seen the glory of the Lord." Many of us had never expected to see such a state of things as now exists in the churches. We give thanks in the Autumn when the harvest is gathered in, but what is that harvest to the harvest of souls now being gathered into the garner of God? How much more should we offer thanksgiving and praise now.

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

NEW YORK, April 13.

Steamer City of Washington, from Liverpool March 31st, arrived shortly before 2 o'clock.

European news is generally unimportant.

Parliament had adjourned over Easter holidays.

Telegraph advices from Bombay are to March 9th.

Sir Colin Campbell was before Lucknow, at the head of nearly 60,000 troops. The attack would be made about the 10th.

Several scattering encounters had occurred, in which the rebels were defeated with great slaughter.

The King of Delhi's trial was still progressing. The statement that he had been convicted and sentenced, was therefore erroneous.

The English ladies, held prisoners at Lucknow, are reported alive and well treated.

There is nothing later from China, but the details of the last telegraphic advices are interesting.

The U. S. frigate Mississippi was at Shanghae, and the Minnesota in the Canton river. Martial law had been proclaimed in Canton. Commissioner Reed was going to Manila till the time fixed for holding a conference of the four powers at Shanghae.

It has been reported, but contradicted, that Persigny would become Minister of State.

It was rumored that the Emperor would again visit Victoria at Osborne this year.

Government was giving its serious attention to the commercial depression in France.

INDIA.

Advices from Lucknow are to March 6th. Sir Colin Campbell reached to within a mile of Lucknow on the 1st of March.

Gen. Outram was attacked, Feb. 21st, at Alumbagh, by a large force of rebels, and again on the 25th, defeating them on both occasions with great slaughter. He crossed the Goomtee March 6th, with 6000 troops, and took a position within range of Lucknow, where he was again attacked, but repulsed his assailants.

Gen. Franks had joined Campbell, with 4000 troops.

The army now before Lucknow amounts to 50,000 men, with 120 guns, and also 10,000 cavalry.

The columns of Generals Rose and Whitelock were advancing on the Ghansi and Allahabad, to intercept the insurgents in those directions.

General Franks had an engagement near Shandina. He took a large rebel force, killing and wounding nearly 3000, and capturing all their guns.

CHINA.

The Hong Kong correspondent of the London Times says hopes are entertained of a speedy settlement of affairs, as papers have been found which indicate that the Emperor is not adverse to an amicable adjustment.

The American Minister had an interview with Lord Elgin, [illegible] Canton, deferred his projected journey northward, and [illegible] At about [illegible] English and French Ambassadors had been accepted, and that the four powers would thereafter act in concert.

Military preparations were being urgently pressed in all parts of France.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

SANDY HOOK, April 16, 10 A. M.

The British steamship Africa, from Liverpool 3d inst, has just arrived off this point.

The political and general news by this arrival is unimportant.

The Atlantic Cable was being taken on board the Niagara and Agamemnon rapidly, and was expected to be all shipped by the 10th of May. Some deep sea experiments are to be made before the final attempt.

New measures of public safety are being organized at Naples.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, writing on the 30th March, says:—The state of the relations between the French and Swiss Governments is beginning to be viewed with some uneasiness in Paris. The fatality that was near bringing about a rupture with England, seems to be present on this occasion.

AUSTRIA.

A Vienna letter states that the publication in the Paris Moniteur, of parts of the correspondence of Napoleon 1st, has given such great offence to the Emperor of Austria, that he has directed the Austrian Minister in Paris to ask Count Walewski for an explanation.

TURKEY.

The Porte is said to have rejected the demand made by the French ambassador for the authorization of the putting of a canal through the Isthmus of Suez.

The Paris Patrie urges that opposition must be made to the usurpation of Persia by England, unless Europe be willing to abandon the exclusive navigation of the Red Sea to England, and, unless the integrity of Parker be a mere fiction, it is indisputable, without delay, to treat this occupation of Perim as amongst the most important of existing political questions.

It was said that several of the Crimean Generals would accompany Pellissier to London, for the purpose of being presented to the Queen.

A new secret society, called the "Icarians," had been discovered at Troyes. Eight of its chiefs had been tried, and sentenced to fines and imprisonment for various terms.

SPAIN.

Two ships of the line, and a war schooner, had been ordered to proceed immediately from Terrol, to reinforce the Spanish squadron in the Gulf of Mexico.

SWITZERLAND.

M. Kern, Minister of Switzerland at Paris, had been summoned to attend the Swiss Federal Council, for consultation on the passport dispute with France.

A despatch from Berne says—According to the verbal report, made by M. Kern to the Federal Council, the French Government has declared that if Switzerland should refuse to acknowledge the new Consuls, France would reserve to herself the right of withdrawing the exequator from the Swiss Consuls at present residing in France.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Conference.

There will be a Conference holden on the 2d Saturday of each month, in Orrington, Me., at the Advent Chapel. Brethren in the ministry will please remember these meetings.

I. DAMMAN.

T. M. Preble appoints to preach at West Boscawen, (Christian Meeting House,) April 25th.

NOTICE.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church.

VISIONS.

I'm gazing o'er the future now,
And back its misty veil
Before my vision seems to roll,
[illegible]

I see a peaceful, smiling shore
Stretched out 'neath sunny skies,
That never wear a wintry gloom,
Where storm-clouds never rise.

I see the living verdure there
That clothes the radiant plains,
Where summer spreads her flowery bloom
That evermore remains.

I see the crystal streamlets flow
Along the quiet vales,
There morning flings her incense sweet
Upon the balmy gales.

I hear the gushing strains of song
That echo wild and free;
O earth, thy minstrels may not wake
Such notes of melody!

I see the blest immortal ones
In angels robes so fair,
Who sit or roam in happy bands
And know no fear or care.

A joy untold lights every brow
And beams in every eye,
And holy friendship binds all hearts,
That may not change or die.

I cannot bear to turn away
And look on earth again;
O blissful visions with me stay
Through life's long night of pain,

And cheer my wearied spirit on
Till all that faith can see,
All, all that hope would grasp, I find
A blest reality!

Goodness.

To be constantly in the presence of a good person, of one whose words and acts tend to purify and elevate, how pleasant and useful it is. We have no disposition to speak an impure word, to perform a wrong act, or even to think of evil. The presence of the good is a guardian angel to keep and preserve us from the sins and temptations by which we are surrounded. Suppose that being who moves about to bless should be the companion of our bosoms, the one to whom we can make known our joys and sorrows, what a powerful influence for good it would have over our lives. We should rejoice daily in feeling how blessed goodness is, and be so elevated in all our thoughts that it would become a difficult task for us to sin. Sister, can you not exercise such an influence over your erring husband if he loves the company of the idle and partakes of the giddy world? Can not you draw him by love and kindness away from sure destruction? Let the atmosphere around you be that of goodness and truth, and you will surely be a ministering angel to save the lost.

Situation of Europe.

The following is from Blackwood. Though some of the incidents mentioned have been superseded by others, the situation of Europe is not less threatening. The article is worthy of note.—Editor Investigator.

To any one who really sees Europe as it actually is at this hour, the spectacle is a sad one. To him who forgets that God rules all, from evil still evoking good, it is a hopeless one. Are we really at the close of war, or only at the beginning of one still greater? Take up the newspapers—these Arguses whose eyes travel to [illegible] on the face of the earth—and what do we read of?

[illegible] same voices of trouble from the East. Troubles in Arabia—50,000 rebels at Mecca swearing that the Sultan has forsworn the Prophet; troubles in Syria—[illegible] rising because there [illegible] down; troubles in [illegible] troubles in Smyrna and other places in Anatolia, where the [illegible] from the Porte is only [illegible] Turk and Christian the [illegible] anarchy in Greece—[illegible] goods safe beyond three [illegible] where French troops [illegible] the people [illegible] than ever [illegible] and more than ever [illegible] of the Czar and [illegible]

For a moment. But why those cries for help from the Caucasus, that marshaling of Chruleff's host, those plans now preparing in the bureaux of St. Petersburgh for new forts on the east side of the Black Sea, and a war navy on the Caspian?

Turkey disintegrated, and Russia adhering to her "hereditary policy"—this is but one scene of the diorama. Take another phase of the troubles. Were there ever before so many "armies of occupation" in Europe? Austria in the Principalities, British and French in Turkey and Greece, French and Austrians in Italy, all most generously keeping the peace in other peoples' territories—the wrong men in the right place!

The sight of those various white, blue, and red coated soldiers in alien countries, is a significant proof of the disjointed state of affairs. It is like the sight of dragoons in a mob, telling of troubles. Italy is especially the seat of troubles and the object of apprehensions. Geologically the most volcanic of European countries, she is now also politically. The damp dungeons of Naples teem with victims, and King Bomba overawes his people by means of brigands and lazzaroni. French bayonets around the Vatican alone ward off a now Roman Republic and a second flight of the Pope to Gaeta. * * * *

Is this peace? Cross the Alps and look northward. Poland groaning, and at times hoping, but securely manacled, and perhaps about to be offered by her master a political sop. Hungary, bleeding at the heart, but with no hope on the earth, save in the utter crumbling of the Hapsburg throne, which would only bring a Muscovite, instead of an Austrian bondage. These we count not at present. They figure largely in the speculations of superficial observers, but it is not by them that the troubled sleep of Europe will first be broken; indeed, it seems to us their day cannot come at all, until Germany and Italy have first gone through the fire, and come out greatly changed. But Germany is troubled, and will probably be into the furnace sooner than most people imagine.

Destitute of the mad impulses of the South, less demonstrative even than the French, the Germans do not give tongue much before they act—but there are symptoms that the tranquility of Central Europe is any thing but secure. The policy of the governments towards the people has become most reactionary—in many respects there is less freedom now, than there was before 1848—and even in the free republic of Hamburg, the most cruel measures of oppression are put in force against the press.

The Germans are a slow moving race, and if they had even a promise of better things coming, they would wait on, smoking their pipes, and drinking their beer, with true Teutonic phlegm, for another generation. But at present they have not even a promise of better things—the nobility, worse than the throne, seem only bent upon pushing things backward toward feudalism; and the consequence is, that were revolution to commence in serious form, either at Paris, or in Italy, Germany would speedily catch the flame.

In France itself tranquility is only secure so long as the firm hand of Napoleon III. holds the reins. While he lives France will not throw its rider. But his death would resolve all into chaos; and Bourbonists, Republicans and Socialists, would be struggling together in the dread maelstrom. For such a convulsion there can be but one issue. Order must be re-established; but around whom is the nation to rally?

Suppose Napoleon III. gone, what Saul is there overtopping all the rest by head and shoulders? What name is there but one that is known beyond the limits of Paris and a few leading towns?

Such, it appears to us, is the essential condition of the leading states of the Continent. Troubled they are all of them. Never was the political state of Europe so full of quicksands. "Distress of nations and perplexity"—such is the exact aspect of the times.—Bible Investigator.

The Illinois Conference.

BRO. Letters of this kind may be sent to my address if desired, and will be properly disposed of. Brethren coming by cars may inquire for my residence, or for Mechanic's Hall.

JESUS WILL COME.

I long to hear the trumpet's sound,
The sound that bids the sleeper rise;
That will be heard the world around—
Thy Savior comes, behold him in the skies!

I wait to hear my coming Lord,
To see the blissful, happy morn,
When [illegible] who died, at Jesus' word
Will then come forth with beauty 'dorned.

The saints will then the first appear,
Born from the dead, forever free,
And shine more brightly than the sun,
Clothed with blest immortality.

Then with the loudest shouts of praise,
They hail him Conqueror and King,
And crowned with him, upon his throne,
Reign in the New Jerusalem.

Then hail, O happy day of joy,
When from the flying clouds on high
The trumpet sounds, and from afar
Behold he comes—"redemption's nigh!"

Then fly away, ye earth and sea,
Roll back, ye heavens, like a scroll,
Jesus, our Savior, now has come,
And he is now our "All in all!"

Then haste, O Savior, haste on earth,
O come in righteousness to reign,
That we may always dwell with Thee,
Safe in the New Jerusalem!

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. R. Southwick.

BRO. GRANT:—The little messenger called the Crisis arrives in good time every week ladened with the joyful news of the coming and kingdom of Christ near at hand, also the admonition "be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh; watch therefore, lest coming suddenly he find you asleep." O ye friends of Jesus, are you indeed dead to this world? Is your life hid with Christ in God? Then when he who is your life shall appear, ye also shall appear with him in glory.

I am happy to say to my brethren scattered abroad that although central Ohio does not enjoy the blessings of a preached gospel, only in a very limited sense; yet the word of God and the power of truth is working in the hearts of the children of men, more or less, throughout the land. Last Sunday, by the favor of kind Providence, I was called to Springfield, Ohio, to administer (for the first time in my ministerial labors) the ordinance of baptism; when I planted in the likeness of Christ's death two of the daughters of Zion, who are waiting for eternal life to be given to them when He who is our life shall appear.

At Springfield I find a small but an intelligent branch of the church of God, rich in faith, giving glory to God in hope of a speedy redemption from the power of death. O how my heart and my soul, yea, my whole being, cries out, Come, Lord Jesus! let not thy chariots long delay. Sickness and sorrow are my constant companions; consequently trial and temptation sorround me. My Father, let thy Kingdom come, and thy will be done in earth as in heaven! Amen.

Your Bro. in hope of eternal life,

E. R. SOUTHWICK.

Marysville, O.

From Bro. M. M. Evans.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been impressed upon my mind for some time to write a few lines for this valuable paper. I am going to relate a little of my experience, how I was brought to see the goodness of God. Five years I followed the sea. Three months after I came in from sea I experienced religion, and from that time to this my motto has been—Onward! I have been in Europe, Asia, Africa, and almost all over America, and never found peace till I found it at the feet of Jesus. Always when we put to sea a man was placed at mast head to look out for squalls, or breakers, or any thing that should come in our way; and when we would be coming close to soundings, then to keep a good look out for the land. O how it would cheer up the ship's company, and [illegible] on the mighty promises of Jesus. I have not a single doubt on my mind that the Lord will soon make his appearance. O let us be watching, that that day should not overtake us as a thief. There are three or four of us here, with my companion, who are waiting patiently for the coming of Jesus near at hand. We have not the opportunity of hearing our dear advent brethren lecture.

Dear brethren and sisters, my companion and myself, if we never meet you in this world, we will by the grace of God meet you in the Kingdom. Let us know nothing amongst men save Jesus Christ and him crucified.

M. M. EVANS.

Mechanicksburg, Pa.

Bro. From J. W. Ireland.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis has been a welcome messenger to me for upwards of three years past. I love to peruse its soul-inspiring columns, and may God bless the Editor with wisdom and patience, while toiling to feed the flock with meat in due season. I look for this meat from week to week, to cheer my sad and lonely pathway, for my soul is often disquieted. I have but very few seasons of rejoicing, and if it was not for the hope of eternal life beyond this state of existence, I should give way is despair; but the little hope that I do cherish is like an anchor to the soul, and that I trust is cast within the vail, which holds my little bark even amid the breakers, while the waves of sorrow beat heavily upon my soul.

I never felt more like a stranger in a strange and distant land, far away from home and all its joys. Oh home, sweet home of eternal life! I love to dwell upon the word home, it inspires me with fresh courage to press my way onward to the haven of eternal love and peace, where I expect to meet all God's dear children, clothed in white robes to praise him for ever. But I must have patience and wait, and endure the scoffs and frowns of the wicked as a good soldier, for Jesus. By the grace of God I can gain the victory, while the fierce winds blow and the gathering storms are beating as I pass along through this vale of tears. May God save me from every selfish motive, that I may not complain nor murmur because of my lot, in this life, altough my brightest earthly hopes in this life have passed away like a fleeting dream.

It is now upwards of four years since death with its poisoned arrow bereft me of my dear companion who then was my only hope. I was then without hope of eternal life and without God in the world; and never while I live shall I forget that death-bed scene. In her death-struggles there was a smile of heavenly light beaming upon her countenance that told of a hope within that would be realized in the morn of the resurrection. Her last moments were calm and serene as the evening breeze. I do believe in my soul that she sleeps in Jesus, and in the morn of the resurrection she will awake to everlasting life, to praise God and the Lamb for ever.

I was left unreconciled; I felt that the hand of the Lord was heavy upon me. Ideas would arise in my mind like these: why do I live? why have I ever lived? why have I been so afflicted? And thus turned in most every direction to find something in this world to dispel the clouds of sorrow that seemed to be eating away my life like a canker. And when I looked beyond the forbidding confines of the tomb, I saw that there was something yet to live for. A preparation by repentance and obeying the commands of God would secure to me an inheritance, incorruptible, that would never fade. I sought to renew my covenant by giving all into the hands of the blessed Jesus, in whose smiles I found a balm for every wound, a peace that is like a river, and consolation that is like the waves of the sea.

How glad I am that there is a haven of rest for those that love the appearing of Jesus, to which we are fast approaching.

But how many there are whose opportunities of securing a life of eternal peace and love must soon, very soon, be closed by the night of death. And when the night cometh with these opportunities neglected, no star shall pierce its mantling gloom, no morning sun shall ever shed its rays there; there no voice of joy shall ever be heard.

Does the poor sinner ever think that he must die the second death, unless prepared for the last great day? Dear friends, would you be saved from the unending night of death? You may dream of continuance of joy by present prosperity. Mistaken beings! You will only be disappointed in the long night of death. Be entreated in the name of Jesus, if you would escape destruction, [illegible] when the dispensation of God's mercy shall end, the harvest shall be past, the summer ended, and those that are filthy will be filthy still. Let us prepare for the long night that is coming. May God save us forever!

Yours looking for redemption,

J. W. IRELAND.

How to be a Christian.

[The following is an extract from Henry Ward Beecher's "twenty minutes address" delivered in Burton's Theatre, at the noon prayer-meeting, Sat. March 27th.]

One of the most memorable things that took place last winter was the opening of a place as an eating-house, free for the hungry, in one of the streets of this city, by some person who ought to be called an eccentric man in New York, where men spend their money for so many other things than that. But he concluded that he had no better way for his money to go than to feed the hungry and the poor; so he opened a room and made this declaration: "If any were hungry, here was food for them; let them come and eat." Now, there was no trouble about it: the man who was in the ditch, and so low that he knew he was a miserable, degraded creature, he would scrabble up quickly when he heard of this place, run to it, and betake himself to the food with almost indecent haste. And the man who had been dodging around from one expedient to another till now he was nearly famished, and did not know where to go to keep from starvation; he hears that here there were great rounds of beef and glorious loaves of bread, with any quantity of provision, and away he runs, right down there, to see if it were really so; he would not talk much, or preach much, but he would practice a great deal; for, let me tell you that your hungry men care very little for the theory of such things—they must eat to live.

But here comes a man who has been more respectable; he has lived in genteel society and given dinner parties, positively; the times have been rather hard upon him just now, but he expects that the spring will set him up all right again; he has been home with every one who asked him to eat, has been to everybody's house but his own, for there was nothing to eat there; he has borrowed all the money he could, but now no one asks him to dine, and he can borrow no more. He has gone to bed hungry at night, and oh! what dreams he has had out of that gnawing stomach; he wakes up in the morning and says to himself, "I wonder where I can get any breakfast?" He thinks to be sure of that dining-saloon just opened, where there is plenty of food to be had for nothing, but he says, "I cannot go down there, I cannot humble myself to that; I, who have been able, and in the habit, of giving charity, to go down there and get my food, and become a beggar? I can't do that!" So he wanders about till noon, and, though the hunger gnaws at his stomach, and he feels faint and weary, he can't go in yet, so he wanders on till about sundown.

But at sundown he says to himself—and let me tell you that hunger is an excellent logician—"After all, am I not acting foolishly? I am so weak I can hardly stand, and it does seem to me I can't sleep any to-night for the gnawings of hunger. O, how I want this food; I think I will just go down the street." So away he goes, like a great many men who have come in here to-day, saying that they just came in to see what was going on, but they know that down deep in their own hearts there is something beside curiosity, which they cannot resist. Well, away he goes down the street and looks in to see who is there; then he looks to see if any body is looking at him or if any body knows him; then he goes away and walks up the square, but he is reminded that he had better come back again. This time he walks right by the door and looks in askance to see it any body is in there; he hears the cheerful noise of the knives and forks, smells the wholesome food, hears the laughter of joyful men, hungry men doing work meet for hunger. Now suppose, as he stands there, he should see, among those going down, the butcher and baker loaded with piles of meat and bread, and should stop them to say, "I am almost dead with hunger, I have been invited here to take something to eat, but before I go down I should like to know the precise process by which flour is made into bread;" just as I have heard many poor sinners under conviction come to me to want me to explain to them the doctrines of justification, sovereignity, atonement, and this, that, and the other, when they were dying to go to Jesus Christ and be blessed with his love. So this man stops the baker to ask him how his bread is made, but the butcher and baker step in with their loads.

He listens again to the cheerful music of the rattling dishes, and there is no such music to a hungry man's ear, and he says, "I can't go in yet; I am not satisfied as to the way these things are made." So he walks away, but hunger gives him another turn, and back he goes and looks in again, and says, "If it wasn't for —, if it wasn't for —;" then he looks up the street to see if anybody is looking at him, and says, "I will just go down the step." He steps down, and the attraction is so great that he goes in; nobody seems to know him, nobody seems surprised; he reaches out his hand takes hold of [illegible] come down at once." Are there not just such fools in this congregation? You go up and down, back and forth, before Christ's table, when there is bread that will cause your hunger to cease forever, and water drawn from the river that comes from before God's throne; and yet you have gone back, thinking what your wife would say, what your father would say, what your partner would say, what your gay companions would say. But you feel the gnawings of hunger, and, as you look at the spread table, you say, "Oh, how we want to feed, but we dare not come and take the food." Oh! it is shame, pride, and friends, that keep you thus back. Oh, if there was only hunger enough to bring you to the right point; and having once tasted, you would rise up from that feast with the blessed assurance that yet once again you would sit down at a still nobler table, at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Now, if there are any in this congregation that have seen the bounty spread out in the love of Christ, that they can have without money and without price," as promised by Jesus Christ, don't let them wait for somebody to explain it any more. Try it yourselves to-day!

Christian Fellowship.

The Christian professes to estimate character at its true value as compared with any and all other modes of valuation in social life. Yet many a christian says virtually to a brother in the church, "I am willing to commune with you at Christ's table in the church but I can not know, you elsewhere. When you open house upon one of the golden streets of New Jerusalem I will fraternise with you. When you come to your inheritance in the celestial city, I shall hope for a better acquaintance; but at present social proprieties must keep us apart."

Every Christian heart will see that there is something amiss where mere social distinctions over-ride Christian fellowship. How then shall this be remedied? Obviously we are not to have all things in common. We are not to sacrifice—we cannot overcome differences of taste, of education, of opportunity, of position; we cannot in our social life make no difference between the ignorant and abject, and the refined and the elevated; but we can carry out the law of love, the spirit of Christian fellowship into social life, so that the rich, the educated, the refined, shall exert a kindly and elevating influence upon those who are less favored, while they in turn shall profit by the homely good sense, the disciplined virtue, and the simple faith of the godly poor. Somehow, somewhere, we should meet on common ground; not for a prayer meeting merely, nor for the business of the church; but for social communion as the children of God, loving one another above all the distinctions and forms of social life—one body in Christ, and every one members one of another.

The primitive Christians did this through their love-feasts. They came together either in private houses or in the church, and partook of a common meal—a collation—and then freely commingled as brethren and sisters in the Lord, inquiring after one another's welfare, becoming acquainted with each other's state, and intermingling this conversation with prayer and other religious exercises. At the close of the feast money was collected for the benefit of widows and orphans, the poor, prisoners, and persons who had suffered shipwreck. At first these feasts were designed mainly to counteract the idolatrous festivals to which the early converts had been accustomed. Their influence was to hallow the ordinary meals, the social intercourse of the people, and to make all things tributary to the glory of God. But as Aunsen observes, they became the connecting link between the congregational life of the church and her social life." The love-feast was a social meal among Christians, eaten with thanksgiving in the name of God. At this feast all came together as members of the church, and no distinction of wealth or rank were observed. Its tendency was to make society religious, instead of stately and formal, or volatile and fashionable. We need in our time more of this common church life; more of familiarity one with the other as church members; more of true social intercourse upon the basis of the Gospel. It will be easy to secure this without sacrificing any of the proprieties of life, if there is a heart to do it; a spirit free from selfishness, envy, jealousy and pride. And when we shall live practically as members of one body in Christ, and therefore members one of another, we shall exhibit to the world that beautiful model of a society that the New Testament describes.

It is, therefore, a question of momentous interest to the members of each church. How shall we best develop through our church union a vital power that shall make itself felt in our hearts, in our families, and upon the world? In order to do this, it is obvious that every member of a church must be ready to plan, to labor, to pray, to give for its prosperity; considerate for his brethren; kindly affectionate, fraternal, assiduous in personal attentions to the needy and afflicted; regardful of the family tie that binds all true disciples to Christ and to heaven. Oh, for this living power; oh, for churches, all of whose members are living members! Churches not of professors, but of Christians; not of persons who come occasionally as listeners and critics, and who coldly bow to neighbors, but of brethren and sisters in the Lord, who love the communion of saints; who love one another [illegible]; who seek to know one another in Christ, and who thus manifest that living unity which is the life and power of his kingdom in the world.

VISIONS.

I'm gazing o'er the future now,
And back its misty vail
Before my vision seems to roll,
And distant scenes reveal.

I see a peaceful, smiling shore
Stretched out 'neath sunny skies,
That never wear a wintry gloom,
Where storm-clouds never rise.

I see the living verdure there
That clothes the radiant plains,
Where summer spreads her flowery bloom
That evermore remains.

I see the crystal streamlets flow
Along the quiet vales,
There morning flings her incense sweet
Upon the balmy gales.

I hear the gushing strains of song
That echo wild and free;
O earth, thy minstrels may not wake
Such notes of melody!

I see the blest immortal ones
In angels robes so fair,
Who sit or roam in happy bands
And know no fear or care.

A joy untold lights every brow
And beams in every eye,
And holy friendship binds all hearts,
That may not change or die.

I cannot bear to turn away
And look on earth again;
O blissful visions with me stay
Through life's long night of pain,

And cheer my wearied spirit on
Till all that faith can see,
All, all that hope would grasp, I find
A blest reality!

Goodness.

To be constantly in the presence of a good person, of one whose words and acts tend to purify and elevate, how pleasant and useful it is. We have no disposition to speak an impure word, to perform a wrong act, or even to think of evil. The presence of the good is a guardian angel to keep and preserve us from the sins and temptations by which we are surrounded. Suppose that being who moves about to bless should be the companion of our bosoms, the one to whom we can make known our joys and sorrows, what a powerful influence for good it would have over our lives. We should rejoice daily in feeling how blessed goodness is, and be so elevated in all our thoughts that it would become a difficult task for us to sin. Sister, can you not exercise such an influence over your erring husband if he loves the company of the idle and partakes of the giddy world? Can not you draw him by love and kindness away from sure destruction? Let the atmosphere around you be that of goodness and truth, and you will surely be a ministering angel to save the lost.

Situation of Europe.

The following is from Blackwood. Though some of the incidents mentioned have been superseded by others, the situation of Europe is not less threatening. The article is worthy of note.—Editor Investigator.

To any one who really sees Europe as it actually is at this hour, the spectacle is a sad one. To him who forgets that God rules all, from evil still evoking good, it is a hopeless one. Are we really at the close of war, or only at the beginning of one still greater? Take up the newspapers—those Arguses whose eyes travel to and fro on the face of the earth—and what do we read of?

[illegible], some voices of trouble from the East. Troubles in Arabia—50,000 rebels at Mecca swearing that the Sultan has forsworn the Prophet; troubles in Syria—wild men at Nablous rising because there is no one to keep them down; troubles in [illegible]; [illegible] troubles in Smyrna and other places in Antolia, where the charter we wrung from the Porte is only setting Turk and Christian the faster by the ears; perfect anarchy in Greece—neither men nor goods safe beyond three [illegible] from the coast, where French troops [illegible] the people fiercer than ever [illegible], and more than ever [illegible] the feet of the Czar and [illegible] despotism [illegible] by Provi- [illegible]

For a moment. But why those cries for help from the Caucasus, that marshaling of Chruleff's host, those plans now preparing in the bureaux of St. Petersburgh for new forts on the east side of the Black Sea, and a war navy on the Caspian?

Turkey disintegrated, and Russia adhering to her "hereditary policy"—this is but one scene of the diorama. Take another phase of the troubles. Were there ever before so many "armies of occupation" in Europe? Austria in the Principalities, British and French in Turkey and Greece, French and Austrians in Italy, all most generously keeping the peace in other peoples' territories—the wrong men in the right place!

The sight of those various white, blue, and red coated soldiers in alien countries, is a significant proof of the disjointed state of affairs. It is like the sight of dragoons in a mob, telling of troubles. Italy is especially the seat of troubles and the object of apprehensions. Geologically the most volcanic of European countries, she is now also politically. The damp dungeons of Naples teem with victims, and King Bomba overawes his people by means of brigands and lazzaroni. French bayonets around the Vatican alone ward off a now Roman Republic and a second flight of the Pope to Gaeta. * * * *

Is this peace? Cross the Alps and look northward. Poland groaning, and at times hoping, but securely manacled, and perhaps about to be offered by her master a political sop. Hungary, bleeding at the heart, but with no hope on the earth, save in the utter crumbling of the Hapsburg throne, which would only bring a Muscovite, instead of an Austrian bondage. These we count not at present. They figure largely in the speculations of superficial observers, but it is not by them that the troubled sleep of Europe will first be broken; indeed, it seems to us their day cannot come at all, until Germany and Italy have first gone through the fire, and come out greatly changed. But Germany is troubled, and will probably be into the furnace sooner than most people imagine.

Destitute of the mad impulses of the South, less demonstrative even than the French, the Germans do not give tongue much before they act—but there are symptoms that the tranquility of Central Europe is any thing but secure. The policy of the governments towards the people has become most reactionary—in many respects there is less freedom now, than there was before 1848—and even in the free republic of Hamburg, the most cruel measures of oppression are put in force against the press.

The Germans are a slow moving race, and if they had even a promise of better things coming, they would wait on, smoking their pipes, and drinking their beer, with true Teutonic phlegm, for another generation. But at present they have not even a promise of better things—the nobility, worse than the throne, seem only bent upon pushing things backward toward feudalism; and the consequence is, that were revolution to commence in serious form, either at Paris, or in Italy, Germany would speedily catch the flame.

In France itself tranquility is only secure so long as the firm hand of Napoleon III. holds the reins. While he lives France will not throw its rider. But his death would resolve all into chaos; and Bourbonists, Republicans and Socialists, would be struggling together in the dread maelstrom. For such a convulsion there can be but one issue. Order must be re-established; but around whom is the nation to rally?

Suppose Napoleon III. gone, what Saul is there overtopping all the rest by head and shoulders? What name is there but one that is known beyond the limits of Paris and a few leading towns?

Such, it appears to us, is the essential condition of the leading states of the Continent. Troubled they are all of them. Never was the political state of Europe so full of quicksands. "Distress of nations and perplexity"—such is the exact aspect of the times.—Bible Investigator.

The Illinois Conference.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say to our brethren in the West, that the contemplated Conference proposed to be held in this city the 18th proximo, promises to be a Conference of much interest and importance—if so be we are permitted to see the time. It is desired and expected that if we are permitted to hold this Conference, we shall see a very general representation of our infant cause in this region; and I hope there is no place where [illegible] that it be benefited by the Conference, but what will by some means be represented, either by personal representation, or by letter. Letters of this kind may be sent to my address if desired, and will be properly disposed of. Brethren coming by cars may inquire for my residence, or for Mechanic's Hall.

JESUS WILL COME.

I long to hear the trumpet's sound,
The sound that bids the sleeper rise;
That will be heard the world around—
Thy Savior comes, behold him in the skies!

I wait to hear my coming Lord,
To see the blissful, happy morn,
When [illegible] who died, at Jesus' word
Will then come forth with beauty 'dorned.

The saints will then the first appear,
Born from the dead, forever free,
And shine more brightly than the sun,
Clothed with blest immortality.

Then with the loudest shouts of praise,
They hail him Conqueror and King,
And crowned with him, upon his throne,
Reign in the New Jerusalem.

Then hail, O happy day of joy,
When from the flying clouds on high
The trumpet sounds, and from afar
Behold he comes—"redemption's nigh!"

Then fly away, ye earth and sea,
Roll back, ye heavens, like a scroll,
Jesus, our Savior, now has come,
And he is now our "All in all!"

Then haste, O Savior, haste on earth,
O come in righteousness to reign,
That we may always dwell with Thee,
Safe in the New Jerusalem!

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. R. Southwick.

Bro. Grant:—The little messenger called the Crisis arrives in good time every week ladened with the joyful news of the coming and kingdom of Christ near at hand, also the admonition "be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh; watch therefore, lest coming suddenly he find you asleep." O ye friends of Jesus, are you indeed dead to this world? Is your life hid with Christ in God? Then when he who is your life shall appear, ye also shall appear with him in glory.

I am happy to say to my brethren scattered abroad that although central Ohio does not enjoy the blessings of a preached gospel, only in a very limited sense; yet the word of God and the power of truth is working in the hearts of the children of men, more or less, throughout the land. Last Sunday, by the favor of kind Providence, I was called to Springfield, Ohio, to administer (for the first time in my ministerial labors) the ordinance of baptism; when I planted in the likeness of Christ's death two of the daughters of Zion, who are waiting for eternal life to be given to them when He who is our life shall appear.

At Springfield I find a small but an intelligent branch of the church of God, rich in faith, giving glory to God in hope of a speedy redemption from the power of death. O how my heart and my soul, yea, my whole being, cries out, Come, Lord Jesus! let not thy chariots long delay. Sickness and sorrow are my constant companions; consequently trial and temptation sorround me. My Father, let thy Kingdom come, and thy will be done in earth as in heaven! Amen.

Your Bro. in hope of eternal life,

E. R. Southwick.

From Bro. M. M. Evans.

Bro. Grant:—It has been impressed upon my mind for some time to write a few lines for this valuable paper. I am going to relate a little of my experience, how I was brought to see the goodness of God. Five years I followed the sea. Three months after I came in from sea I experienced religion, and from that time to this my motto has been—Onward! I have been in Europe, Asia, Africa, and almost all over America, and never found peace till I found it at the feet of Jesus. Always when we put to sea a man was placed at mast head to look out for squalls, or breakers, or any thing that should come in our way; and when we would be coming close to soundings, then to keep a good look out for the land. O how it would cheer up the ship's company, and especially if we were bound home! And how it should cheer us up that we are bound home to our long eternal rest.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us keep [illegible] on the mighty promises of Jesus. I have not a single doubt on my mind that the Lord will soon make his appearance. O let us be watching, that that day should not overtake us as a thief. There are three or four of us here, with my companion, who are waiting patiently for the coming of Jesus near at hand. We have not the opportunity of hearing our dear advent brethren lecture.

Dear brethren and sisters, my companion and myself, if we never meet you in this world, we will by the grace of God meet you in the Kingdom. Let us know nothing amongst men save Jesus Christ and him crucified.

Bro. From J. W. Ireland.

Bro. Grant:—The Crisis has been a welcome messenger to me for upwards of three years past. I love to peruse its soul-inspiring columns, and may God bless the Editor with wisdom and patience, while toiling to feed the flock with meat in due season. I look for this meat from week to week, to cheer my sad and lonely pathway, for my soul is often disquieted. I have but very few seasons of rejoicing, and if it was not for the hope of eternal life beyond this state of existence, I should give way is despair; but the little hope that I do cherish is like an anchor to the soul, and that I trust is cast within the vail, which holds my little bark even amid the breakers, while the waves of sorrow beat heavily upon my soul.

I never felt more like a stranger in a strange and distant land, far away from home and all its joys. Oh home, sweet home of eternal life! I love to dwell upon the word home, it inspires me with fresh courage to press my way onward to the haven of eternal love and peace, where I expect to meet all God's dear children, clothed in white robes to praise him for ever. But I must have patience and wait, and endure the scoffs and frowns of the wicked as a good soldier, for Jesus. By the grace of God I can gain the victory, while the fierce winds blow and the gathering storms are beating as I pass along through this vale of tears. May God save me from every selfish motive, that I may not complain nor murmur because of my lot, in this life, altough my brightest earthly hopes in this life have passed away like a fleeting dream.

It is now upwards of four years since death with its poisoned arrow bereft me of my dear companion who then was my only hope. I was then without hope of eternal life and without God in the world; and never while I live shall I forget that death-bed scene. In her death-struggles there was a smile of heavenly light beaming upon her countenance that told of a hope within that would be realized in the morn of the resurrection. Her last moments were calm and serene as the evening breeze. I do believe in my soul that she sleeps in Jesus, and in the morn of the resurrection she will awake to everlasting life, to praise God and the Lamb for ever.

I was left unreconciled; I felt that the hand of the Lord was heavy upon me. Ideas would arise in my mind like these: why do I live? why have I ever lived? why have I been so afflicted? And thus turned in most every direction to find something in this world to dispel the clouds of sorrow that seemed to be eating away my life like a canker. And when I looked beyond the forbidding confines of the tomb, I saw that there was something yet to live for. A preparation by repentance and obeying the commands of God would secure to me an inheritance, incorruptible, that would never fade. I sought to renew my covenant by giving all into the hands of the blessed Jesus, in whose smiles I found a balm for every wound, a peace that is like a river, and consolation that is like the waves of the sea.

How glad I am that there is a haven of rest for those that love the appearing of Jesus, to which we are fast approaching.

But how many there are whose opportvnities of securing a life of eternal peace and love must soon, very soon, be closed by the night of death. And when the night cometh with these opportunities neglected, no star shall pierce its mantling gloom, no morning sun shall ever shed its rays there; there no voice of joy shall ever be heard.

Does the poor sinner ever think that he must die the second death, unless prepared for the last great day? Dear friends, would you be saved from the unending night of death? You may dream of continuance of joy by present prosperity. Mistaken beings! You will only be disappointed in the long night of death. Be entreated in the name of Jesus if you would escape destruction, to flee for eternal life, for the time is soon coming, it [illegible] when the dispensation of God's mercy shall end, the harvest shall be past, the summer ended, and those that are filthy will be filthy still. Let us prepare for the long night that is coming. May God save us forever!

Yours looking for redemption,

How to be a Christian.

[The following is an extract from Henry Ward Beecher's "twenty minutes address" delivered in Burton's Theatre, at the noon prayer-meeting, Sat. March 27th.]

One of the most memorable things that took place last winter was the opening of a place as an eating-house, free for the hungry, in one of the streets of this city, by some person who ought to be called an eccentric man in New York, where men spend their money for so many other things than that. But he concluded that he had no better way for his money to go than to feed the hungry and the poor; so he opened a room and made this declaration: "If any were hungry, here was food for them; let them come and eat." Now, there was no trouble about it: the man who was in the ditch, and so low that he knew he was a miserable, degraded creature, he would scrabble up quickly when he heard of this place, run to it, and betake himself to the food with almost indecent haste. And the man who had been dodging around from one expedient to another till now he was nearly famished, and did not know where to go to keep from starvation; he hears that here there were great rounds of beef and glorious loaves of bread, with any quantity of provision, and away he runs, right down there, to see if it were really so; he would not talk much, or preach much, but he would practice a great deal; for, let me tell you that your hungry men care very little for the theory of such things—they must eat to live.

But here comes a man who has been more respectable; he has lived in genteel society and given dinner parties, positively; the times have been rather hard upon him just now, but he expects that the spring will set him up all right again; he has been home with every one who asked him to eat, has been to everybody's house but his own, for there was nothing to eat there; he has borrowed all the money he could, but now no one asks him to dine, and he can borrow no more. He has gone to bed hungry at night, and oh! what dreams he has had out of that gnawing stomach; he wakes up in the morning and says to himself, "I wonder where I can get any breakfast?" He thinks to be sure of that dining-saloon just opened, where there is plenty of food to be had for nothing, but he says, "I cannot go down there, I cannot humble myself to that; I, who have been able, and in the habit, of giving charity, to go down there and get my food, and become a beggar? I can't do that!" So he wanders about till noon, and, though the hunger gnaws at his stomach, and he feels faint and weary, he can't go in yet, so he wanders on till about sundown.

But at sundown he says to himself—and let me tell you that hunger is an excellent logician—"After all, am I not acting foolishly? I am so weak I can hardly stand, and it does seem to me I can't sleep any to-night for the gnawings of hunger. O, how I want this food; I think I will just go down the street." So away he goes, like a great many men who have come in here to-day, saying that they just came in to see what was going on, but they know that down deep in their own hearts there is something beside curiosity, which they cannot resist. Well, away he goes down the street and looks in to see who is there; then he looks to see if any body is looking at him or if any body knows him; then he goes away and walks up the square, but he is reminded that he had better come back again. This time he walks right by the door and looks in askance to see if any body is in there; he hears the cheerful noise of the knives and forks, smells the wholesome food, hears the laughter of joyful men, hungry men doing work meet for hunger. Now suppose, as he stands there, he should see, among those going down, the butcher and baker loaded with piles of meat and bread, and should stop them to say, "I am almost dead with hunger, I have been invited here to take something to eat, but before I go down I should like to know the precise process by which flour is made into bread;" just as I have heard many poor sinners under conviction come to me to want me to explain to them the doctrines of justification, sovereignity, atonement, and this, that, and the other, when they were dying to go to Jesus Christ and be blessed with his love. So this man stops the baker to ask him how his bread is made, but the butcher and baker step in with their loads.

He listens again to the cheerful music of the rattling dishes, and there is no such music to a hungry man's ear, and he says, "I can't go in yet; I am not satisfied as to the way these things are made." So he walks away, but hunger gives him another turn, and back he goes and looks in again, and says, "If it wasn't for —, if it wasn't for —;" then he looks up the street to see if anybody is looking at him, and says, "I will just go down the step." He steps down, and the attraction is so great that he goes in; nobody seems to know him, nobody seems surprised; he reaches out his hand takes hold of a dry crust, and the tears come into his eyes as he puts it into his mouth. Oh, how sweet it is! With that he sits right down and makes a feast, and, as he rises up again, he says to himself, "Oh! what a fool was I that I did not come down at once." Are there not just such fools in this congregation? You go up and down, back and forth, before Christ's table, when there is bread that will cause your hunger to cease forever, and water drawn from the river that comes from before God's throne; and yet you have gone back, thinking what your wife would say, what your father would say, what your partner would say, what your gay companions would say. But you feel the gnawings of hunger, and, as you look at the spread table, you say, "Oh, how we want to feed, but we dare not come and take the food." Oh! it is shame, pride, and friends, that keep you thus back. Oh, if there was only hunger enough to bring you to the right point; and having once tasted, you would rise up from that feast with the blessed assurance that yet once again you would sit down at a still nobler table, at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Now, if there are any in this congregation that have seen the bounty spread out in the love of Christ, that they can have without money and without price," as promised by Jesus Christ, don't let them wait for somebody to explain it any more. Try it yourselves to-day!

Yet many a christian says virtually to a brother in the church, "I am willing to commune with you at Christ's table in the church but I can not know, you elsewhere. When you open house upon one of the golden streets of New Jerusalem I will fraternise with you. When you come to your inheritance in the celestial city, I shall hope for a better acquaintance; but at present social proprieties must keep us apart."

Every Christian heart will see that there is something amiss where mere social distinctions over-ride Christian fellowship. How then shall this be remedied? Obviously we are not to have all things in common. We are not to sacrifice—we cannot overcome differences of taste, of education, of opportunity, of position; we cannot in our social life make no difference between the ignorant and abject, and the refined and the elevated; but we can carry out the law of love, the spirit of Christian fellowship into social life, so that the rich, the educated, the refined, shall exert a kindly and elevating influence upon those who are less favored, while they in turn shall profit by the homely good sense, the disciplined virtue, and the simple faith of the godly poor. Somehow, somewhere, we should meet on common ground; not for a prayer meeting merely, nor for the business of the church; but for social communion as the children of God, loving one another above all the distinctions and forms of social life—one body in Christ, and every one members one of another.

The primitive Christians did this through their love-feasts. They came together either in private houses or in the church, and partook of a common meal—a collation—and then freely commingled as brethren and sisters in the Lord, inquiring after one another's welfare, becoming acquainted with each other's state, and intermingling this conversation with prayer and other religious exercises. At the close of the feast money was collected for the benefit of widows and orphans, the poor, prisoners, and persons who had suffered shipwreck. At first these feasts were designed mainly to counteract the idolatrous festivals to which the early converts had been accustomed. Their influence was to hallow the ordinary meals, the social intercourse of the people, and to make all things tributary to the glory of God. But as Aunsen observes, they became the connecting link between the congregational life of the church and her social life." The love-feast was a social meal among Christians, eaten with thanksgiving in the name of God. At this feast all came together as members of the church, and no distinction of wealth or rank were observed. Its tendency was to make society religious, instead of stately and formal, or volatile and fashionable. We need in our time more of this common church life; more of familiarity one with the other as church members; more of true social intercourse upon the basis of the Gospel. It will be easy to secure this without sacrificing any of the proprieties of life, if there is a heart to do it; a spirit free from selfishness, envy, jealousy and pride. And when we shall live practically as members of one body in Christ, and therefore members one of another, we shall exhibit to the world that beautiful model of a society that the New Testament describes.

It is, therefore, a question of momentous interest to the members of each church. How shall we best develop through our church union a vital power that shall make itself felt in our hearts, in our families, and upon the world? In order to do this, it is obvious that every member of a church must be ready to plan, to labor, to pray, to give for its prosperity; considerate for his brethren; kindly affectionate, fraternal, assiduous in personal attentions to the needy and afflicted; regardful of the family tie that binds all true disciples to Christ and to heaven. Oh, for this living power; oh, for churches, all of whose members are living members! Churches not of professors, but of Christians; not of persons who come occasionally as listeners and critics, and who coldly bow to neighbors, but of brethren and sisters in the Lord, who love the communion of saints; who love one another as saints; who seek to know one another in Christ, and who thus manifest that living unity which is the life and power of his kingdom in the world.

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

WOULD YE CHIDE!

Would ye chide the wave-tossed mariner
  Far out on the stormy deep,
Should he turn to his sunny childhood's home
  With a yearning heart, and weep?

Would ye chide the exile lone and sad,
  Long years from his native land,
Should he pine for the smile of the loved ones there
  And the clasp of the greeting hand?

Would ye chide the warrior, wearying
  Of the battle's din and strife,
Should he eager grasp for the victor's palm
  And strive for the Conqueror's life?

Would ye chide the watcher waiting long
  With strained and aching eyes,
Should he hail the first faint eastern flush,
  And welcome the morning's rise?

Then may ye bid our hearts forget
  Our promised Eden home;
Then may ye chide the christian's prayer—
  "Jesus, Messiah, come!"

The Aspect.

A visit among the churches whose chief distinguishing features arise from convictions concerning the coming of Christ, the literal kingdom of God, and immortality only in the Son of God, shows, to an impartial observer, a phase in our existence which has not previously been apparent.

Whether this will in the end promote our strength and secure a still stronger position for the truth, as entertained by us, and from which our distinct identity as a people arises, must depend upon time; (for in the nature of the case the complete result could not follow in a moment) and, to a great extent, upon the judicious action of the brethren, preachers and others who have influence, in gathering to the cause of Christ a harvest of faithful men.

Our doctrines, to begin with, are not theological abstractions; hence, we have not been compelled to desist from a cold theological or philosophical course of theorising; a freezing logical or metaphysical speculation upon impracticable and unpractised positions, but in living, palpable truths; tangible realities, (not abstract essences,) whose genius attends them with energy to establish given results, in the ages and in the present; a living divinity, a power of God—because they are the gospel. We had no reason to revolutionise the long-sustained position. A new fort was not needed. Our redoubts were thrown up. Our battery was well arranged. We had only to bring the guns to bear upon the enemy, and with the true elevation, with what weight of metal, or what calibre, I will not say, but with the entire ammunition of truth we have worked many [illegible] with no change, save [illegible] change in the manner of application.—Many have dealt in abstract doctrines, without practical or experimental power, they may have needed a reformation—I suppose they have reformed—the case was different with others. The blessed result in the conversion of persons to God, as well as to an admission of the truths which we hold. And people have been led to make a public confession of Jesus Christ.

Now, will the revival weaken or strengthen the people who hold the doctrines which we fully cherish? Some suppose that where many are converted among us we shall become much stronger. This is not a certain result, for there is in the first place no assurance that they will stay with us. Secondly, no certain evidence that they will receive the doctrines fully which we hold (some may believe them before they are converted).

Again. Others suppose that we have the certain evidence of weakness in the smallness of our numbers, and of additions, in given instances. I do not think so. The material which is added has something to do with strength and success as well as the amount of names. And, above all, believing that we as a people, are found in the world by special recognition of Providence, and prophetic appointment. I should not advise to undue anxiety about numbers, or, improper and over-wrought efforts for the promotion of our outward and worldly interest. The whole action is intended for the good of men, everywhere. As yet, I believe our own identity is necessary to this result, and with others, subject myself to constant loss and important worldly disparagement of various kinds, that I may contribute to this position of the believers in the Advent doctrine, and its healthy condition. Judging from the action of some in this time of general revival, one would think that the time had come to disband; but still charity would dictate that they do not really mean what their efforts would seem to import. They are a little intensified,—their zeal is a little heated up. I see nothing as yet to indicate any radical error in our system of faith. I see much to rejoice in among the churches of the Lord, and among ourselves as a people; and much that is to be regretted, or of no consequence to the world's salvation.

We have not suddenly become wrong in regard to our great Bible truths and expectation; nor have the other classes of religionists suddenly become right on the same points; but all have suddenly gone to work with a direct, telling, personal effort to awaken men, and have succeeded. But some of the religious denominations would have remained in their coldness till the day of their doom, had it not been for men of the world, beginning and actually crowding them into action. Prayer-meetings, independent of the dignitaries of the church, began the move. Now had the work gone on as it began, hundreds would have been looking for the Lord, yea, thousands; and still I find all the machinery of the great nominal church in operation, sooner or later. Well, it men are really christians, I am required to be content.

The recent outpouring already has an effect to increase liberality of views and feelings. So far so good! And all good; good, so far as a work af grace has been done, in our church or any other church,—or out of any church. Have we an organization or even system of discipline which is sufficient to promise any material up-building or enlargement? We want no creed but the gospel! But do we ask converts to subscribe their name to that, with a promise to walk in Christian fellowship, receiving the watch-care of the church?

So far as my observation extends there is very considerable improvement—a real advance and solid acquirement by our people—but I am sure we shall never, with views of the plan of God, so adverse to public sentiment, ride on a wave of popular influence—not even if a revival, as the greatest in half a century, or the greatest ever experienced in America, become [illegible].

I conclude that we are still waiting for the kingdom—looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. I do not as yet see what else we are to expect. Let as many be converted as may be. Amen. Praise God! Those who do his will shall be saved.

W. S. CAMPBELL.

Roxbury, Mass., Apr. 13th.

P. S.—When I returned home from the Tour, I found the same order of things, as a general rule, at New Britain, which exists elsewhere—Union prayer meetings every day. Many converts at the Methodists. Some of our children engaged in the cause there;—and the family still enduring the privations of the gospel. Adventists holding on.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

Sunlight upon Judea's hills!
  And on the waves of Galilee—
On Jordan's stream, and on the rills
  That feed the dead and sleeping sea!
Most freshly from the green wood springs
The light breeze on its scented wings;
And gaily quiver in the sun
The cedar tops of Lebanon!

A few more hours—a change hath come!
  The sky is dark without a cloud!
The shouts of wrath and joy are dumb,
  And proud knees unto earth are bowed.
A change is on the hill of Death,
The helmed watchers pant for breath
And turn, with wild and maniac eyes,
From the dark scene of sacrifice!

That Sacrifice!—the death of Him—
  The High and ever Holy One!
Well may the conscious Heaven grow dim,
  And blacken the beholden sun!
The wonted light hath fled away,
Night settles on the middle day,
And earthquake from his caverned bed
Is waking with a thrill of dread!

The dead are waking underneath!
  Their prison door is rent away!
And, ghastly with the seal of death
  They wander in the eye of day!
The temple of the Cherubim,
The House of God is cold and dim;
A curse is on its trembling walls,
Its mighty veil asunder falls!

Well may the cavern-depths of earth
  Be shaken, and her mountains nod;
Well may the sheeted dead come forth
  To gaze upon a suffering God!
Well may the temple-shrine grow dim,
And shadows veil the Cherubim,
When He, the chosen one of Heaven,
A sacrifice for guilt is given!

And shall the sinful heart, alone,
  Behold unmoved the atoning hour
When Nature trembles on her throne
  And Death resigns his iron power?
Oh, shall the heart—whose sinfulness
Gave keenness to his sore distress,
And added to his tears of blood—
Refuse its trembling gratitude!

For the Crisis.

Is the Antichrist yet to Come?

Some among us suppose that Antichrist is yet to come. This belief is founded on 1 John 2: 18. "Young children, it is the last hour. And as ye have heard that the Antichrist cometh, so now there are many Antichrists; whence we know that it is the last hour." (Macknight.) It is supposed that the Antichrist definitely spoken of by John is yet to appear in the end of the world, and claim to be Christ, and induce many to follow him; that he will be found at Jerusalem when Christ comes, seated in the temple of God, and claiming to be God as described by Paul in 2 Thess., 2d chap.—John has told us to try the spirits; "and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus the Messiah hath come in the flesh, is not of God; but he is of the false Messiah, of whom ye have heard that he cometh, and now he is already in the world." (Syriac.) John says that the Antichrist that should come, had already made his appearance in the world, and that it was a doctrine and not a person claiming to be Christ, to which he referred. It is said that the character of the man of sin, and Antichrist is the same. There is a similarity between the two, and so there is between a thief and a murderer; and this is the relation they sustain to each other; the one robbed Christ of his glory, the other put to death his saints, so that the distinction is very clearly seen.

Again, the Antichrist was to deny the Father and the Son, which is fully explained in 1 John 2: 22, 23. "Who is false, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Messiah? And that person is a false Messiah. He that denieth the Father, denieth also the Son. And he that denieth the Son, also believeth not the Father. He that confesseth the Son, confesseth also the Father." Again, 1 John 5: 10, "[illegible] maketh him a liar, by not believing the testimony which God hath testified concerning his Son." Denying the existence of God or his Son is not the characteristic of the Antichrist; but denying the record or testimony which God hath given of his Son, as shown by the previous quotations.

I now purpose to adduce evidence from History to show that these Antichrists that existed in the apostles' day, did corrupt the church with their doctrines, and fully usurped the authority of the church.—Says Moshiem, "Of all the different systems of philosophy that were received about the time of our Savior, none were so detrimental to the Christian religion as that which was called Gnostic, or science, (falsely so-called) or the way to the true knowledge of the Deity, or the oriental doctrine which for the three first centuries perplexed and afflicted the Christian church. From several passages in Scripture, 1 John 2: 18; 1 Tim. 6: 10; Col. 2: 2, it evidently appears that the general meetings of Christians were deserted and separate assemblies formed by those who were infected with this doctrine. They interpreted or rather corrupted all the doctrines of Christ and his apostles in such a manner as to reconcile them with their own. They believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, they rejected his humanity, or that he had a real body, and they pretended to draw their opinions from secret doctrines of Christ." (Gibbon chap. 47, Sec. 2.)

Many among the Gentile proselytes refused to believe that a celestial spirit, an undivided essence had been personally united with a mass of impure and contaminated flesh; and in their zeal for the divinity they piously abjured the humanity of Christ. While his blood was still recent upon Calvary, the Docetæ, a learned sect of Asiatics, invented the fantastic system which was afterwards propogated by the Marcionites, the Manichæans, and the various names of the Gnostic heresy. They denied the truth and authenticity of the Bible so far as they relate to the conception of Mary, the birth of Christ, and the thirty years that preceded the exercise of his ministry. He first appeared on the banks of the Jordan in the form of perfect manhood; but it was a form only; and not a substance; a human figure created by the hand of Omnipotence to imitate the faculties and actions of a man, and to impose a perpetual illusion on the senses of his friends and enemies. Articulate sounds vibrated on the ears of his disciples; but the image which was impressed on their optic nerve, eluded the more stubborn of the touch; and they enjoyed the spiritual, not the corporeal presence of the Son of God. It needs no argument to convince the reader that this doctrine constituted the Antichrist to whom John referred.

These philosophers, in consequence of the numerous sects into which they became divided, (32 by A. D. 200) adopted a new name, (New Platonics,) got up by those Christians that had charge of the Alexandrian schools. These doctrines, (says Moshiem,) were embraced by Origen. From hence it was that the christian doctors began to introduce their subtle and obscure erudition into the religion of Jesus, to involve in darkness of "vain philosophy," some of the principal truths of christianity, which had been revealed with the utmost plainness." "It soon became a matter of controversy whether this philosophy was of utility in the christian church; but the cause of philosophy triumphed. This victory was attributed to Origen, who had been instructed in the Platonic schools. The fame of this philosopher daily increased [illegible], and his method of interpreting [illegible] a secure [illegible]." "It brought into [illegible] the nobility, bishops and Archbishops, until their tyranny became intollerable, and from this overbearing spirit some sought reformation. About this time Arius began to publish the Arian doctrine." "These philosophers preferred Plato to other philosophers, and looked upon his opinions of God, the human soul, and things invisible as conformable to the Christian doctrines." "They denied the salvation of the body, and at death their souls went direct to heaven, from whence they will no more return to the body." It is quite evident that the immortality of the soul and going to heaven at death, not taught by the Apostles as it was first introduced into the church by the Platonic philosophers, which was considered a heretical doctrine by all true christians.

We have arrived at a point of time (4th century) when the mystery of iniquity had so corrupted the church with its antichristian doctrines, that Christ and his doctrines were held in less esteem than the doctrines of Plato. The gods of Plato were worshiped with equal adoration with our Lord. The resurrection, the corner stone of the gospel, was rejected; death became the gate to endless joy, Jesus Christ was dissipated into thin air, and not half so tangible.—Arius was a bold reformer. His doctrines were intended to bring christianity back to the primitive standard, but at the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, his doctrines were condemned, and his followers were banished from the empire by Theodosius, A. D. 390. In the fourth century Satan's house became divided on the Incarnation, and as a house divided cannot stand, we will look for a further development of this satanic doctrine. (Gibbon chap. 47.) Says Gibbon in this chapter, "I have already observed that the disputes of the Trinity (with the Arians) were succeeded by those of the Incarnation, alike scandalous to the church, alike pernicious to the state, still more minute in their origin, still more durable in their effects." These parties were denominated by the "one nature" and "two natures." The two natures were those that adopted the creed of Athanasius, who held that Jesus Christ was born of the virgin Mary, the Mother of God, according to humanity; one and the same Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Lord, and only begotten in two natures, without confusion, conversion, divulsion, or separation." (Howell's Hist.) While the "one nature" maintained that Jesus Christ, or "the divinity" passed through Mary like a sunbeam through a plate of glass, and asserted that the seal of the virginity remained unbroken even at the moment she became the mother of Christ. Others taught that he was clothed with an impassible and incorruptible body, which emenated direct from God, and was not born of the virgin Mary. (Gibbon.) The contention between these two sects disturbed the whole Roman empire. A Council was called by Theodosius, A. D. 381, to settle these disputes; but after a tumultuous time of over three months, the emperor dissolved the Council, and exclaimed, God is my witness that I am not the author of this confusion. His Providence will discern and punish the guilty. Return to your provinces, and may your private virtues repair the mischief and scandal of your meeting. (Gibbon.) Another council was called at Chalcedon, A. D. 451. Six hundred and thirty bishops attended, over five hundred were catholics ("two natures"). At that Council, says Gibbon, "the Christ in one person but in two natures was announced to the world; an invisible line was drawn between the houses of Apollonarius and the faith of St. Cyril, and the road to paradise; a bridge, as sharp as a razor, was suspended over the abyss by the masterhand of the artist. At this Council a canon of laws (twenty-nine in number,) was published for the future government of the Catholic church, based upon the epistles of Leo, the Roman pontiff. "At this Council (says Howell) all heretics were condemned, especially [illegible] of Christ [illegible] been truly born of the virgin Mary, with Eutyches and the Monophysites, who denied the divinity and [illegible]

"A further development of the man of sin, (Popery,) or abomination that was to make desolate, was [illegible] of this council. "It was declared (says [illegible]) by the consent of [illegible] bishops, that the decrees of the [illegible] of Chalcedon might be lawfully [illegible]." "Seventy-two years after (A. D. 523) the emperor Justin (who was a rigid Catholic) put this resolution into effect, by issuing an edict to put all heretics to death without mercy or reserve, wherever they could be discovered and convicted." (Bower.) "Notwithstanding the great majority of Catholics at this council, they did not succeed to the supremacy until the death of Anastasius. That emperor was a rigid Monophysite and did all he could to annoy the Catholics. The Roman Pontiff excommunicated him, but not being disposed to acknowledge the pope's authority, compelled him to rescind his rash act. The Pope persuaded Vitalian, who had declared himself the champion of the Catholic faith, to proceed to Constantinople to chastise the heretical emperor; and he hasted, (says Howell) to Constantinople with a mixed multitude of such nations as were wont to wander about without any fixed habitation." "In this pious rebellion (says Gibbon) he depopulated Thrace, besieged Constantinople, exterminated sixty-five thousand of his fellow-christians, till he obtained the recall of the bishops, the satisfaction of the Pope, and the establishment of the council of Chalcedon, an orthodox treaty reluctantly signed by the dying Anastasius, and more faithfully performed by the uncle of Justinian."

There cannot be a doubt that the Antichrist, spoken of by John, did corrupt and finally usurp the authority of the church condemned at the Council of Chalcedon, which was finally [illegible] by the [illegible] of Vitalian and the emperor Justinian. Whatever [illegible] entertained with reference to Antichrist for the "Deity," one thing is evident, it had to be removed to give place to the man of sin, or the abomination which was to make desolate; whose character is plainly developed on the pages of history. Paul no doubt, referred to the same character that Daniel spoke of in chap. 11: 36. "And the king shall do according to his will, and he shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every God, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." Paul says, "who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." There is no power that has ever arisen in the world, or can arise, that could fulfill the prophecy more fully than the Pope.

The Pope suffers himself to be addressed "infinite," "incomprehensible," "omnipotent," and claiming himself "all power in heaven and in earth, having been constituted prince over all nations and kingdoms, with a plenitude of power to root up and to plant, to destroy and to save, to raise up and pull down, at his pleasure." (Bower's Hist. Popes.)
